Mr. President, a year ago I received a letter from a man in Massachusetts commending my course, and it was printed in the RECORD. As soon as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD could reach that place a newspaper man came to my office and wanted to see the original of that letter. My secretary told me about it, and I told him not to let him see it. I said, "The Roman Catholics are after making trouble for that man." This man was in business, and the Catholics were threatening to boycott him, and the man signed a statement to them that he had not written me a letter, but that somebody had written it and signed his name to it.

Senators, in the name of God, what are we coming to in these United States? A Protestant or Jew can not write a Senator who is seeking to have the Constitution of the United States observed and the flag upheld without having Roman Catholics pouncing on him and seeking to punish him for doing what he has a right to do as an American citizen. That man was in business, and they were going to punish him because he wrote me that letter; and when he signed a statement saying he had not written it, they sent that newspaper man back to my office to see the other letter and compare the signatures, and I would not let him see it. They wanted to punish him and make an example of him in the community and intimidate other Americans into silence.

Think of it! And, as I have said before, this is the land where Washington led his Continental Army—barefooted, half clad, and half fed—over the frozen ground at Valley Forge, fighting for American liberty. This is the land where southern men and northern men died on the battle fields in order to fix and determine for all time the status of constitutional government in the United States. And some of their sons, a pampered race of men, seem to have dwindled down until half the men in public life to-day at the Capitol act as if they have no American courage at all. Many of them stand in fear and trembling before a Roman Catholic priest, and they shudder in their shoes when threatened with the opposition of the Roman Catholic political machine.

Senators, did you get the point made in the letter just read? Why did they not crown the Pope King last fall when Alfred

Smith, the Pope's annointed, was running for President of the United States? They said, "Oh, no; if you pull that thing off now, you will help defeat Smith." God knows they did not need any help to defeat him. Six and a half million majority, with six million and a half Democrats, voting against him. He polled but 3,000,000 Democratic votes in the South and West, North and East.

Those six or seven million Catholic votes he got are not real Democrats and will not be cast for the Democratic ticket if anything is said by anybody on the ticket which the Catholic leaders do not like. That is plain talk, but you know it is the plain truth, and the time has come to talk the plain truth.

What did we say here in the debate last year, or, rather, what did I say? You did not take any part. I am going to relate to you again a startling thing in the life of our Nation, and not one of you over there commented on it. I presented a case where three hundred and odd Catholics, American citizens, in the State of Rhode Island, who had been robbed by a Catholic bishop and a Catholic priest; that is what they said had happened to them. They had collected hundreds of thousands of dollars from Roman Catholics generally up there, and 300 of them had the courage to march into open court in Rhode Island and demand that that bishop and priest be brought in for an accounting. They were brought in. The case was started, the trial commenced, and then there was a postponement, a court adjournment; and what has happened in the meantime? While that case was pending, under the Stars and Stripes, in a sovereign State of the United States of America, that Catholic bishop and that Catholic priest took those 300 names and went to Rome with them and tried those men in their absence before a college of cardinals, a Catholic Church court, condemned them, repudiated them, and excommunicated them, and, so far as they could, consigned their souls to hell.

What happened? One of them was the editor of a paper in Rhode Island, Degnault, and in that decree rendered by a foreign potentate, while the case was pending in the United States, where American citizens had a right to have the case tried and settled, they said that that American citizen's paper must not be published another day, and ordered Catholics not to support it. All this in the face of our constitutional provision which says that no citizen can be deprived of his property without due process of law. I brought that to your attention, and not one of you commented on it.

Again, I say, what are we coming to in the capital of this Republic? Here were American citizens induced by a bishop and priest of their church to bow down and give them money, and then when it was not spent for the purposes they said they wanted it for, these men wanted to go into an American court of justice, and the Catholic bishop and priest took the case out of court, as it were, and carried it over to Rome and tried it in a foreign country, condemned those citizens, insulted our flag, challenged our sovereignty, and you have not discussed it yet in this body.

What is it that causes that situation to exist here? Put none but Americans on guard! will again become a slogan in the United States. You are going to hear more of that from now on until this question is settled.

I know what they think they can do. They think they can fool many of you and continue to deceive you and deceive the folks at home until they get strong enough to do to you what Mussolini did to Italy the other day. What did that Post editorial say? It said that in Italy Protestants will not be allowed to carry on their religious propaganda. Do you know what that means?

Religious liberty in Italy lies dead at the feet of Mussolini, the cowardly dictator. The Greek Orthodox Church can not carry on as of yore. The Jewish people can not do it. And yet all of those non-Catholic religious groups are taxed to pay the salaries of the Roman Catholic priests of Italy.

The concordat itself provides that non-Catholic churches can not carry on their religious propaganda. Do Senators know what that means? It means that they can not invite a man or woman to join their church. They can not praise their church and what it stands for and the good it has done and is doing. They can creep in and crouch in their churches—that is, those who are already members—under leave or permit of the Catholic Pope, and they can whisper their petitions to God; but they can not tell anybody about it and try to get them to join their church or they will be lashed with the whip of Catholic persecution in the hands of the tyrant Mussolini.

Senators, last year I read to you from a book printed recently in the United States by Doctor Ryan. He is an appointee of the Catholic Pope and king right now. He is the Catholic king's dean of the Catholic University here in Washington. He wrote this book called "State and Church," and in it he said that when the Catholic Church is strong enough here to do it they are going to proscribe other denominations. Some of the language used is just like the language used in the Pope's recent concordat. He said, "We will proscribe other denominations. We will not permit them to carry on the general propaganda. We will set up the Catholic state." Then he asks, "What chance would they have against the Catholic state?"

Mr. President, what chance have the Protestants and the Greek Orthodox people and the Jews against the Catholic state with Mussolini standing over their prone bodies with a tyrant's dirk in his hand? We are told by an appointee of the Pope—Doctor Ryan, a Catholic priest—that that is what they will do here when they get strong enough. Now you can begin to understand why they did not pull off this tyranny last fall.

It would have hurt Mr. Alfred Smith's chances. The American people would have been brought face to face with the truth, and they would have been frightened. They would have said: "Look what happened in Italy. They are going to do that to us when they get strong enough to do it." And I feel it my duty to tell you that when they are strong enough they will do it; but they are not going to be strong enough to do such a thing in the United States. The Congress has got to legislate on certain questions, and I am in favor of a law that will expel from the Government of the United States every Fascist who is shown to have expressed his allegiance to Mussolini and his régime in Italy.

Mr. President, America has got to be kept safe for Americans. Mr. Hoover is going to have a great opportunity to serve and preserve American ideals and institutions, and he is going to meet some trying and difficult problems. If he deals frankly, wisely, and courageously with this threatening and dangerous Roman Catholic political question, he will in all probability be reelected in 1932. But if he dallies and plays with it, the issue in 1932 will not be a political question submitted by two political parties, but it will be the question of Roman Catholic control of the Government of the United States. Mr. President, I am hoping that Mr. Hoover will not be deceived, misled, or controlled by that insidious and dangerous influence in the United States.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say to-day.

Mr. BROOKHART and Mr. BINGHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for about five minutes?

Mr. BROOKHART. It will take me just about five minutes, when I myself will be through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

FEDERAL OFFICES IN GEORGIA

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I desire especially to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the investigation of post-office patronage in some of the Southern States. He was the author of the resolution under which the subcommittee of which I am chairman have been acting. We have found some things that fully warranted the investigation in several of the States. As we have proceeded with the investigation from time to time, incidentally we have touched upon Federal patronage generally. There seems to be quite as bad a condition there as with reference to post offices. This morning, from the State of Texas, a strong suggestion came to the committee to investigate Federal patronage generally. Of course the committee has no authority to do so, as the resolution was passed, but the Senator from Georgia had an original resolution that would have been broad enough before it was amended. I wanted to ask him if there would be any move made to enlarge the authority in that regard?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. BROOKHART. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The resolution to which the Senator has referred was introduced in the name of my colleague and myself jointly. At the time of the introduction of the resolution it directed inquiry into the distribution of Federal patronage generally and the use of money to influence appointment to Federal office generally. The resolution was confined to the State of Georgia; that is, it directed the inquiry to be made in that State. The suggestion was made that if the investigation were confined to an inquiry into the appointment of postmasters and carriers there would be no opposition offered. I accepted the suggestion and agreed to the resolution as reported out by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for the reason that postal appointments in the State of Georgia were the ones in which we were primarily interested, and contented myself with an investigation of postal appointments about which I had reliable information. On the floor of the Senate the resolution was amended so as to extend the inquiry into all States; that is to say, it was so amended as not to confine or limit the investigation to the State of Georgia.

I have kept as closely in touch with the committee's investigation as possible. The Senator from Iowa has now stated to the Senate that in the investigation thus far made the committee is constantly developing the use of money or at least developing evidence which would tend to show that the same practices have gone on with reference to Federal patronage generally as I originally said was the case and as my colleague and I knew to be the case in Georgia in postal appointments.

I have no information outside of the evidence the committee has developed touching other offices, but I shall be glad to amend the resolution and ask that the investigation be extended to the use of money and exactions made of appointees to Federal office generally.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reported this morning a resolution extending the time of the present committee to make the investigation to which the Senator refers.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand so, but the committee is confined under the resolution to inquiries into postal appointments.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. So I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. The chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. BROOKHART] has called the attention to the fact that in their investigation they have discovered evidence tending to show that the same practices and condition exist in other instances outside the scope of the committee's authority. I shall be pleased to reintroduce the resolution making it broad enough to cover the whole field, but I must say that the resolution as originally introduced was based upon facts or what we believed to be the facts in postal matters particularly. The splendid service of the committee thus far rendered justifies the grant of the additional power suggested.

THE AMERICAN FLAG

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART] declined to yield to me a few moments ago I felt a little annoyance that there was no opportunity to reply immediately to the long address of my very good friend, the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. But in view of the colloquy which has just ensued between the Senator from Iowa [Mr. BROOKHART], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I do not know but that it was a very fortunate thing that the Senator from Iowa did not yield to me. Now, those who read the RECORD may see that the effect of this long tirade against those who believe in a religion different from that of my friend from Alabama was not to arouse the Senate to anything more than a consideration of post-office matters and was not taken seriously.

Mr. President, the people of the United States who read the RECORD are sometimes at a loss to know why, when a long argument has been presented with great vehemence on a certain matter, there is no reply to it. Many of them are led to believe that it is because there is no reply, and they are confirmed in their belief that what has been said is unanswerable.

Mr. President, I rose to say that in the first place I have the very kindliest feeling personally for the Senator from Alabama. As a citizen and as a Member of the Senate I am very fond of him. But I regret extremely to see him led astray, as he was this morning, by a misinterpretation of a simple act that has been performed in the Navy out of respect to Almighty God for a great many years and without the slightest regard for any particular branch of the Christian religion or any denomination.

The Senator from Alabama by continually repeating it has come to believe sincerely that the church pennant used for nearly 100 years in the Navy is the Roman Catholic flag. That is not the case any more than that any other pennant in the Navy, which may resemble a foreign flag in its color or its arrangement, is a foreign flag. The church pennant is a pennant raised by the Navy to show that there is on board that ship a service of divine worship, which may be Protestant or Catholic. It is a Navy flag and not a church flag.

It is not a Roman Catholic flag. It is for that reason that so large a majority of the Senators the other day voted against the wishes of the Senator from Alabama as an indication of their belief that he was mistaken. No one in the Senate would vote to put the pennant or flag of any particular denomination above the American flag. The Senate expressed its belief at that time that there was nothing derogatory in the slightest degree to our love of our country by doing as we have done for a great many years and acknowledging, by placing the church pennant above the flag, that we were at that moment engaged in worshiping the Supreme Being.

Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama has accused some of us of cowardice because we have not hitherto spoken on this matter and I am not sure but what personally, so far as I myself am concerned, he is right. Repeatedly, when listening to his arguments, which are intended to stir up religious bigotry in this country——

Mr. HEFLIN. I deny that.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. HEFLIN. I denounce it as incorrect, inaccurate, and untrue.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well, Mr. President, I withdraw it. Instead of saying "intended to stir up religious bigotry," I will say arguments which do stir up religious bigotry. I did not intend to use the phrase which I did use in the sense in which he took it, and I apologize to the Senator for implying that he intended to do that. I ask his pardon.

The fact remains, Mr. President, however, that speeches of that kind do stir up the feeling of people who are not familiar with all the circumstances; they arouse those passions in the human breast which from time immemorial have led to bloody conflicts, produced the most disgraceful pages in human history, and led to a misunderstanding of the nature of man and of his religion.

Mr. President, I am a Protestant; I come of a long line of Protestants; so far as I know, none of my ancestors since the Reformation has been anything but a Protestant. There are no members of my family who are not Protestants. Furthermore, I am a Mason. The Senator from Alabama has frequently referred to the Masonic order. I believe in that order, and I believe that it has accomplished a great deal of good. As a Protestant, as a Mason, Mr. President, and as a Senator of the United States, I wish to protest against the use of this forum for the stirring up of religious hatred in this country; and I wish to adjure those not within the sound of my voice but who read the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and who have been influenced by the speeches of the Senator from Alabama, to believe that the great majority on the floor of this Senate, as I know from personal conversation, are not in accord with the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Alabama, and do not believe that he should use this floor for the purposes for which he has just used it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I challenge the Senator from Connecticut to meet me in joint debate in the auditorium in this city sometime during the month of March. We will then discuss the question of the propriety of the discussions of the kind that I have made here—the matter of calling to the attention of the Senate and the country the dangers that threaten American liberty, the dangers that threaten religious freedom in the United States, and the question of denying to any State through its Senators the right to bring to this forum any question that affects the welfare, the highest and best interests of the American people. I challenge the Senator from Connecticut to meet me in debate on that subject. We will control the matter of seating the audience, and at the conclusion of our speeches we well let the audience decide whether or not an American Senator is still permitted to discuss anything in the Senate of the United States that is offensive to the Roman Catholic hierarchy, the political machine of the Roman Catholic Church.

I challenge the Senator from Connecticut to answer my speech here. He has not answered my speech; he has not even started to answer it. He has proved what I said throughout my speech, that there is always somebody to get up and defend that side. When they have not got a Roman Catholic to do it, they get some Protestant to do it. There are some mighty weak-kneed Protestants around this country, and there are some mighty weak-kneed Masons.

We have another evil under the sun. I told Senators a moment ago about how they treated American citizens in Rhode Island. They took them out of an American courthouse and carried them to Rome and tried them in their absence. They did not take them, but they took their names in their absence and tried them before a foreign potentate. They punished them, they took them away from an American court, and came right back here during Al Smith's campaign when people were circulating what purported to be the oath of the Knights of Columbus, submitted in a contested election in the House of Representatives. I was a Member of that body in 1913 when it was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. People were circulating it and stating where it came from; but busy Catholic politicians prosecuted them and took them before Catholic judges in the United States who inflicted punishment on them for circulating that oath. So they are playing both ends against the middle; they are taking our citizens over to Rome to try them when the church wants it done, and when they have got a case that the church can not reach, they bring it into the American courts and make our courts carry out the edict of the political machine of the Catholic Church. What is that done for? That is done to scare anybody to death when Al Smith runs again and keep them from circulating that oath.

An American judge—think of it—convicting a man on the statement of three Masons—and I myself am a thirty-second degree Mason and a Shriner—convicting a man on a statement of three Masons—poor, pitiful fellows—who said they had examined the books of the Knights of Columbus and that oath was not their oath. Think of that! On that evidence American citizens who are Protestants are convicted and put in the penitentiary or lodged in jail because they circulated something they got out of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and which was submitted in an election contest in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, what the Senator from Connecticut has stated is a forerunner of what will happen when more men whom the Catholics can control get into this body. He has voiced the sentiments of a few who, somehow, consciously or unconsciously, are under that influence. The Senator may not know it, but his Masonry does not shine very clearly here to-day. I am not invoking it. It is a lofty order. George Washington was a Master Mason. The members of his staff were Masons. Many of those who followed him in the Continental Army were Masons. He laid the corner stone of this Capitol as a Mason. I have had the trowel in my hand which he used; I have sat in the chair that he occupied as worshipful master; I have seen his Masonic jewel, God bless it, and I have reveled in all the things they stood for who were Masons. The thing I talked about to you to-day was the killing of Masons in Italy, and the Senator from Connecticut comes to the rescue. One hundred and thirty-seven Masons were murdered in one night by Mussolini's Fascisti mob. The grand master of the Italian Masons is in prison now. Masonry is dead in Italy; that is, they will not permit them to assemble and have their meetings. Think of that, Senators of the United States!

The Senator from Connecticut suggests that he is tired of my using this forum to give our people warning of what is to come here. What has happened in Italy? What has happened in Mexico? What is now happening in Spain? They are persecuting Masons in Spain to-day; they have some of the most prominent Masons in Spain behind prison bars, and, before God, with their hands lifted up, they say they do not know why they are in prison. And the Senator from Connecticut invokes his Masonry to deliver a lecture to me. I spurn that kind of Masonry. That sort of Masonry——

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I think I have sat still about long enough listening to the Senator charging me with invoking Masonry against him and accusing me of not defending this, that, and the other. I have listened to the Senator very patiently now for a long time. I did not accuse him of doing anything except using this floor for the purpose of making a speech that would inspire religious hatreds.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator said he was getting tired of what I was doing in my right as a Senator from my State, and I resent it. I have a right to say what I want to say, if I do not transgress the rules and am responsible to my people, and I am. I thought the Senator would be sorry that he went as far as he did.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I am not sorry at all; but I regret that the Senator insists on making misstatements, let me say while the Senator is so kind as to suffer an interruption in his speech.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suffer it.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, we all have suffered this morning.

Mr. HEFLIN. We are going to suffer more—some of us.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Senator has implied, in the first place, that somebody asked me to do this. In that he is incorrect, because I have stood it as long as I could stand it and spoke of my own volition. I speak as an American whose family have lived here since the beginning of the settlement of America, since the earliest days of the arrival of the Pilgrims. My people have believed in religious liberty and in freedom to other religions and to worship God unhampered and unashamed in public. I trust the Senator will desist from his effort to stir up further bad feeling among those who do not understand this situation, but who may think because the Senator is not answered more often by other Senators that they agree with what he has to say.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator says that nobody has spoken to him, and I accept his statement; but that makes his case worse, because if nobody has spoken to him he has done this of his own accord, and I am disappointed in him.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, it does not take four or five thousand letters to induce me to make a speech. If I believe there is anything going on that is wrong, I stand it as long as I can, and then, at the risk of bringing down the wrath of my friend the Senator from Alabama on my head I say what I have to say in a few words. I say again that I feel it is wrong to use this forum to stir up religious hatred.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am not doing that; if I know my own heart such a thing is foreign to my purpose. I have no desire to do that. I am calling attention to a question that vitally affects all loyal Americans, a question which the Senator from Connecticut will have to meet in his own State, and every Senator in this body will have to meet in the future, and the best interest of the country demands that they should meet it. I am responsible for what I am saying. I am doing my duty as I see it, and I have no apology to make to anybody.

The Senator's lecture amounts to this: That hereafter when I want to make a speech I must submit it to him or to some of those who influence him, so that they may tell me whether or not it is appropriate or permissible to say it. We know that is the parliamentary system and practice in vogue in Italy. A man can not even run for office in Italy without getting Mussolini's O. K.

No member of Parliament there can rise and speak against Mussolini and his beastly and inhuman program. If he antagonizes Mussolini, he loses his head.

Now, here comes an effort to destroy free speech in the United States Senate. I challenge the Senator from Connecticut to put it to an issue in the Senate as to whether it is improper to discuss the political activities of the Roman Catholic hierarchy or church in the United States Senate when they do things detrimental to religious liberty—the liberty of the citizen and the welfare of the American Republic. I am willing for the Senator to put it to a test, and I will have a roll call and let every Senator who wants to vote to kill free speech in this body at the behest of the Roman Catholics go on record.

I challenge the Senator from Connecticut to answer that article which I had read from the New Leader of New York about Fascist activities in the United States.

I challenge him to answer that editorial from the Washington Post which says that in Italy now the Protestants can not carry on general religious propaganda, nor can the Jews and the Orthodox Greeks. I challenge him to answer my statement about what occurred in a sister State to his State, namely, Rhode Island, where 300 American citizens, Catholics, if you please, are lashed by the political power of the Roman Catholic Church, and in doing it they assaulted and repudiated the American flag. Have I got to desist and refrain from telling these truths here? You can not get a big national newspaper to publish them. Mr. President, did you not hear that letter read from that former newspaper reporter? He said, "I am no longer in the newspaper business, and I can speak frankly."

My God! What a pitiful thing is the hampering of an able and courageous newspaper man! Some of them are fearless and honest and clean and will not be controlled. Many of them are absolutely controlled. They shape their creed to their cravings and swallow their American convictions for Roman dollars. This man said, "I am now free, and I can speak my mind"; and he is appealing to me to bring this matter to the attention of patriotic Protestants in America, and I am doing it, and bringing it to the attention of patriotic Jews and Italians. And now the Senator from Connecticut rises and says he is getting weary of these discussions that involve the political activities of Roman Catholics, which activities, I think, are harmful to the United States.

Mr. President, I brought to the attention of the Senate last year a periodical mailed to every Senator here. It was written by a Catholic priest, in which he told these Senators how the Roman Catholics suppressed a free press right here in this Capital City.

When a white girl in a Catholic Good Shepherd Home was killed and a local newspaper demanded an investigation, this priest boasted in that article that they organized the Catholics of Washington to destroy the paper; that they sent a message to every news stand in the city that if they handled that paper any more they would boycott everything they sold. They boasted that they sent their Catholic agents to merchants in Washington—Protestants and Jews and everybody—and told them that if they advertised in that paper they would punish them by not trading with them. Finally they wound up by saying, "In three weeks' time we had reduced the subscribers 40 per cent, and the newspaper's representative came to us and told us if we would let up they would never publish anything else that was objectionable to the Catholics." Think of that, if you please. There is your free press killed in the capital that George Washington founded, where Thomas Jefferson lived and announced his philosophy of political and religious freedom that will live until time shall fold his weary wings and lay his scepter down—that is, if we have men who are not afraid to speak, who can be permitted to speak without being censured and lectured as the Senator from Connecticut has undertaken to do with me here to-day.

How will that read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? Why, the people back home will say, "Instead of trying to scold and lecture Senator HEFLIN you should take his speech up line by line, subject by subject, and answer him if you can"; and that is what I challenge him to do. I challenge any other Senator here who takes issue with me to do it. You accomplish nothing by trying to lecture me, and in telling me that I am stirring up religious prejudice. That does not get you anywhere.

Why, this forum is about the only place now left where we can discuss this and all other questions. You have not heard a speech made on this subject in the House. You have not seen a vigorous attack made on these efforts to destroy America in a single daily newspaper except the Fellowship Forum and the New Age, the Protestant, the Menace, the Rail-splitter, and such papers as those, that are not afraid. You do not see it.

I told you about that priest's article, where he boasted how they had practically destroyed that paper in Washington, when the manager of the paper apologized. So they frighten the papers to death; and now, if you fix it so that a Senator can not bring these things to the attention of the Senate, it will be only a little while until they can do with this Government what Mussolini did the other day with the Italian Government when he betrayed it into the hands of the political machine that has wrecked every government where it has had controlling power.

Mr. President, I invite the Senator from Connecticut to read the pages of history. Read the brief history of the Popes of all time. Read how they have intrigued to overthrow one king and put in another king, how they have become the political masters, how the people have risen up and overthrown them, how bloodshed and murder have followed, how the people's rule has been destroyed, how governments have gone down under their blighting, deadening touch; and here in this great, free western world, America—the greatest Government of all the tide of time, a Government that ought to stand for all time as a light upon the mountain, that other governments might see its good works and be constrained to follow in its footsteps—some are getting up and daring to suggest in this Chamber that free speech be suppressed; that a ban be put upon the speech of a Senator who makes a suggestion that is not approved by the Roman Catholic priests who sit in yonder gallery.

Mr. President, I welcome that challenge from this Republican Senator from New England [Mr. BINGHAM]. If he wants to put that question to the test, let him do it; and we will take it to the country next year in the election of every Republican and Democratic Senator who goes out before the people and asks to have his commission renewed. Free speech throttled in the Senate? Nobody but puny political weaklings suggest such things. They are people who can not stand up against the truth; who can not stand up in the fierce light of history. They must flee and run to cover. Some are like the lightning bug that flashes its little lantern in the night time, and, when the sun rises in the morning folds its wings and crawls into a dark place under a piece of bark on a dark and decaying log. Come out in the open and discuss this question with me! I will discuss this question with the Senator in the Auditorium here in Washington in the month of March, and we will let the people here decide whether we will suppress free speech in this body on this subject.

O, Mr. President, if the suggestion to suppress free speech here is not enough to arouse every American patriot, what would it take to do it—when they can not even answer the ponderous facts that are set out in that New York paper, the New Leader, and the statement in the Washington Post, and the facts revealed in those letters, one of them from a retired naval officer, and get up and say, "Mr. President, I am getting tired of having these matters discussed here. They are liable to stir up religious feeling." You ought to put an apron and a bonnet on such a fellow and make him queen of the festival. [Laughter.]

Why, you would not even hear such a feeble suggestion like that coming from a women's sewing circle. The women are with me in this fight. Thank God, they are doing good service. Men and women throughout the country may suffer for a time the affliction of having men here who are afraid to speak for them, but it is not long until they can change that situation.

Mr. President, the Senator suggests that this is not the Roman cross. I assert that it is. Why, even this little pudding-headed, mush-mouth Japan representative, Frederic William Willensky, known now as Frederick William Wile, admits that it is the Latin cross. I do not know who told that muttonhead about it, but he admits that it is the Latin cross; and others writing to me say that it is the cross of St. George, and he was a Catholic, of course. I said that all of our churches had never agreed on any particular pennant; but that was not the question. The question was whether you would even fly that pennant somewhere else instead of over the American flag, and you chose to fly it over the flag, instead of letting the same pennant be flown at another place when religious services were being held. You can not get away from this issue; and I challenge you to meet me in debate on it. Come out in the open, and bare your breast, and fight like a man! If I am wrong, answer me at the judgment bar of this body, and at the judgment bar of the American people. Do not stand up and whine like a child and say, "I wish he would quit and let this question alone. I have been here a long time." Yes; some of you have been here too long and much longer than you are going to be here. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I had a conversation with a retired naval officer. I said, "How did this custom start anyhow?" He said, "They used to fly a pennant alongside the flag; sometimes they flew it under the flag," and his recollection was that three Roman Catholic chaplains suggested flying it above the flag, and there it is, and there is where you voted the other day to keep it.

No wonder you are getting tired of it! You are like the negro in my State who was being tried before old Judge Carmichael. The judge was winding up the docket on Friday afternoon, so that he could go home on the late afternoon train. He thought he had sentenced all of those that had been convicted. Turning the docket leaves, he looked down there and saw a little negro humped up, and he said, "Yes, yes, yes"—the old judge talked in a rather positive but peculiar way—he said, "Yes, yes, yes; stand up there! What have you got to say why the sentence of the law should not be pronounced on you?" He said, "Nothing, jedge, except I ain't been convicted of nothing yit." "Oh, yes; that's right," the judge said; "the jury is out on your case now." He said, "Well, Sam, you and I might dispose of this thing while we are here all alone. What would you like to do?" Sam said, "Jest betwixt us, Judge, I would like to drap it right where it is." [Laughter.]

And that is what the Senator from Connecticut would like to do. Drop it where it is, when Mussolini's agents are working like bees through the United States to-day; while his Fascist leaders here are wiring him allegiance and congratulations on his betrayal of the Italian Government. But I am told we must not discuss these things in the Senate, because somebody—that means some Roman Catholic—will be offended. Away with that talk! Let us talk about anything and everything here that concerns the safety and well-being of this Republic. If anything is said here that is not true, if any argument is made here that is not sound, let somebody, for truth's sake, have the courage to stand up and try to answer it, and not dodge and evade by trying to deliver a lecture to the man who made the speech. Let the American people who read this RECORD pass judgment on the question. We are their servants, and this is their Government.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts subsequently said: Mr. President, I request, without comment but for the purpose of having the truth known on the subject, to have printed in the RECORD following the debate of this morning an interview given to Mrs. George F. Richards, one of the most reliable members of the Senate press gallery, by Chief Chaplain Dickins, of the Navy, explaining the use and custom of displaying the chaplain's flag during religious service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY WORSHIP FLAG DEFINED—CHIEF CHAPLAIN, DENYING PENNANT IS SYMBOL OF SECT, POINTS OUT PRACTICAL PURPOSE SERVED—GIVES INFORMATION TO OTHER VESSELS

(Special dispatch to the Gazette)

WASHINGTON, February 8.—The Navy Department made clear the status of the church flag used on United States ships during the holding of a religious service on board. Chief Chaplain Dickins, of the Navy, said:

"The church pennant of the Navy is not the pennant of any church or denomination. It is absolutely nonsectarian and undenominational. It flies only during divine service and indicates to near-by ships and other vessels that religious worship is being conducted on board and that all persons should conduct themselves accordingly, to the end that the service may not be interrupted.

"Thus it serves a practical purpose. It flies on a separate halyard from the American flag, which is lowered about 2 feet from the top of the staff. At the end of the service the church pennant is drawn down.

"The same church pennant of white with a blue Latin cross is flown during all religious services, whether the clergyman conducting the service is a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, a Presbyterian minister, or a rabbi. That it is entirely nonsectarian is proved by the fact that the Corps of Army Chaplains is composed of members of every one of the recognized major religious denominations. At present the corps comprises 80 members, of whom 11 are Roman Catholics, 18 Presbyterians, 15 Methodists, 10 Episcopalians, 2 Congregationalists, 2 Lutheran, 4 Disciples of Christ, 2 Christians, 1 Reform, and 3 rabbis. All conduct services under the same flag according to their own church customs.

"All first-class battleships and some cruisers carry chaplains, and they are also stationed at all foreign stations, where they use the same flag and carry out the forms of worship of their own church.

"The claim that the Navy church pennant is the symbol of any specific denomination is absolutely without foundation."

RICHARDS.

Mr. HAWES subsequently said: Mr. President, we have had some more discussion this morning of the flag. For my own information, and to secure the proper historical background of the pennant which has been used in the Navy for so many years, I communicated with the chief of chaplains of the Navy, Capt. C. H. Dickins, who has served the Navy in that capacity for over 20 years. I ask that his letter to me be inserted in the body of the RECORD,

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF NAVIGATION,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1929.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your telephone message asking for as specific information as possible relative to the church pennant used in the United States Navy, I am herein sending you all the definite information I have been able to secure after two years of research.

The United States Navy church pennant, the meaning of which, and origin, and its use, which seems to have been the subject of so much discussion for and against, is a white triangular field charged with a blue Latin cross (this is not a Roman cross). Its length is three times that of its perpendicular height. The blue cross in length is one-third the length of the pennant, and the total width of the cross one-half of this length. The ordinary pennant is 6 feet in length and 2 feet in width; therefore, the blue cross would be 2 feet in length and 1 foot in width.

According to the Navy Code and Signal Book, this pennant "is to be hoisted at the peak or flagstaff at the time of commencing, and kept hoisted during the continuance of divine service on board vessels of the Navy." This cross is not, nor has it ever been, the distinct copyrighted property of any denomination, but has been used for many centuries by the great Christian family throughout the world. The oriental or Greek cross used by the Eastern Orthodox Church differs from the Latin cross in that the arms and staff are of equal length, and is known to us in America in this form as the Red Cross, which, of course, was copied from the cross used by Switzerland.

After careful research, I am of the opinion that the church pennant used in the United States Navy was copied somewhat from the church flag in the British Navy. The British church pennant in use to-day differs from the American church pennant in the following particulars: It is triangular in shape, similar to ours. In the first third of the pennant is placed the cross of St. George, and the other two-thirds of the pennant is broken up into three horizontal bars of red, white, and blue. During divine service on board a British man-of-war this church pennant is run up alongside the Union Jack at the stern of the ship or is flown from the peak, in practice somewhat similar to our own, with the exception that the Union Jack of the British Navy is not lowered.

The tradition regarding the use of the church pennant carries us back to the organization of the Navy. I have been unable to discover any instructions, regulations, or references relative to the church pennant prior to 1836. In 1836 the church pennant is mentioned as one of the articles making up a ship's allowance list, and this is again mentioned in 1844. From that time on there is practically no reference to the church pennant up till 1868, when in the Code and Signal Manual of the Navy it definitely states what evidently had been the practice of the Navy for many years prior to that, i. e., that "the church pennant shall be flown above the national ensign during divine service."

One of the earliest definite references in regard to the display of the church pennant is that found in an order issued by Admiral Farragut, as follows:

UNITED STATES FLAGSHIP HARTFORD,
Off the City of New Orleans, April 26, 1862.

Eleven o'clock this morning is the hour appointed for all officers and crews of the fleet to return thanks to Almighty God for His great goodness and mercy in permitting us to pass through the events of the last two days with so little loss of life and blood.

At that hour the church pennant will be hoisted on every vessel of the fleet and their crews assembled will, in humiliation and prayer, make their final acknowledgment therefor to the Great Dispenser of all human events.

D. G. FARRAGUT,
Flag Officer, Western Gulf Blockading Squadron.

This certainly establishes the use of the church pennant without any question back to that date, but the fact that the pennant was a part of the ship's allowance of every vessel in the fleet and that its use was so commonly known, indicates that the custom is not a new one. In a French book of flags, published in 1850, we find among the cuts of flags of the United States the church pennant exactly as we have it to-day.

Desirable as it might be, were we to attempt to trace the origin of the many customs which color our life of to-day, that attempt would end in mystery. So general have they been—even though far-reaching in their effect—no one has thought it necessary in the past to carefully set down the reason or origin of these customs. So it is with the use of the church pennant in the Navy. In the pioneer days of our Navy, much as we probably disliked and distrusted our mother country, we did incorporate many of her naval customs in our naval service, too numerous to mention in this communication, but one of them undoubtedly was the use of the church pennant, and its use has been so much a matter of common knowledge as not to need statement of origin.

Before 1836, when we find the first mention of the church pennant, I doubt if there were many regulations of any kind in the service; consequently it should not be considered strange that explicit instructions have not been written in our naval logs relative to the church pennant and its use, for the same point might be raised regarding many other happenings or customs in the Navy. It should be considered sufficient to establish the fact that the use of the church pennant in the Navy is of very early origin in our service, due to the fact that it was well known as far back as 1836, and again was spoken of by Admiral Farragut, showing its position of importance in connection with divine service in the Navy.

When a United States naval vessel is at sea, in company with other vessels of the fleet, or at anchor in port, on Sunday morning, church call is usually sounded at 10 o'clock, and immediately the Stars and Stripes are lowered just sufficiently to permit the church pennant to be run to the peak over it, and there it remains until the completion of divine service when it is run down and the Stars and Stripes are again run to the peak of the flagstaff as before. This is the only service in connection with which the church pennant is hoisted. When a funeral occurs on board the church pennant is not used. The Stars and Stripes are half-masted and remain so during the service and until the body has left the ship or has been buried at sea, when the colors are then run to the peak. If a United States vessel is operating alone at sea and not in sight of other vessels, neither the United States colors or the church pennant are hoisted. The service is simply carried on without these outward evidences.

To quiet the misunderstandings and misconstructions being placed upon this church pennant by overzealous, though perhaps seriously minded, members of Protestant Christianity, it may be interesting to note that this pennant had long been in use in the United States Navy by Protestant chaplains prior to the appointment of the first Roman Catholic chaplain in 1888. This chaplain was the Rev. Charles H. Parks. He was the first Roman Catholic chaplain to be appointed in the United States Navy, and it is my belief that for over 80 years prior to this appointment our treasured church pennant had been in use in the Navy. It may also be interesting to note in connection with this that the first chaplain regularly commissioned in the United States Navy was the Rev. William Balch, a Congregationalist. He received his commission, No. 1 in the Chaplains' Corps, in 1799, and I have no doubt the church pennant was flung to the breeze during the time of his holding divine service.

As Chief of Chaplains attached to the Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, Washington, D. C., a clergyman of the Episcopal Church who has seen service in the Navy for over 30 years, I feel a deep sense of gratitude to the gentlemen of the Senate who, during this past week, definitely indicated their stand in regard to the perpetuity of this simple Christian acknowledgment—the display of the church pennant—of our dependence upon Almighty God, through His Son Jesus Christ. To-day its use may be somewhat governed by old naval custom, but it is my earnest hope that the day be not far distant when—if it be thought necessary to allay all feeling of misunderstanding—definite action shall be taken by the Congress to perpetually provide for the use of this simple acknowledgment of our dependence upon the great Architect of the Universe in both branches of our military service, and to assure our millions of Christian people that this cross-emblazoned flag is not the flag of any foreign potentate or any creed or race, but simply an evidence that we all are believers in and followers of the Man of Galilee.

Long may it wave and point us to the way of a better and holier living in His name!

Sincerely yours,

C. H. DICKINS,
Captain, Chaplain Corps, United States Navy.

Hon. H. B. HAWES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

WAR MINERALS RELIEF ACT (S. DOC. NO. 224)

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, at the first session of the present Congress the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] submitted a resolution, Senate Resolution 263, calling on the Department of the Interior for copies of the rules, regulations, and promulgations followed by the Department of the Interior in the administration of "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war and for other purposes," which I had the honor of introducing and which was approved as amended on March 2, 1919. I now ask that the rules, regulations, and promulgations which have been furnished by the Department of the Interior in response to said resolution be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, this looks like quite an extensive document. Has the Senator any estimate as to what the cost will be? As I understand, there is some limit as to the cost of printing.

Mr. ODDIE. It is not extensive. It is just as it came from the Department of the Interior. It will be of great benefit in the presentation of these claims to the district court.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to it, except that I know there is a limit of about $200 on the cost of these matters. If it will cost more than that, it will have to go to the Joint Committee on Printing, I understand.

Mr. ODDIE. If that is found to be the case, I will bring the matter before the committee. I hope that the order can be given now to have the matter printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GILLIAM GRISSOM

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Finance, Senate bill 2695, for the relief of Gilliam Grissom. I send the bill to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be received. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES. If it will not lead to debate I have no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. It will lead to no debate. It is just a small matter.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to allow credit in the account of Collector of Internal Revenue Gilliam Grissom, North Carolina district, in the sum of $567.63 to cover disallowance due to overpayment of subsistence to Deputy Collector A. S. Mitchell, which was incurred in the months of March, April, May, June, and July, 1926.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF OF STORM SUFFERERS

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to advert to a notice I gave a few days ago of a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to certain House amendments to Senate Joint Resolution 182, providing for certain farm relief in the Southern Atlantic States.

I have not changed my opinion with reference to those amendments, which I think were inadvertently agreed to by the Senate. I think they so emasculate the resolution as it passed the Senate as will make it practically of no benefit to the sufferers whom it is intended to relieve.

The more I have considered the matter the worse I have found it to be. For instance, one of the amendments provides for a limitation of the amount which may be loaned for fertilizer and seeds for cotton and tobacco to the meager sum of $8 per acre. That will not pay one-half or one-third of the expense of seeds and fertilizers for tobacco. It might possibly pay the expense of fertilizer for cotton in that section of the country where the land is of such character as to require but very small fertilization.

There is another limitation which is of material importance to the people concerned. It applies to all crops except tobacco and cotton, and as to all other crops of whatsoever character only $3 an acre can be loaned under the amendment of the House to the joint resolution.

Florida, probably of all the States involved, was the greatest sufferer. Florida probably suffered more from the storms of last year than did any State in the Mississippi from the terrible flood that swept over the lower reaches of that great stream. In one section of Florida not only were the crops utterly destroyed but I think in that particular section over a hundred people were drowned. I will ask the Senator from Florida if I am correct about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, over 2,000 people were drowned.

Mr. SIMMONS. In the State.

Mr. FLETCHER. In that section.

Mr. SIMMONS. Over 2,000. It was worse than I thought it was.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me, under the provisions of this measure I can not see how any possible benefit can come to the people of Florida. Certainly, when it comes to providing nursery stock for groves that were devastated, and fertilizer and seed for potatoes, and other crops $3 an acre will not be worth anything, because it does not provide anything near enough.

Mr. SIMMONS. Three dollars per acre for potatoes would hardly be more than one-tenth of the cost of the seed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. If the Senator will allow me further, I want to say that I can not see, to be perfectly frank about it, that this joint resolution is worth three cents to the people of Florida. I do not believe it is worth anything. I do not think a single loan will be made in the State under it. I think we are in the attitude of asking Federal aid and getting nothing absolutely, and we are in the attitude of having received Federal aid or some consideration from Congress, because of the great disaster that visited our section, and getting nothing absolutely. I would rather not have taken any step whatever looking to any Federal relief than to have had this sort of performance.

Mr. SIMMONS. I spoke in reference to Florida because the whole country knows that Florida was the greatest sufferer among all the States mentioned in the joint resolution, and it was the conditions existing in Florida, I think, more than anything else that led us almost unanimously in the Senate to agree to an authorization of an appropriation of $15,000,000 for the relief of Florida and two or three other States near by. The House has cut the amount down to $6,000,000.

Florida is a State in which very little tobacco and very little cotton is raised. The people there can not get the benefit of the $8 per acre. They raise vegetables and fruit, and $3 an acre, as I have said, would probably not amount to more than one-tenth of the cost of the fertilizer and seeds. So, as the Senator from Florida has said, I am quite sure that that State will get no benefit from the joint resolution.

So far as my State is concerned, it is chiefly the tobacco growers who are interested, and they can get no benefit from the joint resolution, because the cost of the fertilizer and seeds for tobacco would reach probably not less than $35 an acre. That is a crop that has to be highly fertilized. They can get only $8, just about one-fourth of the actual cost of the seed and the fertilizer.

In order to get that amount they have to give the Government a first lien upon their crops, making it difficult, certainly very much more difficult, for them to make additional advances for the other three-fourths of the cost of seeds and fertilizer, and making it difficult for them to get advances to supply their families while they are making the crop.

The people who are to be benefited by this are supposed to have lost their crops last year. They are mostly poor people and they must have help, not only in the matter of fertilizers and seeds but they must have help in order to secure the necessary means of living during the year.

In my State I am quite sure there will be but few, if any, applications for aid under the measure. But I am told that in South Carolina, and probably in Georgia and Alabama, where they plant cotton extensively, where they do not have to fertilize very heavily, the resolution may be of benefit, and that appeals to me, because I know they suffered there greatly. But more than that, I am told, Mr. President, and am convinced after pretty thorough investigation that if the joint resolution should be reconsidered and recommitted to the conference committee, the House would refuse to recede from its position, and there would be no legislation of any kind upon this subject.

Responding to the appeals of some Senators who represent cotton States, where, they say, the people may get some benefit, I am constrained to withdraw my motion for a reconsideration of the vote of the Senate agreeing to the House amendments to the joint resolution which passed through this body for the relief of the sufferers in the South Atlantic section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be withdrawn.

MIGRATORY BIRD REFUGES

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, a few days ago there appeared in the Washington Star a news item to the effect that Dr. E. Gilbert Pearson, of New York, president of the National Association of Audubon Societies, had gone to the White House with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and Representative ANDRESEN in the interest of the migratory bird bill, and the article went on to set out the great interest the Audubon Societies had in that legislation, and it would give the impression that these societies had been supporting this kind of legislation all the time.

The truth of the matter is that the bill which the Audubon societies and the affiliated organizations tried to cause Congress to pass was a bill which would have made out of the bird refuges parks to be used for the slaughter of the birds that had gathered in the refuges.

The bill which came to the Senate provided for a license on every hunter in America who wanted to shoot migratory birds, and also provided that a part of the grounds which were set aside for the birds to have as refuges could be used as places for slaughter. It was only through the efforts of some of us in the Senate who held up the bill and fought those provisions of the bill until they were finally eliminated, much to the discomfort and to the displeasure of our colleagues, that it was made possible to have a real migratory bird law enacted.

I wanted to say this because I did not wish anyone to get the impression that the real migratory-bird legislation that has passed Congress was due to the efforts of the Audubon societies or those affiliated with them, particularly the gun manufacturers and the ammunition makers of this country, who had primarily in mind the amount of guns and ammunition they would sell as a result of it.

The bill which has finally passed the Congress is a real conservation measure, a measure which I am proud to have had some part in having passed; but had the other bill passed that was supported by those societies, particularly the Audubon societies, I should have been ashamed that the Government would spend money or would use its offices in that way.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point an editorial from the Washington Post, under date of February 14, 1929, on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BIRD PROTECTION

Delay in getting legislation through Congress is generally conceded to be one of the necessary evils of representative government. But the tendency to prolong debate and to hold up measures with amendments and reconsideration is not always to the disadvantage of the public. The bill for the protection of migratory birds which has finally been approved by the Senate offers an example of delay justified by what was accomplished.

For years Congress has been considering this subject without being able to agree upon any measure. In the controversy the objectionable features of the bill have been eliminated, and it will become a law for the preservation of wild-bird life rather than a regulatory measure for shooting grounds. Manufacturers of guns and munitions have been trying to drive through Congress a bill in the interest of hunters, and not for the protection of birds. Congress has done well to substitute a plan for establishment of sanctuaries in place of a scheme to regulate slaughter of wild life.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire inviolable sanctuaries for migratory birds and to develop these areas with the cooperation of local authorities. Birds will not only be protected from hunters in these refuges but precaution will be taken against pollution of water about breeding places, and dikes will be constructed to provide suitable environment for aquatic birds. The Department of Agriculture plans to establish at least 125 sanctuaries, with at least 1 in every State. Expenses of this program will be met with appropriations amounting to $200,000 for 1931, $600,000 for 1932, and $1,000,000 for each of the seven succeeding years. Present plans call for completion of the preserves within 10 years.

Such protection is much needed in this country. Several important species of birds which once inhabited America are now extinct, and others are seriously threatened. The movement has been supported chiefly by the lovers of birds, but its economic value to the country at large should not be overlooked. As it stands the measure justifies all delay in its enactment.

NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF HEALTH

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to two extremely interesting editorials in support of Senate bill 4518, to create a national institute of health. One of them appears in the New York Herald-Tribune of yesterday, and the other appears in the Boston Transcript of yesterday. They are brief, and I wish to read the extracts from both of them. The first is as follows:

FOR FEDERAL HEALTH RESEARCH

The only obstacle to passing the Ransdell bill for the creation of a national institute of health seems to be senatorial inertia. It is possible that Senators are bored with the voluminous indorsements of the measure by distinguished men of science and by medical and other organizations. Few bills of any description have had such a wealth of expert backing. The institute proposal might have come to a vote before this if there had been anything in it to excite serious opposition.

The plan is to enlarge the present Hygienic Laboratory in Washington to a national health institute, under the control of the Surgeon General, "which shall be devoted to scientific research in the problems of the diseases of man and matters pertaining to health." Such expenditure as may be necessary for this purpose is authorized. Also the Treasury Department is authorized to accept gifts unconditionally for study, investigation, and research by the institute. Another provision is for a system of fellowships in scientific research by which the institute may encourage men and women of marked proficiency in research relating to disease.

Scarcely a dissenting voice has been raised against this program to enable the Government to promote human health as sedulously as it does that of animals and plants.

I call that sentence particularly to the attention of all Senators:

To promote human health as sedulously as it does that of animals and plants. The scheme calls for no new bureau; it is to use existing Government machinery more fruitfully than heretofore. One or two Senators have pricked up their ears with quite valid curiosity at the indefinite cost of the institute, supposing that private donors do not come forward. Secretary Mellon, however, who finds the principles of the Ransdell bill wholly meritorious, has heard from the Bureau of the Budget that "the proposed legislation is not in conflict with the financial program of the President." The Senate has a heap of business on hand, but it would take only a few minutes to pass this much-commended bill for the Federal advancement of health research.

Senators, that editorial is from the Herald-Tribune of New York City, one of the greatest newspapers in the country.

Now I wish to read briefly from an editorial which appeared in the Boston Transcript of yesterday afternoon. It is entitled "Why Should Congress Delay?" and reads as follows:

Surgeon General Hugh S. Cumming, of the United States Public Health Service, has warned the country that, although the influenza epidemic appears to have abated, its return may be expected, and it may prove more virulent than before. Deaths from cancer show no signs of diminution, pneumonia is taking its toll about as usual, and many other deadly scourges are cutting off men and women in their prime because science has not yet uncovered the secret of their source. Yet the Ransdell bill for the establishment of a national institute of health, which encounters no opposition whatever, except from one western senator, noted as an objector on general principles, hangs fire in the United States Senate, and, in fact, has not yet found a place on the calendar.

Of course that is a slight error. It is on the calendar, but we have not yet been able to get it up for consideration.

It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce, and it is indorsed by the Secretary of the Treasury, within whose jurisdiction the administration of the institution would fall.

This measure aims to prevent disease by authorizing, without creating any new bureaus or commissions, a great cooperative scientific organization, under the direction of the Surgeon General, which will bring together leading experts in every branch of science, for the study of disease and the application of preventive measures in advance of its outbreak.

Senators, think how important that is—the study of disease and the application of preventive measures in advance of the outbreak.

Its three main provisions would utilize the Public Health Service for much broader researches than are now possible and enlarge the Hygienic Laboratory, authorize acceptance by the Treasury Department of private gifts for the furtherance of the study of disease, and institute a system of fellowships in scientific research, for the purpose of securing the most efficient personnel. It contemplates a national drive against disease and for health, along the broadest possible lines and with the most efficient equipment.

It seems strange, with the country continually visited with costly epidemics, that Congress should hesitate to enact, or even to consider, this subject, when a measure so admirably framed and so unanimously favored should lie under its hand. Especially is this true when it is recalled that the Democratic party is formally committed to support of this project, through a plank in its platform adopted at Houston last June, and is in duty bound to see that the measure is brought up for action. An attempt to place the bill on the calendar will be made next Monday, we understand, and it would seem to be assured backing enough to find a place there.

And this is the concluding sentence:

Congress can hardly afford to assume the responsibility of trifling with the public health.

Mr. President and Senators, if we do not pass the bill at the present session, in my judgment we will be trifling with the public health.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Charleston Gazette, entitled "National Health Institute," and I call particular attention to the paragraph in the editorial in which a former Member of this body, Hon. William E. Chilton, expresses his appreciation of the great work the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is doing in behalf of the health of the people, reading as follows:

Senator RANSDELL'S work in building a national institution which has mastered leprosy is enough monument to achievement for any one life. It gives him the right to a place among the great who have made the world better by having lived.

He is now pleading with Congress to pass Senate bill 4518, the purpose of which is to create a national institute of health. Every citizen ought to read the bill and Senator RANSDELL'S clear, forcible speech in the RECORD of February 6. The purpose of this bill is to put the brains and money of the Government behind a national organization to preserve the health of the people. This is a work beyond the means of local governments and private hospitals.

I ask that the entire editorial may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette February 15, 1929]

NATIONAL HEALTH INSTITUTE

We have in mind a public servant whose name is not as much on the front page as others, though he has the ability to put it there when so disposed.

It is Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, of Louisiana, who has been continuously in public life for many years. Modestly he has performed his duties, caring little for the limelight. But few things of great importance get through to the President's signature to which he has not contributed something useful in the way of investigation and thought. When he speaks in the Senate his colleagues know that his words come from an honest heart and a trained mind ever seeking the truth, and that he is truly devoted to the cause of justice and to the public good.

The other day he read to the Senate a letter from Dr. C. P. Munday, of the Carville Leprosarium. Do you know what and where that is? Unfortunately few do. It is in Louisiana. It was hard to find a place to locate a sanitarium for the dreaded leper that, 1,900 years ago, all feared to touch save Jesus.

But through the work of Senator RANSDELL his State turned over the leper refuge, which the State of Louisiana, in the breadth of its Christian spirit, has provided, to the Federal Government. There the Government proceeded to study this disease which has baffled the medical profession through the centuries of civilization. By the slow, tedious processes of experiment a cure has been found in chaulmoogra oil. The results have been as astounding as they are gratifying. Forty-two victims have been discharged as cured and but one had to be returned for further treatment.

The letter of Doctor Munday is really a report on the work of this leprosarium. There is deep human interest in the following selection from that letter:

"One bright Sunday morning late last summer eight of the patients at Carville, the largest number paroled at one time in the 34 years of the colony's history, packed their simple belongings, made their religious devotion, bade their gallant colony friends farewell, and began a joyous little procession of departure. One who had come as a young girl 33 years before, who had been away but one short week in those long, near-hopeless years, turned aside to say farewell words to the medical officer in charge. She bore scars of a brave fight against relentless disease, but her face held a light of joy no actress could hope to simulate as she tried vainly to make mere words express her gratitude. In the lines of Father Ryan, poet-priest of the Southland, many times she had 'shrouded her griefs in a smile,' but now at the moment of victory she 'wept when her heart was the gladdest.' Then she rejoined the others as they went around the little chapel, over the lawn, under the drooping moss-fringed live oaks to the waiting friends of the outside world."

Senator RANSDELL'S work in building a national institution which has mastered leprosy is enough monument to achievement for any one life. It gives him the right to a place among the great who have made the world better by having lived.

He is now pleading with Congress to pass Senate bill No. 4518, the purpose of which is to create a national institute of health. Every citizen ought to read the bill and Senator RANSDELL'S clear, forcible speech in the RECORD of February 6. The purpose of this bill is to put the brains and money of the Government behind a national organization to preserve the health of the people. This is a work beyond the means of local governments and private hospitals.

It is more important than tariff, prohibition, primaries, cruisers, farm relief, flood control, Boulder Dam, or the oil scandal. When science can master smallpox, tuberculosis, and leprosy, what is not possible with brains, organization, and money? The governments of the earth 20 years ago would have gladly given billions for what the world now knows of tuberculosis, leprosy, diphtheria, and hookworm.

Rockefeller's contribution to mankind is an outstanding service which shows not only a good heart but a comprehending mind. Experiments with disease must follow causes and effects, even to the ends of the earth. Such work requires life work, consecrated devotion and purpose, and a purse that has no bottom. Rockefeller has contributed to humanity in his efforts to master disease sums beyond the ability of cities, counties, and States, and many times more than any other one person who has ever lived. Yet his greatest contribution is the lesson how to go about health work to get results. But what he has done will be at the disposal of the national institute of health. All sanitariums, hospitals, and public and private institutions to cure and prevent disease can be in touch with this institute. It will become the object of the interest and affection of the people. The United States has conquered leprosy, tuberculosis, and other dread diseases largely through the philanthropy of private citizens, chief among whom is Rockefeller. What an instrument of peace! How much more so when the smaller nations, and the larger ones in the East, who suffer so much from diseases which they can not master will point to the United States as the merciful benefactor of mankind, which has created a health institute which defies the word "incurable." To have the United States occupy such a position, to have it within the scope of its constitutional powers the benevolent friend and protector, the intelligent investigator and powerful quarantine guard against disease, is a noble ambition.

Private capital and private institutions may not be enduring. The work of preserving health and preventing disease is never ending, and a nation whose wealth is four hundred billions has even the selfish interest in doing this work in the only effective way possible.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act as amended and supplemented, the pending question being on the first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, on page 1, line 3, after the word "prescribed," to insert "in a criminal prosecution," so as to read:

That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, on yesterday I made a few remarks with reference to the bill now pending before the Senate. I did not want to encroach at that time upon the time of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM], but I wish now to repeat what I said at that time in reference to the extraordinarily severe penalties provided in the bill. I want to cite an instance that may possibly give some information to those who are pressing the prohibition proposition to the extent they are now doing.

In the State of South Carolina there was established in the nineties what was known as the State dispensary system for the handling of intoxicating liquors. In my opinion that is the best solution that has ever been offered to man upon this question. I shall not say why at this time, nor shall I discuss the reason for its destruction further than to say that at the time it was adopted it was very bitterly opposed by a certain element of people in my State.

There was a riot in one of the counties because of the manner in which the law was enforced. The governor of the State at that time, who was afterwards United States Senator Tillman, ordered out the State militia to protect the men who were sent to enforce the law. Several of the militia companies declined to go and gave up their commissions. The farmers of the State voluntarily went to Columbia, formed themselves into organizations and announced themselves ready and prepared to defend the law.

As I said, between the militia, the enforcement officers, and certain people in the State, there was a riot at Darlington, S. C., in which several people were injured and several killed. But that law became so popular in South Carolina that any man who ran for office and did not say that he was in favor of the State dispensary system was easily defeated. Men in favor of the law were elected governor, others were elected to other State offices, and others were sent to the United States Senate and to the body at the other end of the Capitol. It was the most popular law the State had.

When the prohibition-enforcement officers started to go into private homes they would search private homes; they would go into a lady's bedroom, go through her trunk, go through the wardrobes and bureaus, throw everything around. They kept up that kind of enforcement until a revulsion of feeling resulted. The penalties provided for violation of the law were similar to those provided in this bill. That fact, with one or two other things, one of which I wish frankly to admit was that some of those in charge of the office became corrupt and resulted in that law being absolutely abolished long before the advent of national prohibition. Instead of being the most popular law in the State, instead of people being ready to fight to enforce it, it actually became a stench in the nostrils of the decent people of my State.

I say this simply to throw out a warning to those who are attempting to go too far. You may drive people after a while to resentment. I firmly believe that two-thirds of the crime in the United States to-day may be charged to resentment on the part of the people because of the action of Congress and State legislatures in depriving them of their privileges and their rights. Lawlessness is bred by oppression not only by State legislatures but by the National Congress. I repeat that I believe two-thirds of the crime in this country at present is the result of resentment against the oppression which has been put on them by the passage of sumptuary laws and the punishment provided for their violation.

Another thing, Mr. President. Some Senator has stated that the judges will not take advantage of certain conditions. Well, they do take advantage of them. Judges are human; they have the same desires, the same passions, the same hates, and the same prejudices that other men have. They can not help it. I will repeat what I said yesterday afternoon as to what may happen in the case of two boys who are taken into court and convicted of the same crime.

One of them has some influential friends; possibly he comes from a good family; somebody is sorry for his good old mother. Judges will permit men of influence, they will permit the friends of prisoners to come into their private chambers, into their rooms at the hotels, and will listen to pleas of mercy. Those friends may say, "You should impose a light fine; you should let this man off with a small fine, or," they may say, "you should let him off with a short sentence of imprisonment." The judge is influenced by those statements. I know it, and I have practiced in the criminal courts. If I shall live until next June it will be 40 years since in the practice of law I first defended a man for the commission of a crime. I have practiced almost entirely in the criminal court and the damage-suit court. I have defended men for every crime known to the decalogue.

Mr. WHEELER. Were they all guilty?

Mr. BLEASE. They might have all been guilty, but most of them were acquitted.

On the other hand, as to the other boy, who has nobody to speak for him, who has not anybody to go to the judge and put up a private appeal, the judge, while he will be light on the boy who has influence behind him, will give a severe sentence to the little fellow who has no influence behind him. He will give him a terrible raking over about having violated the law and what an example he is going to make of him and how he is going to show people that the law must not be violated. That boy goes off to the penitentiary possibly, while the other boy pays a very small fine.

The same thing applies to the colored race in very many instances. Colored people are given severe sentences for committing the very same crime for the commission of which a white man is let off with a fine or a mild punishment, while, on the contrary, the white man should receive the heavier fine or imprisonment because of the fact that, with his opportunities and advantages, he should know better than to commit the offense that has been committed by the colored man.

We can drive this law through, but, mark my prediction, that when 12 men in a jury room—12 ordinary human beings that are picked up off the street and brought in from their occupations—are told, as the lawyer has a right to tell them in his argument, "If you convict this man for carrying a half pint of liquor or for buying a quart of liquor, this judge will sentence him to the penitentiary for five years or can fine him $10,000," we are going to find men sitting on juries in this country who are going to refuse to convict. So, instead of having the law regarded and upheld, as Senators think this bill will accomplish, it is going to result in turning loose men who are guilty of violating the law.

As I said yesterday, we have instances of that every day. In this city and all over the country juries go out, especially in States where the judge passes the sentence and the jury has not anything to do with it, and return with verdicts of acquittal when they know from the evidence the man is guilty.

I have actually known of cases where juries sent the foreman out to ask the judge if they should convict a certain person what would his punishment be. Of course, the judge properly sent the foreman back and said, "This is my prerogative and I decline to say"; but I have known of a jury in such a case coming back with a verdict of not guilty after they had agreed that the man was guilty, because they did not propose to put a man who had committed merely some slight offense in the hands of a judge who would give him a very severe punishment.

I believe, Mr. President, that judges should have some discretion; I am not saying anything against that; but I repeat that if we go too far and make the penalties too severe we are going to find guilty men deliberately turned loose by juries because those juries do not propose to see the infliction of such heavy punishment.

Mr. President, I am in favor of the prohibition law; it is all right with me; and, to tell the truth, I do not see why anybody makes a fuss about it, as conditions are at present. The man who does not want liquor does not have to have it, and the man who wants it does not have any trouble in getting it. So I do not see what either side keeps on raising the devil about. It seems to me that both sides ought to be satisfied. If anyone wants whisky, it is the easiest thing in the world I know of to get.

Mr. TYDINGS. Where can you get it?

Mr. BLEASE. It is all around. The newspapers advertise every day where it is. They provide advertisements for the places where liquor may be obtained, the best advertisement of which I know. I do not know of any better way to help the liquor traffic than to advertise in the newspapers that a drink can be bought in a certain place.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLEASE. With pleasure.

Mr. TYDINGS. I want to say that if the names and addresses of the particular places where liquor can be obtained should be sufficiently advertised, it would be one way to enforce prohibition, because the supply would soon be depleted.

Mr. BLEASE. I wish to say to the Senator that, so far as I am personally concerned, I would not report one of them if I saw a man selling it, delivering it, and taking the money. If I go to a man's home or his store and he should give me a drink, I would sever my right hand before I would be a low enough dog to go out and tell it.

I think the lowest dog in the world is the man who will go into another man's home and enjoy his hospitality—I do not care whether he is an officer or not—he is a low dog if he will eat a man's bread and then bite him. That is my individual opinion, and I do not propose to report anybody for selling liquor. As I have said, if I should see anyone selling it, I would not report him. That is not my job. I was sent up here to represent or try to represent the people of my State in the United States Senate. I was not sent up here to be a spy. If I were down home, and saw anybody hauling liquor or selling it, I would not tell on him, for that is none of my business, and I hope that a lot of Senators here would not take advantage of that kind of a situation, for if they should I am sure some of the blind tigers would be in bad shape. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, as I have said, I am in favor of the prohibition law, and I am in favor of the strictest enforcement of it. I think if it were really strictly enforced as affecting white people, black people, rich, and poor alike it would be only a few years until we would see it repealed. That is the truth about it. If the proper officials will enforce it against the foreign embassies, we will stop some people drinking who are afraid to drink any liquor unless they get it from such places. They are afraid to drink it unless it comes from there because they are afraid that the kind made in bathtubs is not very good. There is another element who should not be permitted to have it, and that is the class who drink it and then get up and preach and holler prohibition, all the time drinking in secret. It would stop some other people who sit up in the amen corner of the churches and take a drink before they go to church and one or two after they get back from church, so that they may be able to stand the sermon. [Laughter.] Take theirs away from them, and by the time all these classes become hitched together they would repeal the law. But, of course, Mr. President, you know and I know that the law is not fairly enforced. You know and I know that the big man has liquor whenever he wants it; the rich man has his whenever he wants it, and it is only the poor little fellow, the working man and the poor man, against whom the law is enforced. If they get a rich man in court charged with violating the law, they just let him pay a sufficient fine as a license and permit him to go on selling it. That is going on all over this country. The judge will fine him just about what the license would be.

In some of our towns and cities, where the "blind tigers" are running, the police go and raid them perhaps once or twice in a month and take those charged with the offense before the city court or some other court, where they are allowed to pay just about a sufficient fine to amount to a license and then are turned loose to go on with their business. What is the use of deceiving ourselves about it?

I say if we do not watch this bill, instead of providing what we think we are providing we will be simply making matters worse. I do not believe that because a man commits a little crime he should be put in jail for the remainder of his life. I do not believe in the doctrine that because a man commits any crime, with the exception of two or three, he ought to be put in the penitentiary and kept there all his life.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLEASE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to observe that sometimes we get a little out of balance in connection with the penalties which the law provides. There have been some frauds committed against the Government where millions of dollars have been stolen. In some cases the culprit has been convicted, and in a certain case was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary, although he had been a highly respected official of the United States Government. It seems to me that in formulating penalties for breach of the prohibition law we should take into consideration the fact that the man who violates the prohibition law does not deprive someone else of his property, but usually it is a question between two individuals. Yet it seems to be the tendency in this hour of turmoil to hang the man who violates the prohibition law, while one who robs the United States Government, who violates the obligations of high office in the country, may only get a couple of years, and public opinion does not seem to care. It will be a big mistake if we are going to be influenced by the propaganda of a small group of people who really want to hang and shoot down and kill off those who violate the prohibition law.

For my part, while I shall vote for adequate law enforcement, I shall not vote for any law that is so uncivilized and so barbaric as to make a mere breach of a moral law, and not a legal wrong, punishable by an extreme penalty. It is a serious reflection on the civilization of our country to have such laws as that on the statute books. I do not think we ought to listen to different groups who are blinded in their fanaticism for the enforcement of a single law, but should take into consideration the enforcement of all the laws and not provide this penalty outside of the general penalties we provide.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I do not expect to be tried for either murder or selling whisky, but if I had to be tried for either I should prefer to be tried for murder. If you go into court and are tried for murder, you have some chance of being acquitted. If, however, you go into court and are indicted on a liquor charge, it does not make any difference whether you are guilty or not, the very fact that that charge is brought against you makes you guilty in the eyes of some people, and there is an influence and a prejudice around the courthouse trying to convict you whether you are guilty or not, driving you to the wall every minute, trying to intimidate your attorney by telling him, "Oh, yes; you are defending blind tigers"; trying to influence the judge to charge the jury in the most extreme language he could use for the purpose of convicting the defendant. On the other hand, if you go into court charged with murder, nine-tenths of the world sympathizes with you, and the longer the dead man is dead the fewer friends he has and the easier it is for you to get out. That is why lawyers plead for delay.

Everybody in this country knows that that is true, Mr. President. As I said and repeat, I do not believe in putting men in jail and treating them cruelly and being mean to them, even if they are guilty of a crime. If they are guilty, I do not believe in giving them any extreme, harsh punishment. Every man in this country is made in the image of his God, and as long as there is any part of that image of his God left there is something good in him. Instead of taking a man by the hand and trying to help him to be a better man, possibly putting him in prison for a while to teach him a lesson and then giving him another chance in life, some so-called Christians and some so-called ministers of the gospel—God save the mark!—are just as deeply in the mire of these cruel practices as anybody else.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BLEASE. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. Is not the Senator concerned about the present situation among the young of our country? I am very much disturbed about this bill, because it leaves wholly in the hands of the Federal judge the question of what he will do with the prisoner. If we may depend upon the testimony of reliable persons, there are many school children in this city who are now indulging in the evils of strong drink.

Mr. BLEASE. That is true.

Mr. COPELAND. If one of these little girls or little boys should be arrested for unlawful possession of whisky under this law which is proposed, if the Federal judge were so inclined he could send that child to prison for five years, or impose a fine of $10,000, which, of course, could not be paid. I can not believe that the ardent friends of prohibition can quite see the possible cruelties and inequalities and outrages that might be perpetrated by this law.

I join with the Senator; I would impose the greatest penalty that could be written into law upon the vile bootleggers who distribute poison to the people of the United States; but when I think about boys and girls in high school and boys and girls in colleges and doctors who might have possession of whisky for the lawful practice of medicine, but yet not acquired under the technicalities of the law, it is distressing to me to realize that one of these children, one of these college students, or a physician could be sent to jail for five years if the judge were so inclined. I think we have lost our sense of perspective, if I may say so to the Senator, in that we are imposing penalties which reach persons who ought not to be brought under the operations of criminal law, and are failing in our legislation to reach those evil persons who are bootlegging, and making fortunes out of the business, and killing persons by the hundred in our country.

That is the view I take of the matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. BLEASE. In just a minute.

I thank the Senator from New York very much for his suggestions. I had thought along the lines on which he has spoken; but I think probably I am a little bit old-timy, and I do not care to discuss some of the things I see boys and girls doing in this day and time.

When I was a boy, if I had seen a young lady take a drink of whisky, I would have been astonished. If I had seen a young lady light a cigarette and smoke it, I certainly never would have associated with her any more. But times have changed. I see a good many young ladies drinking whisky now. I was very much astonished recently in a certain hotel. A gentleman invited me to go up to his room with him. I did not know exactly what he wanted, but I had a pretty good idea, and I went up to his room with him. His wife was in there, one of his daughters was in there, and there were two other young ladies attending college with his daughter who were in there. To my utter astonishment and surprise, knowing the man as I did, he set out a bottle of fine whisky, and his wife, his daughter, those two young ladies, and he all took a drink. I was surprised, but it only proved to me what the Senator from New York has just said.

I know another case recently where there was a dance in a hotel. Four girls from as good families as there are in America before 1 o'clock in the morning were removed from that ballroom because they were too drunk to dance. I can call names, but, of course, as I say, I am not going to do it; but I see that going on. Those girls, for instance, under this bill could have been dragged into court, and if some judge did not like their father, or possibly if he was prejudiced against young ladies taking a drink, he could have sent them to the penitentiary for five years, which would have been an outrage not only upon the law but upon decency and humanity.

Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the merits or demerits of the prohibition law. If I wanted to see guilty men acquitted, I would vote for this bill, because I believe, I repeat, that it is going to do more harm to the prohibition law than good, and that the result is going to be as I have stated, that men are going to be turned loose who otherwise would be convicted.

Mr. President, I have talked longer than I had intended to. It has been with great pleasure, however, that I have been able to yield to other Senators to have business in which they were interested transacted.

I was known in my State as a friend of the prisoner, and I am proud that I was. I issued pardons and paroles to about 1,755 prisoners in the four years I was Governor of South Carolina, and if I could go back I would not change one act along that line. I repeat, they deserve fair treatment, they deserve proper consideration; they should be reasonably punished, not only to reform them, but as a lesson to others.

I ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks three letters of transmittal of paroles and pardons to the Legislature of South Carolina during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the Honorable the Members of the State Senate of South Carolina.

GENTLEMEN: It being, by some constructions of the constitution, my duty to make a report to you of the number of pardons, paroles, and commutations given by me during the year, I take pleasure in accepting the construction of the constitution, which is, that I should make such report, and I take the greatest delight in saying that I have pardoned, paroled, and commuted 317 people during the time that I have been Governor of South Carolina. Nothing has given me more genuine pleasure than the privilege of exercising the power of forgiveness and of saying to down-trodden humanity, "Arise, cast off your shackles, look up, remember that there is a God, and that there is a future; remember that you are made in the image of that God; remember that you have a soul to save which was given to you by that God; I propose to give you another chance in life; I propose to give you another opportunity to make a man of yourself, to make a good citizen for your State, and, above all, the opportunity to save the soul which your God has given you." I did this because I have been taught from my childhood, and I have learned more thoroughly among mankind, to be merciful, and I believe from the depth of my soul that some time I, myself, must ask for pardon, and I want it said to me, "For, inasmuch as you did it unto the least of these, you did it also even unto me." Had the doctrine of forgiveness not been followed, how would many of the vilest of sinners in Bible character have been forgiven and given the opportunity to rise and become such grand and glorious characters? Shall I for one act in a young man's life condemn him to an everlasting prison cell—the fittest type of an earthly hell? No, gentlemen, I believe firmly and strongly in the plan of salvation, and I believe that that plan is based upon the forgiveness of God; and, some who are condemning to-day the use of the parole and pardon, if it were not for the pardoning power of God would themselves be in hell. Some men go to their churches and are invited by their ministers in the words, "Ye, who do truly repent of your sins and are in love and charity with your neighbor, come forward." They go, and accept the communion of the Lord Jesus Christ and pray at that altar, "Forgive us as we forgive those who trespass against us," and, right then, if they had the power, would place their enemies in prison cells, or possibly would drive a dagger into the breast of the man who is next to him, if they knew that they would never be discovered.

I love all men (but the ways of some I despise); although one may have fallen low, yet I love him, because he is one of God's children, and we all should gladly stoop to raise him and endeavor to make him better, show him the error of his way, and give him the opportunity to go forth and do honor to God, for however low he may have fallen he is made in the image of his God and there is something good in him. We go into our churches to-day and we hear the command—it is continually drummed into our ears—"Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." We hear it thundered from the pulpits, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and thy neighbor as thyself." We are taught these doctrines and others of the Christian churches, and yet some are so low after confessing these doctrines as to stand upon the street corners and other places and abuse that man who shows mercy and who looks his God in the face and says, "Not that mercy I would to others show, that mercy show to me; but that mercy I have to others shown, that mercy show to me."

In my opinion there will be more souls in hell for hypocrisy than all the other crimes in the Decalogue, and I firmly believe that there are men in prison cells to-day who will enjoy the highest blessings of heaven, while some living high and honorable, so called, here will be in hades for their treatment of their fellow beings in this world.

You hear from your pulpits and from your platforms the cry, "Help the heathens; save the cannibals"; and yet when one helps a fellow countryman and attempts to give him another trial and bring out the good that is in him and give him another chance in life the same platform or pulpit shouter will yell, "Pardoning too many people"; but if you will give $100 to foreign missions, to be carried into lands to those who know not, you will hear them shout, "Good! glory hallelujah, God loveth a cheerful giver." We know the man here, our closest neighbor, and to which should we first lend help, our own people or the heathens? But you say our man has committed a crime. Yes; and the very one you are sending your money to perhaps committed or helped murder and possibly helped eat one of our own countrymen. It is easy to criticize; it is easy to talk; but if you will look into your prisons, into your penitentiary, and into your chain gangs, and make personal inspection, as I have done, surely you will reach the conclusion that these are the people that were spoken of in the expression "the least of these." They can sing, and rightly:

"A charge to keep I have;
A God to glorify;
A never-dying soul to save
And fit it for the sky."

If all men who are guilty of crime or of violating the statute laws of our State were brought into court and tried, ah, gentlemen, men in high places might be removed to prison cells. If God in His all-wise providence, some dark night at the hour of 12, should let the broad sunlight burst out with all its beauty upon the earth, what stumbling and hustling there would be from dens of vice in order to keep the eyes of man from seeing. Yet they are not deceiving God, and you know it. But, we are taught, and wisely taught, to be as "wise as serpents and as harmless as doves."

I have been told—and it has been said by some little sniffling editors—that the governor should not pay any attention to petitions. The Constitution of our State, and of the United States, gives the people the right to petition, and no man, or set of men, have a right to deprive them of or oppose that privilege, and I am one that believes that the governor is the servant of and not the boss of the people and that it is my duty to obey petitions, to obey the will of the people, and I expect to do so as long as I am governor, and I present to you here, in a short and concise form, my reasons for granting the pardons, paroles, and commutations I have. The original papers are all on file in my office. I most respectfully ask of you and each of you that if there is any case in which you are interested or in which you would like information, that you come to the office and it will be our pleasure to furnish you with all of the original documents. Possibly I have erred; but if so, it has been on the side of mercy. When you say to a man that he is paroled, you do not turn him loose upon the world, but you throw around him the very strongest of safeguards, because he knows that if he is not of good behavior, that if he commits another crime, he does not run the risk of acquittal by jury; he knows that if he violates his parole he must go back into prison and serve the remainder of the sentence. Therefore, in my opinion, it is better in many cases to have a man under a parole than to let him serve his full sentence, because if he is a bad man and serves his sentence he goes out into the world to do as he pleases, runs the risk of being caught again, has the opportunity to employ counsel and go to the jury, and make a fight through the courts for his freedom; but, if he is under a parole, no such bright opportunities are before him. He must go at once and be reimprisoned, and this makes him better and holds his evil passions in check.

Gentlemen, my record along this line has been made; I am going to go before the people of my State, face to face, man to man, and give an account of my stewardship, and if the people of this State are the Christians that they profess to be, I have no fear of the results; and, if they are not Christians, I am very much mistaken in my knowledge of my people. I fear no harm from the fact that I have shown mercy to my fellow men, but I do expect a reward, not only here but hereafter, because I believe that there is a God; I believe that he is my God; I believe that but for His help I would have never been Governor of South Carolina. I will answer to Him for all my acts; to my people for my acts as governor, and I have no apologies to make to any man or set of men for a single parole, pardon, or commutation that I have granted, for I place myself firmly upon the foundation that "Self-love is the enemy of benevolence. It is far more noble to pardon than to be avenged. It is a part of the animal man to retaliate an injury. It is only God and the sons of God that have the magnanimity to forgive."

And the constitution of my State, section 12, Article IV, which reads, "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed in mercy."

"Some one committed a murder last night,
But hundreds of thousands were kind,
For the wrong that is done is forever in sight,
To the good we are fearfully blind;
Some one deserted his children to-day,
But millions of fathers are true;
The bad deeds are not such a fearful array
Compared to the good that men do.

"Somebody stole from his brother last night,
But millions of honest men live;
Some one was killed in a murderous fight,
But thousands are glad to forgive
Their brothers the wrongs that were fancied or real;
The crimes that we hear of each day
Compared to the good deeds that we could reveal
Make not such a fearful array.

"I would answer the men who stand up and declare
That the world is much given to vice,
That the sum of man's crimes every day everywhere
Can't compare with man's sweet sacrifice,
That for every black soul there are thousands pure white,
The sum of the sinners is few.
And I know in my heart that the world is all right
When I think of the good that men do."

Very respectfully,

COLE L. BLEASE, Governor.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the Honorable the Members of the State Senate of South Carolina:

GENTLEMEN: Twelve months ago, when I stated in my message to you conveying the list of pardons, paroles, and commutations which I had granted, "I take pleasure in accepting the construction of the constitution, which is that I should make such report * * *," some people criticized me by saying that I had to make such report to the general assembly, and that that language in my message was useless.

I beg leave to call your attention, however, to section 11, Article IV, of the constitution, which reads: "It shall be his duty to report to the general assembly, at the next regular session thereafter, all pardons granted by him," and does not require of me to present any reasons for the paroling, reprieving, or commuting any prisoner by me; but I set forth then, as I am doing now, my reasons not only of the pardons, as required by the constitution, but of the paroles, commutations, and reprieves, because I want all of my acts as Governor of South Carolina to be known to the public; and, as I said then, I repeat now, I am not afraid of them, for the indorsement which I received from 72,243 of my white fellow citizens is pretty strong proof of the fact that my administration was indorsed, and if the machine had given me all the votes that were cast for me, and my opponents had not used money, whisky, and intimidation, instead of being 72,243 it would have been at least 90,000, as I predicted at the beginning of the campaign, and as a very large number of my fellow citizens now believe, fully feeling that I was not given all of the votes which were cast for me besides the ones which were taken from me for the reasons just above mentioned.

I furthermore said in my said letter of transmittal: "I fear no harm from the fact that I have shown mercy to my fellow men, but I do expect a reward not only here but hereafter, because I believe that there is a God; I believe that He is my God; I believe that but for His help I would have never been Governor of South Carolina." I was not disappointed, for my people gave me my reward—a second term as governor of my State—and I believe that my reward hereafter will come in due season, for I still believe that only by the help of God Almighty could I have won my first race, and I know positively that only by His help could I have defeated the unholy organization that was formed against me last summer by men of two different factions, which hated each other then and who hate each other now, but were willing to lie down and swap odors in order to defeat BLEASE.

Think of it—many preachers, nearly all the newspapers of the State, the corporations; that is, the leading officials thereof; the lawyers, almost in a body; a large majority of the legislature; nearly all the State officials; a large majority of the delegates to the State convention in May; all the moneyed interests; a large majority of the commercial travelers, commonly called "drummers"; some of the women, praying; some of the old-line so-called reformers; some of the old-line so-called conservatives; many of the Haskellites; the Cubans; the Spaniards and the mixed breeds; a majority of the State executive committee; a large majority of the county executive committee; and all of the election machinery—what a combination, and yet I beat it. Therefore I know that God heard the prayers of myself and my friends; and I repeat that had it not been for Him I could not have won such a victory; and once again I sing "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." And, as I said and repeat now, "I will answer to Him for all my acts; to my people for my acts as governor; and I have no apologies to make to any man or set of men for a single parole, pardon, or commutation that I have granted," or for a single act that I have done since I have been Governor of South Carolina, or for a single word I have spoken, whether in the State or outside of it, firmly believing that my pardon record for the past two years had more to do with causing my reelection than any other one thing, because my Heavenly Father has said that He would show mercy to those who themselves showed mercy, and my people, my friends, all over the State, when I would give my reasons for pardoning, would holler "Well done," and when I would say, "I am not done yet," in defiance of the Cuban mixed breeds and others of a like stripe, my friends would holler back, "Turn them out," "Go on, boy, you are right," and on the 27th day of August, 1912, they proceeded to turn out of your body and out of the house of representatives many of those who had been loud-mouthed hollerers, "pardoning too many people," some had to change front or profess to have done so to keep also from going out.

I said on the stump, "If you don't want people pardoned, don't sign petitions; for if proper petitions are presented, I am going to turn more out, and you can't help it."

I am still doing business at room No. 1, Statehouse, Columbia, S. C., and though it hurts some folks mighty bad, they can't help it.

Make some one else happy; why be grouchy, mean, stingy, selfish? Wake up, man, and do something yourself and quit complaining about somebody else who is busy and moving forward in good deeds.

"Jest do your best and praise or blame that follers that counts just the same.
I've allus noticed grate success is mixed with trouble more or less.
An' it's the man that does the best that gets more blame than all the rest."

Your constitution says, in speaking of the governor: "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed in mercy," and I see and know of no grander way to apply this than to follow the rule, "That mercy I would to others show, that mercy show to me," but I reverse it somewhat, because I expect to say, when I appeal for mercy, "That mercy I have to others shown, that mercy show to me."

Your Code of Laws, Volume II, section 988, reads: "In any case that may be deemed proper by the governor, he may suspend sentence or parole any prisoner upon such terms or conditions that he may deem just in the exercise of executive clemency." Now, with that section of the statutes and the section just quoted from the constitution, it is a matter within the discretion of the governor as to how this mercy shall be extended, and as to when he thinks it just and proper and upon what conditions the parole of a prisoner should be granted, consequently, before any fair man or any gentleman will criticize the governor of his State for exercising this discretion, he will first make himself acquainted with the facts and conditions upon which the parole was granted, and not simply, from political prejudice, write an editorial or preach a sermon, or stand on the street corner and criticize, when he knows nothing of the reasons governing the governor in performing the duties laid out for him so plainly under the constitution and the statute law of his State. But those who are blinded by prejudice, or those who have a wicked and mean heart, for political purposes, proceed to condemn without knowing one thing of the conditions or one thing of the petitions, or one thing of the reasons governing the governor in his acts. Hence, when the matter was presented to the people as a body, being a Christian people, they slapped the faces of those who from a malicious heart or political prejudices had maligned the governor and said to him, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou shall be our ruler for two more years," and the other crowd sneaked into their holes and hollered "fraud," "fraud," and appointed a little committee to investigate. And it—the little committee—although very brazen at first, laid down their arms, quietly sneaked off to their homes and said, "Nothing doing," and the whole crowd feel cheaper and meaner than if they had abided, as good Democrats should do, by the majority and not made a laughing stock of themselves, not only in their own State but outside of it.

Some people may say this is harsh language, that I ought not to use it; yet, the newspapers, notwithstanding the fact that after the primary election I sat quietly, said nothing, and took all that was heaped upon me, continued their abuse, their vituperation, and their slanders, and published with great headlines and great glee the misrepresentations of a speech that I made in Richmond, Va. Day after day they carried articles copied from Yankee hoodlums and little newspaper pimps, and then when they were furnished with numbers of papers and offered hundreds of telegrams and letters commending the course of the Governor of South Carolina, they absolutely failed and refused to publish them; and, when other papers speak of the governor in disrespectful terms, without either saying "mister" or "governor" but headline "BLEASE"—for which I care nothing, because the people of the State have shown the newspapers that they make asses of themselves when they bray and reelect to office those whom they fight—yet even the News and Courier goes further; not content in striking me, they headline to the world "The Bleases," including even my wife; and yet people say that I should be quiet, should say nothing, be easy, let it pass. Yes, gentlemen, I have let it pass, lo these many days, but how long before patience will cease to be a virtue is a matter that rests in the hands of my God.

Herewith I hand you a full statement of all the paroles, commutations, reprieves, and pardons granted by me since my last message to the general assembly in January, 1912. If you are pleased with these commutations, etc., I am pleased. If my friends are pleased, I am overjoyed with delight. If my enemies are not pleased, they can not help it, as I told them on the stump, and their sweating and fuming will avail them naught. So it is; so let be.

I exercised my power in paroling, for I consider the parole system the best system ever devised for the handling of convicts. Now, for instance, you parole a man during good behavior who possibly has served more than half of the sentence imposed upon him—sometimes they have been paroled when they only had three or four more months to serve—you do not turn him loose, but say to him, go forth, make a man of yourself, for if you do not, and you are ever convicted again, you have to go back and serve the remainder of the sentence imposed. Now, if these men had gone ahead and served out their sentences, they would be foot-loose to do as they please, and no restraint placed upon their actions. Even a life prisoner may be paroled; it is simply giving him another chance in life; and how many men who profess to be great Christians would be living and enjoying the blessings of this life had not God forgiven them and given them another chance?

The parole during good behavior means what? Good behavior means that he shall not violate any of the criminal laws of this State, because men are bound over to keep the peace or good behavior. If they violate any of the criminal laws of their State, they are not of good behavior, and they can be recommitted to the penitentiary without trial to serve the remainder of their sentences. The system I have now established in South Carolina will be followed hereafter by other governors; possibly not so many will be paroled, but the system itself will be kept in vogue. The same system is being tried in other States; some going even further and allowing a man to work himself out by his good behavior in the penitentiary. Take one case particularly; a negro had been in the penitentiary for 18 years for killing another negro, which I consider a most unusual and severe punishment for his crime; he is paroled during good behavior; he is given another opportunity to live. If he disturbs the peace or violates any of the criminal statutes of this State, he goes back to the penitentiary for life; that condition hangs over him, and he knows that if he is not of good behavior he goes back to serve the remainder of his sentence. Another instance, a white man sentenced to the penitentiary for a long term for a crime committed while under the influence of liquor; parole him on the condition that he take not another drop of liquor. If he does, and thereby violates this parole, he goes back to serve the balance of his sentence.

Therefore how any man who professes to be a Christian can object to this system is something beyond my comprehension; and when one does do it I am forced to the conclusion inevitably that he is a deep-dyed hypocrite; that he is not what he professes; and when he stands before his God on the final judgment day that he will be condemned and will hear the words, "Depart from me, ye accursed"; and he will be confined to the everlasting fires of hell for his hypocrisy and will then be reminded that, "For inasmuch as he did it not unto the least of these, he did it not unto his God"; and I beg to quote you right here, from an article published in the Columbia State, dated December 1, 1912, written by that great Christian man—oh, that South Carolina had thousands more like him—the Rev. J. S. Moffatt, D. D., president of Erskine College, in which he says:

"It would follow also that in the prison life there should be brought to bear all possible forces for the restoration of the unfortunate ones. Let their surroundings be such, and the agencies that influence them be such, and the methods of dealing with them be such as will influence them to higher personal and social ideals. The indeterminate sentence and a system of parole are to be considered as inspiring the condemned to higher ideals and larger hopes. Above all, let the gospel of Jesus Christ, that greatest of all agencies for the transformation of human life and character, come into the lonely cell with its love and light, brought by loving and yearning hearts. The prison house may become to some a Bethel."

I am proud that I have been able to extend this mercy to my fellow man, because it was right that it should have been done; it was my duty to do it, and for these two reasons alone I did it, regardless of consequences or results, remembering that:

"That man may last, but never lives
Who much receives and nothing gives;
Whom none can love; whom none can thank;
Creation's blot; creation's blank.

"But he who marks from day to day,
In generous acts his radiant way,
Treads the same path the Savior trod,
The path to glory and to God."

Very respectfully,

COLE L. BLEASE, Governor.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER.

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE: I herewith transmit to you reasons for the pardons, paroles, and commutations granted since your session of 1913.

I am glad to have had the opportunity to help these unfortunates. Some of them may fall by the wayside, but if I have made one good citizen and saved one soul, I will have done a good work.

"We are sitting in the shadow
Of a long and lonely night,
Waiting till some gentle angel
Comes to lead us to the light.
For we know there is a magic
That can give eyes to the blind.
O well-filled hands be generous!
O pitying hearts be kind!

"Help stumbling feet that wander
To find the upward way;
Teach hands that now lie idle
The joys of work and play.
Let pity, love, and patience
Our tender teachers be,
That, though the eyes be blinded,
The little souls may see.

"Your world is large and beautiful,
Our prison dim and small;
We stand and wait, imploring:
'Is there not room for all?
Give us our children's garden,
Where we may safely bloom,
Forgetting in God's sunshine
Our lot of grief and gloom.'

"A little voice comes singing,
O listen to its song!
A little child is pleading
For those who suffer wrong.
Grant them the patient magic
That gives eyes to the blind!
O well-filled hands be generous!
O pitying hearts be kind."

Very respectfully,

COLE L. BLEASE, Governor.

COLA, S. C., February 5, 1924.

Read over several of these this day, at dinner hour, and confirm each of them, and am glad that I did it.

COLE L. BLEASE.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, to show you to what extent many people who are in favor of rigid enforcement will go, I should like to recite to the Senate two instances that happened in the State of Maryland.

Lawrence Wenger, who lived in Harford County, was a farmer about 20 years of age, a very honest and highly respected young man. He went out to drive in his cows one day, and it happened that some prohibition agents were searching through the woods in the vicinity of his farm. They had discovered a still, and those who were operating the still had run away. These agents saw Wenger and thought he was one of the men who had been operating the still; whereupon, without any words whatsoever, they raised their shotguns and shot him nearly to death. Then, realizing that they had made a mistake, they let 15 or 20 minutes go by, while he was dying, while they held a consultation. Then they put him in an automobile and drove 14 miles to a doctor, although there were many doctors that could have been obtained in the immediate vicinity. He died a few moments after they reached the doctor's office.

The people of my county who have some vestiges of civilization were very much incensed at the treatment by these prohibition officers of this young man after he was shot. They authorized our State's attorney to institute proceedings against these four prohibition officers. They were indicted for murder, but they could not be tried in our court because the United States Government stepped into the scene, and the case was transferred to the United States district court in Baltimore City, where the United States district attorney, Mr. Woodcock—a fine gentleman—became the counsel for these men, and defended them at the trial. They were acquitted, though not without some remarks from those in charge of the trial as to their overzealousness, and sympathy for the grave mistake that had been made.

That is one case.

John Bongori was an ex-service man of Italian extraction. He had a creditable record in the World War. Two prohibition agents came to Harford County on another occasion, got in touch with Bongori and asked him if he could obtain some liquor for them. He told them that he had none, and did not know where he could get any. They said they needed it very much, and they would appreciate it so much if he would do this. After considerable persuasion Bongori secured somewhere a pint of gin, which he took to these two prohibition agents and turned over to them, receiving in payment therefor, at least as far as we know, the exact amount of money which he had paid to some one else to obtain the liquor.

They then attempted to put him under arrest. He was a young man about 26 or 27 years of age, and he started to run from these men. It was Saturday, at 12 o'clock in the day. He ran down into the business section of Havre de Grace, where there were any number of scores of people on the street doing their Christmas shopping; and as he ran they called to him to halt, and as he did not halt they drew their revolvers and shot at him; and it was only an act of Providence that several women who were down there doing their Christmas shopping were not killed. Finally a bullet did hit Bongori, and killed him instantly.

Bear in mind, all that this man had done under the Federal prohibition act was to commit a misdemeanor. He had not committed a felony, but a mere misdemeanor. Now, I take it that if an individual happened to be riding down the streets of Washington exceeding the speed limit, and a traffic officer should come up and ask the individual to halt, and the individual did not halt, and finally the traffic officer should shoot at the individual and kill him, the Senate and the country and the citizens of Washington would be very much incensed at the man who would take a life for the mere commission of a misdemeanor.

Strange to say, the good people who in many other ways have some kindness and charity in their souls were not greatly stirred at the killing of Bongori. Those prohibition agents were indicted for murder in my home county, and again the Federal Government came in and transferred the cases to the United States District Court in Baltimore. There the United States district attorney became the defendant's counsel, and our own county officers had to do the prosecuting.

I cite those two instances to show that it hardly made a ripple of excitement in the minds of the people. I believe that when the history of prohibition enforcement, as we know it in many cases is written, fifty or a hundred years from now, those who are studying in the public schools will wonder what in the name of common sense was the state of civilization in the United States of America at the outset of prohibition enforcement.

Senators, the mere buying of a pint of gin or the selling of a pint of gin is a violation of the law, and, of course, it should be punished, if the evidence shows that the law has been violated, but what Senator would be in favor of putting a person in the penitentiary for life whose only crime had been that on four separate occasions a certain person had been detected committing four separate misdemeanors? The proposed punishment is out of proportion to that for burglary, arson, murder, manslaughter, mayhem, and what not.

We have simply gone mad on this question. We certainly have a little bit of the philosophy of Jesus Christ left in us, or is it absolutely extinct? Have we no hearts at all for the errant brother, as the good Methodist ministers are prone to say? Do we want to crucify him, to crush him, to exterminate him? Shall our penitentiaries and our penal code be operated to make scrap heaps of mankind, or shall we keep in mind that we can perhaps be to some extent the repair shop for erring humanity?

We certainly are not going to run wild on this question, are we, and have no regard at all for the trivialty of simply buying or selling a pint of alcohol by an individual? No one is wronged in the legal sense of the word. The matter is purely voluntary. No one is held up and made to buy it or made to sell it. It is not like robbery, it is not like murder, it is not like embezzlement, it is not like larceny, because in those cases the crime is one of force and coercion, and some one's liberty or property is taken from him; but in this transaction it must be solely voluntary between two individuals.

It seems to me that that being the case, the penalty should not be any greater than in the case of arson, and there is practically not a State in the Union that has a more severe penalty for arson than that proposed in the bill now pending before this body. There are very few States in the Union that have a more severe penalty for embezzlement or larceny, breach of trust, or the taking of property illegally.

I want to vote, and will vote, for any rational, well-balanced, humane enforcement of the prohibition act, and am ready to subscribe to proper penalties, but I do not believe that it is either right, nor is it in the interest of common sense, nor will it help the future of the country or contribute to its civilization for us to provide such inhumane penalties as seem to be in the minds of certain people who are very much interested in passing this particular bill.

May I say just one more thing before I conclude, to clear up a misunderstanding? It is frequently said that the State of Maryland has not come in line on national prohibition. Senators, in 23 counties out of 23 counties in the State of Maryland, there are upon the statute books to-day laws comparable to the national Volstead Act, making it a crime to sell liquor, and prescribing penalties for violation of the law.

The fact is that there is only a very small area in the entire State of Maryland that now has no enforcement law. Practically every county in the State was dry before national prohibition, and the laws in those counties are still on the statute books. So that those people who say that we have not enforced the legislation in Maryland perhaps are well meaning, perhaps they mean to state the facts, but they are not stating them, and I would be glad to read here, if time permitted, the enforcement act for one county after another, drawn along the lines of the general philosophy of the Volstead Act.

And the Senate agree to the same.

DAVID A. REED,
FRANK L. GREENE,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, does this represent a complete agreement?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. A complete agreement, without dissent from any conferee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The adoption of the conference report will result in the passage of the bill?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. What is the effect of the House amendment agreed to?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The Senate took the bill of the House and made its amendments, consolidating a number of separate bills which the House had sent to the Senate. In effect, the entire program approved by the Senate is acquiesced in by the House, with the single exception that there was inserted in the Senate an amendment providing for a joint inquiry into coast defense by airplanes, providing for a joint commission of the House and Senate. Inasmuch as that is now pending in the Rules Committee of the House, the House conferees represented that they were utterly unable to get the House to agree to the amendment, and on that the Senate conferees have been forced to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The conference report is signed by all the conferees?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is signed by all the conferees.

The report was agreed to.

EQUALIZING RANK OF CERTAIN OFFICERS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Instead of the language of the amendment of the Senate insert the following: "appointment as such and shall both take rank above all other officers on the active list of the Army and Navy: Provided, That nothing in this act shall have the effect of changing the relative rank of the present Chief of Staff and the present Chief of Naval Operations"; and agrees to the same.

DAVID A. REED,
FRANK L. GREENE,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania explain the effect of this agreement?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The effect of the agreement is that the Chief of Staff of the Army and the Chief of Naval Operations will take rank between themselves in accordance with the dates of their respective appointments, excepting that, with the concurrence of General Summerall and Admiral Hughes, this act shall not affect the relative rank of the two present incumbents during the balance of their service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It will end the war of precedence?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It ends the war of precedence and gives these two officers rank above all other officers of the Army and Navy. It does not seem very important to Members of the Senate, including myself, but apparently it seems very important to the officers of the two services. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

OUACHITA NATIONAL PARK, ARK.

Mr. BRATTON. From the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 675) to establish the Mena National Park in the State of Arkansas, and I submit a report (No. 1787) thereon. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the author of the bill, to this report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the bill provides for the creation of a national park in the western part of the State of Arkansas. It is in a beautiful scenic region, and will serve the purposes and desires of the people of some six or seven States. The subject matter has been under consideration for a prolonged period in both this body and in the body at the other end of the Capitol.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, before the words "National Park," to strike out "Mena" and insert "Ouachita"; to strike out section 2 in the following words:

SEC. 2. All lands included within the exterior boundaries of that part of the Arkansas National Forest being in townships 2, 3, 4, and 5 south; in ranges 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31; all west of the fifth principal meridian in the State of Arkansas.

And to insert:

and 19, township 4 south, range 25 west; all of said lands being in the State of Arkansas and west of the fifth principal meridian in said State.

On page 2, line 4, to change the section number from 3 to 2; in line 5, before the words "National Park," to strike out "Mena" and insert "Ouachita"; in line 10, to change the section number from 4 to 3; and in line 15, after the word "land," to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That this act shall become effective to create the area herein described as a national park only when the title to all of the lands within such area and now privately owned shall have been vested in the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pass upon and accept title to said privately owned lands on behalf of the United States: Provided further, That the United States shall not purchase, by appropriation of public moneys or otherwise, any land within the aforesaid area, but that such land shall be secured by the United States only by public or private donation.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, or disposal under the laws of the United States and dedicated, set apart, and established as a public park for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, under the name of the Ouachita National Park, the tract of land in the State of Arkansas particularly described by and included within metes and bounds as follows, to wit:

All lands included within the exterior boundaries of that part of the Ouachita National Forest being in the following land divisions and subdivisions: Sections 35 and 36, township 2, south, range 31 west; east half township 3 south, range 31 west; sections 1, 2, 12, 13, and 24, township 4 south, range 31 west; township 3 south, range 30 west; north half of township 4 south, range 30 west; sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 27, and 28, township 4 south, range 30 west; south half of township 3 south, range 29 west; sections 17 and 18, township 3 south, range 29 west; north half of township 4 south, range 29 west; sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, and 26, township 4 south, range 29 west; south half of township 3 south, range 28 west; township 4 south, range 28 west; sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, township 5 south, range 28 west; south half of township 3 south, range 27 west; township 4 south, range 27 west; sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, township 5 south, range 27 west; sections 31 and 32, township 3 south, range 26 west; sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, township 4 south, range 26 west; sections 4, 5, and 6, township 5 south, range 26 west; sections 7, 18, and 19, township 4 south, range 25 west; all of said lands being in the State of Arkansas and west of the fifth principal meridian in said State.

SEC. 2. That the administration, protection, and promotion of said Ouachita National Park shall be exercised under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916, entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes."

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States, whether for homestead, mineral, right of way, or any other purpose whatsoever, or shall affect the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land: Provided, That this act shall become effective to create the area herein described as a national park only when the title to all of the lands within such area and now privately owned shall have been vested in the United States, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to pass upon and accept title to said privately owned lands on behalf of the United States: Provided further, That the United States shall not purchase, by appropriation of public moneys or otherwise, any land within the aforesaid area, but that such land shall be secured by the United States only by public or private donation.

Mr. JONES. Does the bill authorize any appropriation?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; it does not; and as I understand it, an amendment also requires that the title to the private lands within the area shall be procured without expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the bill provide for the setting aside of public lands for a park?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It sets aside public lands for the purpose of a national park and provides that the privately owned lands within the park district shall be procured without expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. JONES. What can the Senator tell as about the area of the proposed park?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It will contain about 163,000 acres, 35,000 of which are privately owned land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish the Ouachita National Park in the State of Arkansas."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas subsequently said: Mr. President, in connection with my remarks on the bill creating the Ouachita National Park, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD the report of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

RÉSUMÉ OF FACTS SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF THE BILL

The area to be included in the proposed park is about 35 miles in length by about 12 miles in width and contains approximately 163,000 acres, all of which is now the property of the United States, being a part of a forest reserve, except approximately 28,000 acres. Under the terms of the bill, as amended, the 28,000 acres now in private ownership must be acquired, without expense to the United States, before the act becomes operative, thus absolving the Government from any financial obligation incident to the establishment of the park.

The site is situated in the southwestern part of the State of Arkansas, the nearest point being about 15 miles from the city of Hot Springs, a famous health resort. It is believed that the proposed park will serve to an excellent advantage in connection with the health and recreational facilities at Hot Springs. There are no other national parks in that region of the United States, except a small one, containing less than 1,000 acres, at the city of Hot Springs. The Ouachita Park, by reason of short distances and splendid highways, will be easily accessible to many people residing in Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, and other adjoining States. Many of these people, on account of long distances and other factors, will be denied the advantage and enjoyment of park facilities if this park is not created. The region described in the bill is mountainous and rugged. Some of its peaks reach an altitude of approximately 2,600 feet, while the adjacent country is slightly above sea level, thus affording a cool and attractive climate in the park even during midsummer. The entire region is interspersed with streams and forests. Its scenic beauty is said to compare favorably with the Swiss Alps.

In view of the urgent need of an adequate national park in that part of the country and the peculiar fitness of this area for that purpose, it is the belief of the committee that the bill, with the proposed amendments, should pass.

Hon. GERALD P. NYE,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands and Surveys,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR NYE: I have your request of December 15, 1927, asking for an opinion as to the merits of S. 675, a bill to establish the Mena National Park in the State of Arkansas.

It is shown by the records of this department that the area described in this bill was inspected by representatives of the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture and the National Park Service of this department on May 7, 1926. From a joint report rendered by the representatives of these bureaus it would appear that this area should not be made a national park for the reason that there are no distinctive scenic or other features comparable with the standard set for the establishment of national parks, and that the area contains nothing of outstanding or national significance which would warrant placing it in a national-park category. Of the entire area of 163,000 acres contemplated in the bill, 128,000 acres are under Government ownership and 35,000 acres in private ownership; the existence of such a large area in private holdings within a proposed park, even though the area measured up scenically to national-park standards, would also be unsatisfactory from an administrative standpoint.

For these reasons I can not recommend the approval of the bill.

Very truly yours,

E. B. FINNEY, Acting Secretary.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act as amended and modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 3 o'clock having arrived, the Chair reminds the Senate that, under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, the order for the limitation of debate is now in effect.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I was very glad to enter into an agreement to limit the time for the discussion of the pending bill, because, so far as most of the thoughts that are suggested to me by it are concerned, I have so frequently given expression to those thoughts that it would be a waste of time for me to give expression to them again.

There is obviously very strong opposition in this Chamber to the passage of the bill, and yet I entertain but little doubt—though I hope I may be mistaken—that it will pass. I feel this way because I have never known, since I have been a Member of the Senate, the Anti-Saloon League to ask for the enactment of any legislative measure by the Senate that the measure was not enacted. In other words, I have never known the Anti-Saloon League to crack its lash that the Senate did not jump through the hoop. Indeed, so true is this that on the occasion when it was requested by the Anti-Saloon League to apply the Federal merit system of appointment to the selection of the field force of the prohibition system, it promptly applied it, though never on any other occasion since I have been a Member of this body has it ever, so far as I can remember, been induced to extend the Federal merit system of appointment to any branch of the Federal service.

Of course, this bill is but another link in the chain of galling, imbecile tryanny that prohibition has been forging for the people of the United States ever since the adoption of the eighteenth amendment.

To-day we are asked to pass a bill crowded with drastic, excessive penalties, utterly devoid of any true perspective or sense of proportion. To-morrow the Senate will be asked to pass a bill making any violation of the Volstead Act a felony. That will be the next step. Then later on perhaps it will be asked to adopt the cruel, almost incredible example of the State of Michigan, and to provide that for the fourth felonious violation of the Volstead law the offender shall be imprisoned for life. Of course, in my humble judgment, prohibition would be no nearer enforcement after the enactment of all that extreme legislation than it is now.

Then, consequently, would come the last step that prohibition tyranny could take, and that is upon the strength of information furnished by faithless servants, or by estranged relations, or by malicious neighbors, to enter the private home. Already the way for this has been paved by the Goff bill introduced some time ago into this body, which provides an opportunity for the prohibition agent, under the guise of entering a private residence for the purpose of seeing whether any commercial still is contained in it, to enter it for the purpose of finding what is fermenting in the wine cask or the wine barrel in the owner's cellar. That, as I have previously pointed out, is the stage of desperation to which prohibition has already been driven in Finland, one of the four countries in the world that has not yet revoked its prohibitory legislation.

So, first of all, before the Senate gives its assent to this bill, I ask it to bear clearly in mind the place that it, if enacted into law, will occupy in the vast, elaborate, and highly organized system of prohibition tyranny of which it is intended to be a part.

Passing now to a particular examination of the bill, I say that it could not have been possibly drafted except by the hand of indiscriminate fanaticism. All colors are the same to a man in the dark. All degrees of crime, so far as the Volstead Act is concerned, are the same to a prohibition fanatic. Put this bill into effect as a law and it would be in the power of a Federal judge—and just as likely a judge who had been visaed by the Anti-Saloon League, because a large part of the judges that have been appointed in recent years have been so visaed—to impose a term of five years or a maximum fine of $10,000 not only upon the bootlegger but upon some innocent youth or maid, say, guilty of the offense of transporting a flask to a youthful party.

I ask the Members of the Senate to pause and to ponder well this bill. There are some of them who have young sons who might well in their heedless youth commit some comparatively petty violation of its provisions, with the result that he might be incarcerated in the penitentiary for five years or fined $10,000.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Or both.

Mr. TYDINGS. It might be both.

Mr. BRUCE. Yes; it might be both. No matter who drafted the report accompanying this bill, I am bound to say that I can not understand how he could possibly expect us seriously to accept some of the statements that he makes about the bill in it. The report says:

> It will be observed that the maximum punishment for a first offense for the manufacture or sale of liquor is a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment not exceeding six months. In the other cases, aside from manufacture and sale, as prescribed by this section, the penalty for a first offense is a fine not to exceed $500. These penalties are adequate where the commercial element is not present, but they are absolutely inadequate when applied to professional bootleggers and other large-scale operators. This fact makes advisable an amendment to the prohibition act. Such amendment should not operate harshly upon the casual violator. Its object is to reach the professional commercial operators who profit financially by their criminal defiance of the law.

What right has the author of that report to use such language? He knows that the wording of the pending bill, without any discrimination whatsoever as respects classes of offenses, applies to the manufacture, possession, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor. In other words, it would apply not only to such a malefactor as the conspicuous bootlegger Remus, who was sentenced to the Atlanta Penitentiary from Ohio some years ago, but it would apply also to any man who happens to be discovered with a flask of whisky or a bottle of wine in his possession when in transit, for instance, between Washington and Baltimore or between Washington and Alexandria.

To use another illustration, it would apply not only to the bootlegger, big or small, engaged in illicit commercial operations, but it would apply to any householder who might set a small amount of wine to fermenting to the intoxicating point in his cellar. It would apply, too, I should say, to any purchaser who had bought a drop of liquor under circumstances involving the process of transportation. It would apply to any man who went to Bermuda or over our northern boundary into Canada and came back with a bottle of whisky in his bag.

I recollect that some years ago a friend of mine returned from Bermuda and passed out as rapidly as he could from his ship to an automobile with a bottle or so of liquor under a heavy overcoat. He thought that he was entirely safe, but, to his surprise, he found that his footsteps had been dogged by a Federal officeholder, who approached him, and, to his intense relief, exclaimed only, "You have some bottles of whisky in that overcoat of yours. You will have to give me one of them." [Laughter.] The possessor of those bottles could under this bill have been fined $10,000 or been sent to the penitentiary for five years, or been both so fined and imprisoned.

I was told of another individual who about the same time returned from Canada with several bottles of whisky in his bag. When the time came for the inspection of the bag at the border, he left his bag open, after putting a bottle of whisky on top of its contents with a card on it saying: "This is for the inspector." He then turned his back on his bag and when he returned he found that the inspector had inspected its contents and had gone, after turning the card over and writing on the reverse side, "You are a perfect gentleman." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator on the bill has expired. The Senator from Maryland now has 10 minutes to speak on the amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. And the owner of that bag, too, might have been fined $10,000 or been sentenced to the penitentiary for five years, or been both fined and imprisoned.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will pardon me, I desire to inquire is there an amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. JONES. That is one of the committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. The Senator from Maryland has 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. So it is absolutely untrue that this bill applies only to individuals engaged in the commercial manufacture and sale of liquor. It is, as I read it, wholly undiscriminating in its application to all classes of offenders under the Volstead Act and to all offenses under that act—the pettiest as well as the most heinous. Never did I hear of such a law—one so utterly disregardful of all the fundamental distinctions based on relative degrees of guilt that have been heretofore supposed to underlie punitive justice. All I have to say to the Members of the Senate is, if the Senate shall pass such a measure as this, look out not only for your own safety but for the safety of your children. As to the latter—such have been the ghastly consequences of prohibition in this country—that I have been told of at least two fathers who are in the habit when their daughters are leaving their homes for youthful parties to supply them with a small amount of spirits that they know to be pure rather than have them go to such parties and run the deadly risk of drinking some lethal distillate.

Equally as anomalous, so far as sound principles of criminal justice are concerned, are the provisions of the pending bill which at one single stroke wipe out all the ordinary distinctions between first offenses and second offenses—distinctions that have been recognized by the criminal law ever since there was a criminal law—and place the offender who has yielded to the first access of temptation, and may never yield to another after a single punishment, on exactly the same footing as some hardened miscreant who has over and over again defied the majesty of the law. What sort of a law is that? The present Volstead law at least has the good sense in every line of its penalty clauses to recognize the difference between the gravity of a first offense and the gravity of a second offense.

These fanatics, I repeat—such fanatics as the world has rarely known in any hour of extreme madness in its history—come along and set a net with meshes designed to take in indistinguishably the vilest and most hardened violators of the Volstead Act, the beardless youth, the immature girl, and, generally speaking, everyone whom the author of the report relating to this bill is at least discerning enough to term "casual violators," as distinguished from habitual bootleggers.

If this bill shall be properly amended, I am prepared to vote for it. I have never failed to vote for any reasonable legislation looking to the enforcement of prohibition, and if I were to remain here I should continue to vote for every such measure of legislation until I felt that this country had had conclusive reason to believe, as the result of prolonged and exhaustive experimentation, that prohibition is so at war with human nature and the human reason as to be an unenforceable thing under any and under all circumstances, no matter what Constitution or statute may vainly declare.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has stated that it is impossible to discriminate in this bill between the commercial bootlegger and the casual offender. Well I know it is impossible for him to do it because of his intensely sincere convictions in favor of prohibition, which I have no desire to impugn. With great respect to him, I say that he is incapable of doing it. And perhaps it is only fair for me to say that my opposing convictions are so intense that I too would hardly be fit to undertake the task. But some one else could readily take this bill and by proper amendments draw the proper distinctions between bootleggers and other graver violators of the Volstead Act and much milder classes of offenders. In other words, this bill puts on the same footing precisely a member of such an infamous gang, bred by prohibition, as that which in Chicago a day or so ago stood up seven or eight human beings against a wall and shot their lives out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. I believe I still have some time on the amendment, have I not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the time of the Senator on the amendment has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I had not expected to say anything about this bill, but I have just read the report of the committee which has suggested to me a thought which I desire to express on this subject.

When the Volstead law was first put into effect a great many people throughout the country, and I think most of the periodicals, protested against the practice of the United States Government in the prosecution of prohibition cases of assessing what was tantamount to a license for conducting the business for which offenders were arrested and prosecuted. Of course, everyone knew that if those who were engaged in selling liquor applied for a license, no license would be issued for, under the Constitution, none could be issued by any constitutional grant of the Congress. However, in order to add to the punishment which might be inflicted, even from the first day the act was put into effect and before the cry arose that the punishment was inadequate, I recall that offenders haled before the courts were not only fined for violating the Volstead law, but they were accused in three or four counts of transportation and possession, and then they were haled before a State court and again tried there, and in some cases they were tried for a third time in a municipal court.

Then the United States Government, through its internal-revenue officials, would send to the offender a bill for a license for conducting the liquor business, and then assess damages against him for having failed to obtain such a license. They insisted upon collecting such assessments, and wherever they could make good by levying against the property of the offender they did so. It occurred to me, as well as to a great many others, that this was purely tyrannical, and was unwarranted under the Constitution, and not intended by the Volstead law.

Another practice which has grown up is not to make charges against offenders under the terms of the prohibition law, but to charge conspiracy under section 37 of the Criminal Code. That is done for the purpose of avoiding a trial by jury and so that heavier fines and penalties may be imposed.

Mr. President, we are told that under this proposed amendment to the Volstead Act we need not fear an increase of the minimum penalty imposed, and we are asked to put our trust in the Federal judges. Let me read to you, Mr. President, the reason why I fear to trust the Federal judges in this matter. In the report of the committee, accompanying the bill, there is incorporated the testimony of Mrs. Willebrandt. Commenting upon this bill, she says:

> I have become convinced, not only by my own experience but by the recommendations of scores of Federal judges and hundreds of Department of Justice law-enforcement officials, such as United States attorneys, marshal, and the like, that the maximum penalties of the Volstead Act for the violation of things which violate the Constitution as well as substantive law are entirely inadequate.

So, Mr. President, we have the information, presented to us by a committee of the Senate through Mrs. Willebrandt, that the Federal judges themselves would like to impose upon violators of the Volstead law such a penalty as $10,000 and five years' imprisonment. Therefore, if they are asking for this amendment in order to increase these penalties and fines and imprisonments, we ought to be very careful in granting them the power that they are asking beforehand in order that they may be permitted to exercise it.

Mr. President, we have claimed, as I stated a while ago, that these fines or penalties were being imposed for selling liquor without a license, and forcing people to pay for a license; that the authorities were circumventing the law by not prosecuting under the Volstead law, but prosecuting under section 37 of the penal statutes; and Mrs. Willebrandt comes here and admits all of that. I should like to have Senators pay attention to this. It shows how those charged with the enforcement of the prohibition law believe that the only law on the statute books is the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law.

Mrs. Willebrandt describes what the enforcement officials, from the judges down, have been doing, including the prohibition enforcement officers, the United States district attorneys, and the marshals. She says:

They have resorted to the old internal revenue laws relating to the violation or evasion of various kinds of liquor taxes, and the Supreme Court of the United States—has upheld the use of those old internal revenue laws. However, it is only the occasional case that has evidence so prepared that in honesty a prosecution can be grounded under the internal revenue laws rather than the Volstead Act.

And this is a surprising thing—

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Notwithstanding what Mrs. Willebrandt says about her desire to get away from this indirection of resorting to the old internal revenue laws and to the conspiracy statute for the purpose of securing penalties adequate to prohibition enforcement, if this bill were passed it would still be entirely possible to resort to this conspiracy statute for the purpose of punishing the possession of liquor to which the incident of transportation was attached.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And it would still be possible for them to add it to the greater fine and imprisonment, as they do now to the existing fine and imprisonment.

Mr. BRUCE. That is true; so it is just a hollow pretense.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mrs. Willebrandt continues:

The other statute that they have popularly resorted to for grave, serious, widespread violations of the liquor laws, instead of grounding the offense under the national prohibition act, is the conspiracy statute, section 37 of the Penal Code.

Here is a confession on her part that our contention heretofore has been correct.

In my estimation, section 37 has been strained beyond all reach in grounding liquor law prosecutions under it.

So, Mr. President, realizing that the Federal judges, or many of them, are asking that this bill be passed, that the existing law be amended and the penalties increased, I have no doubt that they intend to inflict those punishments; and the assurance given us that we should rely upon those judges is not one which I am willing to trust. Therefore I shall oppose the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just once more?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do.

Mr. BRUCE. In that connection, I am sure the Senator recalls the judge who was brought on from Texas a short time ago to the city of New York to sit there in the trial of Volstead Act cases as well as other cases, whose conduct and deportment was so outrageously partisan and extreme in a case involving a violation of the Volstead Act that one of the attorneys in the case addressed a formal protest to the Bar Association of the State of New York, or to the judicial authorities of New York, I forget which at this moment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes.

Mr. BRUCE. I mention that just as an illustration of how dangerous it would be to lodge such a fearful discretion as this in the hands of judges, especially when the fact is borne in mind that these judges have been largely appointed after being—to use an expression I employed at an earlier stage of the debate—visaed by Wayne B. Wheeler or other representatives of the Anti-Saloon League.

Mr. BROUSSARD. That is very true.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a moment on the amendment that is pending.

On yesterday reference was made to several statutes that imposed certain penalties, with the idea of trying to impress the Senate that the penalties imposed here are too extreme. I hold in my hand some criminal statutes of the United States that I want to call to the attention of Senators.

Section 44 of the crimes statutes, chapter 4: Whoever shall willfully trespass upon * * * any * * * harbor-defense system owned * * * by the United States shall be fined * * * $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

In other words, if a citizen of the United States should walk over on to a fortification where there was a trespass sign, or where there was not, he would be technically guilty of trespass on United States property; and a United States judge could give him a 5-year penitentiary sentence.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. JONES. In just a moment.

Mr. BRUCE. That might be a spy whose inspection would be fatal to the very life of the Nation.

Mr. JONES. Oh, it might be; and it might also be a good, honest, patriotic American citizen in Maryland.

Section 46: Whoever shall rob another of any kind or description of personal property belonging to the United States * * * shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

In other words, if an agent of the United States should be carrying a spike belonging to the United States Government, and the Senator from Maryland should take that spike away from him and carry it off, he would be liable to a fine of $5,000 and imprisonment of 10 years in the penitentiary.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, are the absurdities to which the Senator refers justification for a further absurdity?

Mr. JONES. I do not think these are absurdities.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator thinks those punishments would be perfectly legitimate under the circumstances he has detailed, does he?

Mr. JONES. I do not think they would ever be imposed by any Federal judge. That is what I think.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would not give him the power, even, to impose them.

Mr. JONES. But he has the power.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would not give it to him if I had the opportunity.

Mr. JONES. There are many other statutes here of the same kind. I cite these merely as illustrations. No one has ever heard of any Federal judge exercising such power as is given here. I am citing these statutes merely as a sort of answer to the suggestions made here that because a judge has the power to impose a 5-year penalty he will impose it on a man who may have a pint of liquor in his possession, or in his home, or something of that sort. I do not fear anything of that kind myself upon the part of the Federal judges of the country.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, does the Senator say that he does not know of any penalties of this atrocious character that have been inflicted upon people by Federal judges?

Mr. JONES. No; I did not say that I did not know of any such penalties. I do not know of judges inflicting such penalties for trivial offenses.

Mr. REED of Missouri. But, of course, according to the Senator's theory and the theory of many gentlemen, the possession of liquor is not a trivial offense. That is an offense against God and reason and nature.

Mr. JONES. No; the Senator has absolutely no reason to think that the Senator from Washington suggests anything of that kind.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I am going by what the Senator suggests in his bill.

Mr. JONES. The Senator has not heard very much of this discussion, or very much that has been presented here with respect to it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I do not need to.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington has used all his time.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I had intended to address myself to this bill and to the general subject of prohibition.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I desire to present an amendment. I do not like to present the amendment in the absence of most of the Senators; and, if the Senator does not object, I will suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Deneen	Hayden	Reed, Mo.
Barkley	Dill	Heflin	Reed, Pa.
Bayard	Edge	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Bingham	Fess	Jones	Robinson, Ind.

Vandenberg	Walsh, Mont.	Watson

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is unavoidably absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. NORRIS. My colleague the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] is unavoidably detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. JONES. I wish to state that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] is detained in committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield while I submit a unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I will yield with the understanding that it does not come out of my little allotment of time.

Mr. CURTIS. It will not be taken out of the Senator's time.

THE RADIO COMMISSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed agreement.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That on Tuesday, February 19, 1929, at not later than 6 o'clock p. m., the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and that at the evening session, which shall not continue later than 11 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4937) continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I would like to inquire whether that bill has the sanction at this point of the steering committee of the Senate, which, I learned on Thursday, is of very high authority in this body?

Mr. CURTIS. The evening session arranged for is for a special purpose. The radio bill is not on the list, but ought to be disposed of by the 21st, I think, and the steering committee would put it on the list, I dare say, at the next meeting; but we would like to have a night session to consider it. All sides have agreed to the proposal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wonder if I might inquire of the Senator whether we might not hope for some night sessions to do some of the other things we ought to do?

Mr. CURTIS. I really hoped for some night sessions beginning next week, but I wanted to get this bill out of the way first.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There may be an anticipation of other night sessions?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and modified.

Mr. REED of Missouri addressed the Senate. After having spoken in all for 25 minutes—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I move that the Senator be allowed to proceed. Soon the Senate will hear that entrancing voice no more.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator can not do that.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I shall have to make the point of order against the motion. It is contrary to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is sustained.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Missouri may proceed for 20 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I am sorry that the request is made. The Senate has entered into a solemn agreement with reference to this measure. If we extend the time for one, we must do it for others, so I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. BLAINE. I want to repeat the unanimous-consent request proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and to say that the larger portion of the time to-day was taken up by others upon a question which was not before the Senate. If Senators are going to insist upon depriving a Senator of the right to debate under these circumstances, I want to serve notice now that as long as I am in the Senate there will never again be unanimous consent granted to such an agreement proposed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. First, I want to say that I have not the slightest objection to the request for unanimous consent, and would be glad to yield the floor for that purpose. I do want, however, before this bill is voted on to speak for about five minutes. Now, I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I merely want to make a suggestion. The debate upon this matter has opened up in a way now that has become interesting. I do not wish to interfere with the program, but at the same time I should like to ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent agreement be vacated and that we have an opportunity on Monday to go into this question and discuss it as it ought to be discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to vacating the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there was the opportunity all of yesterday afternoon to discuss this amendment; there was the opportunity to do so for three hours to-day. There is much other legislation that is pressing and on which it is very desirable to secure action before the session shall close. I dislike very much to be in this position, but as the one in charge of the bill I feel that I shall have to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield so that I may ask the Senator from Washington a question.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I very gladly yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The unanimous-consent agreement only limits the time of speeches. Would not the Senator agree to modify the unanimous-consent agreement provided consent could be obtained to vote at a fixed time on Monday?

Mr. BORAH. I would not like to agree to that. If the bill is going to be debated, let us have a full debate, what they call in England a "dress-suit" debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to say this, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will yield.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I gladly yield.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yesterday afternoon I had an important committee meeting, and I inquired of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] whether he expected to get a vote yesterday afternoon. He said he did not. I then said that I wanted to make some remarks on the bill, but at that time I was obliged to attend to my committee work. I was utterly surprised to find that, without any roll call or without any notice, this unanimous-consent agreement had been made, although I was in the building in company with the other members of the committee. I do not want, however, to present any petition, only I should like at some time to finish what I have to say.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to ask how the Chair construes the unanimous-consent agreement? It provides, apparently, that each Senator may speak for 15 minutes upon the pending bill, and not more than once nor longer than 10 minutes upon any amendment proposed thereto. Does that mean 10 minutes upon each amendment?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Necessarily it does. If that be true, how long a time did the Senator from Missouri occupy?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has occupied 15 minutes on the bill, and 10 minutes on the pending amendment. He has more time on any other amendment which may come before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then, Mr. President, as there is no other amendment before the Senate, I am going to offer such an amendment.

Mr. JONES. There can be but one amendment pending at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a pending amendment before the Senate not as yet disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator from Missouri does not need to confine himself in his 10 minutes to one single amendment. I can move to amend the pending amendment, and in that fashion the Senator from Missouri will have the right to speak 10 minutes longer. Then some other Senator can repeat the process until the Senator from Missouri gets an opportunity to conclude his speech. It does not make any difference whether we agree with the Senator from Missouri or not, he ought to have the opportunity to present his views and to debate the question, and I think that we in this body ought not to be guilty of shutting the Senator off from adequately presenting his views upon the question.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, before I yield further, I desire to ask may I not yield the floor? I have not said a word upon the pending bill. May I not yield the floor, with the understanding that it will not prejudice my right to be heard later? I have not made a speech, and I do not want to inject a speech into the middle of somebody's else speech, but I do want to speak for five minutes before the final vote.

Mr. BRUCE. I rise to a point of order. Are there not two committee amendments pending or is but one amendment pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only one amendment is pending at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. If there were two amendments pending, may I inquire would the Senator from Missouri then have a right to proceed 10 minutes longer upon the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There can be only one amendment pending at a time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well. If a substitute were offered for the amendment, or an amendment to it, upon that substitute or amendment, would the Senator from Missouri have the right to proceed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He would.

Mr. JOHNSON. Very well. What is the pending amendment, please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is on page 1, line 3, to insert the words "in a criminal prosecution."

Mr. JOHNSON. That is, the italicized words "in a criminal prosecution"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move to amend that by adding after the word "prosecution" the words "after the first offense."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri may speak on that amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it does seem to me that the Senator ought not to be put to such subterfuges as have been suggested. The Senator from Washington will recall that I apprehended there might arise just such a situation as this when he proposed his unanimous-consent agreement yesterday. I asked for a roll call, but the response was that there was no necessity under the usage for a roll call, because no time was fixed for a final vote. The whole matter may be simplified if the Senator from Washington will not persist in his objection, for it is not going to accomplish anything, as can readily be seen from the proposition of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and there will be other substitutes, doubtless, and other amendments, and so we will go on under that process of subterfuge.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, there is no one that I enjoy hearing speak more than I do the Senator from Missouri. I would have made the same objection to anyone else whether on this side of the Chamber or the other, whether for prohibition or against it. If the Senate, knowing the situation that confronts us, desires to abrogate the unanimous-consent agreement which we made in the usual and customary way, I do not feel that I should set myself up against the judgment of the Senate. If, therefore, we can now reach a unanimous-consent agreement that will be observed in the future and that will give us more time and will be satisfactory, I shall not object to it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I shall object to vacating the unanimous-consent agreement, but, in view of the fact that the Senator from Missouri did raise the question—and I was in the chair when it was raised—as to what the purpose was and whether a vote would be had, and he left the Chamber and was out while the suggestion was made to limit debate, I think that we ought to make a modification to the extent of permitting the Senator from Missouri to conclude his speech.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no reason why, if we are going to have debate, that the debate should not be had under such circumstances as that every Senator will feel free. The Senator from Missouri, if he is going to discuss the matter, ought not to be interrupted every few minutes to be told that his time has expired, and neither should other Senators. I think that there has been raised a question which will justify debate, and perhaps it is as important as some other measures which might be postponed by reason of such debate. I suggest, therefore, that we vacate the unanimous-consent agreement, and take a recess until 12 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from Washington that, rather than pursue that course, we allow the Senator from Missouri to have 20 minutes additional—certainly I have no objection to that—and then allow any Senator who wishes to reply to him to have an opportunity to do so. If the Senator from Idaho should like to speak, let him have 20 minutes additional. He would have 15 minutes on the bill under the agreement as it stands and 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. GLASS. But other Senators might want an additional 20 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Other Senators could speak 15 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on the amendment. I think that would settle the wrangle we are in, without abandoning the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES. Just a moment. Mr. President, I have certainly not thought of taking snap judgment against anybody. I conferred with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] on yesterday before submitting the request, and they were the only two so far as I knew who expected to speak on the bill. The Senator from Missouri did speak to me, as he said, but I did not gather from the conversation whether he intended to speak on the bill.

I myself do not propose to take advantage of anybody. If we can reach some agreement as to a time when we might proceed under the 10-minute rule again, I am perfectly willing, if the Senate so desires, to vacate the unanimous-consent agreement we have made, if that can be conditioned on taking a recess to-night until Monday.

Mr. BLEASE. I merely wish to make a suggestion, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. BLEASE. The unanimous-consent agreement went into effect at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The Senate met at 12 o'clock, and I presume every Senator thought that the debate was going to be continued on the pending bill; but the distinguished Senator from Alabama delivered an address, which was very entertaining, for possibly an hour and a half; after that the Senator from Connecticut made some remarks. The result was that nearly the entire time up to 3 o'clock was taken up with foreign matter, and Senators who desired to discuss the pending measure were deprived of an opportunity of doing so. When the hour of 3 o'clock arrived, the unanimous-consent agreement went into effect. It seems to me that at least the two hours and a half which were consumed in the discussion of other subjects should be added to the time when the limitation of debate went into effect.

I say now that if the Senator from Missouri shall not be permitted to go on, so far as I am concerned, if I am here—and I hope to be—there will be no other unanimous-consent agreements entered into at this session up to 12 o'clock on the 4th day of March.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word further.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I wish to submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask that the existing unanimous-consent agreement may be vacated; that when the Senate concludes its business to-night it shall take a recess until 12 o'clock on Monday; and that after 4 o'clock p. m. on Monday next debate on the bill and any amendment thereto shall be limited to 10 minutes to each Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Washington if it is his desire now to take a recess?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no. I should like to have the Senator from Missouri proceed.

Mr. WATSON. The understanding is that the Senator from Missouri will proceed now.

Mr. REED of Missouri resumed his speech. After having spoken for some time he said:

Mr. President, I do not want to conclude my remarks to-night if the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is willing to take a recess at this time.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, without meaning to take the Senator from the floor, and with his permission, I should like to make a report on a privileged matter from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. REED of Missouri. May I just make one statement before I conclude for to-day? I shall ask the privilege of the floor when the Senate reconvenes on Monday to continue my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[The speech of Mr. REED of Missouri is published entire beginning on page 3637.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in connection with this particular day's debate I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from to-day's Baltimore Sun; and I desire to read just two sentences from it:

The Senate is trifling with a matter of grave importance when it sidetracks reapportionment for a bill to increase penalties for violation of the Volstead law. Complaint over the disrespect shown for dry laws comes with ill grace from a legislative body which has refused session after session to obey a plain mandate of the Constitution.

I ask to have the entire editorial printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REAPPORTIONMENT

The refusal of the Senate thus far to take up the reapportionment bill bodes ill for that measure. Once before a bill designed to obey the Constitution in the matter of reapportionment was killed in the upper body after passage by the House.

This present danger is more regrettable because of the great opposition in the House to decrease of representation in that body from several States lagging in population. It was only under the demand of determined voices from States which now suffer gross discrimination in representation in Congress that the House was induced to pass the bill. To have overcome that unwillingness to obey the Constitution and do justice, and then find the Senate indifferent to its duty, is one of the most unfortunate developments of this session. Whenever the subject has arisen in the Senate that body has assumed an apologetic attitude for its previous refusal to agree to reapportionment, and has given every indication that it would not make the same mistake again. But the indifference now shown in the matter is more significant than all the words that have been uttered.

The Senate is trifling with a matter of grave importance when it sidetracks reapportionment for a bill to increase penalties for violation of the Volstead law. Complaint over the disrespect shown for dry laws comes with ill grace from a legislative body which has refused session after session to obey a plain mandate of the Constitution. Continued opposition to passage of the bill by the Senate would be a gross betrayal of its sworn duty.

ARMY PROMOTIONS

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, for the past two years the Senate has heard rumbles of a disagreement in the Committee on Military Affairs over what is known as the promotion situation growing out of the hump in the promotion list created at the close of the World War because 6,000 officers were all taken in at once with substantially the same amount of commissioned experience. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] represented a school of thought which was quite contrary to that which seems to me and some other members of the committee to be the proper way of dealing with the matter. There have been for more than a year on the calendar of the Senate two bills, one representing his thought and reported out by a scant majority of the Military Affairs Committee, and one representing what the rest of us thought was right, also reported out by a scant majority.

It was perfectly evident that our opposition to one another's ideas was going to prevent relief to that great throng of officers who, when they came into the Army, were rightfully encouraged to look for reasonable promotion during their service. Matters reached such an impasse that finally the Secretary of War came before us to appeal to us to drop all of our smaller differences and try to agree upon some proper measure of promotion based upon length of service, and not upon waiting for one's predecessor on the promotion list to die or resign or retire.

I want to say on behalf of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and those Senators who agreed with him that they have met us most fairly, and I am happy now to be able to report unanimously to the Senate from the Committee on Military Affairs amendments to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3269) providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to the amendment of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 3269 were read, as follows:

That the aggregate number of commissioned officers of the Regular Army and Philippine Scouts on the active list shall not exceed the number now or hereafter expressly authorized by law, and all such officers, except officers of the Medical Department, chaplains, and professors, shall be designated as promotion-list officers. The number of promotion-list officers in each of the grades below brigadier general shall be such as results from the operation of the promotion system prescribed in this act, and shall not be otherwise limited: Provided, That except as otherwise in this act prescribed, the aggregate number of promotion-list colonels and lieutenant colonels shall not exceed 15 per cent, and the number of promotion-list field officers shall not be less than 26 per cent, of the maximum aggregate number of promotion-list officers authorized by law.

SEC. 2. That all promotions under this act shall be subject to such examination as shall have been required by authority of law. Promotion-list officers in the grades of second lieutenant, first lieutenant, captain, major, and lieutenant colonel shall, except as otherwise prescribed in this act, be promoted to the respective next higher grade when their names appear first in their grade upon the promotion list, and when, under provisions of this act, they are credited with 3, 10, 15, 20, and 26 years of service, respectively. The promotion of majors credited with 20 years of service shall be deferred so long as necessary to prevent the limitation of 15 per cent hereinbefore prescribed for the combined grades of colonel and lieutenant colonel being exceeded, and no officer shall be promoted to the grade of colonel until he shall have served at least two years in the grade of lieutenant colonel: Provided, That promotion-list officers not promoted from the grade of major under the foregoing provisions shall be promoted to the grade of lieutenant colonel when, under provisions of this act, they are credited for promotion purposes with not less than 20 years of service and are also not less than 52 years of age, and officers so promoted under this proviso shall be promoted to the grade of colonel when credited with 26 years of service, or as soon thereafter as they shall have served not less than two years in the grade of lieutenant colonel and shall be additional numbers in the grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel and shall not be counted in computing the maximum percentage hereinbefore prescribed for such grades: Provided further, That in the application of the foregoing proviso each United States Military Academy class shall be treated as a unit as of the average age of the members of the class. In so far as necessary to maintain the prescribed minimum of field officers, captains credited with less than 15 years of service shall be promoted in the order of their standing upon the promotion list.

SEC. 3. That flying officers commissioned in the Air Corps in the grades of first lieutenant and captain shall be promoted to the respective next higher grades when credited for promotion under provisions of this act with 7 and 12 years of service, respectively. When promotion as hereinbefore prescribed in this and preceding sections of this act fails to provide the Air Corps with the per cent of colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors hereinafter specified flying officers commissioned in the Air Corps shall be promoted in the order of their relative standing on the promotion list so that the number of Air Corps officers in the grade of colonel shall be 3 per cent, in the grade of lieutenant colonel 4 per cent, and in the grade of major 18 per cent, respectively, of the total number of officers commissioned in the Air Corps, fractions being disregarded in computing said numbers. Flying officers of the Air Corps promoted to the grades of lieutenant colonel and colonel under provisions of this section shall be additional numbers therein and shall not be counted in computing the maximum percentage for such grades hereinbefore prescribed in this act. Any flying officer of the Air Corps promoted under provisions of this section who may become surplus in the grade of major, lieutenant colonel, or colonel by reason of a subsequent decrease in the total number of officers commissioned in the Air Corps shall be an additional number in his grade in the Air Corps until absorbed. The term "flying officer" as used in this act shall be construed to mean a flying officer as defined by section 13a of the national defense act as amended.

SEC. 4. Length of service for promotion under this act shall be computed as follows:

First, each promotion-list officer originally commissioned in the Regular Army prior to July 2, 1920, without prior Federal commissioned service, whose active commissioned service shall have been continuous since acceptance of original commission, shall be credited with the full period from the date of such original commission;

Second, each promotion-list officer commissioned in the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts prior to July 2, 1920, who is not included in the category defined in the preceding subparagraph shall be credited with a length of service equal to that accredited to the officer of said category whose name appears nearest above his on the promotion list;

Third, each promotion-list officer originally commissioned in the grade of second lieutenant in the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts after July 1, 1920, shall be credited only with the period of service from the date of such original commission: Provided, That each promotion-list officer not included in any of the foregoing categories and each officer of said categories whose original relative position on the promotion list shall have been changed or affected by sentence of court-martial, by special enactment, by discontinuity of his active service, or by suspension from promotion, shall be credited with such length of service for promotion as the Secretary of War shall determine to be appropriate to his relative position on the promotion list.

SEC. 5. That all prior statutory provisions governing the termination of active service of officers shall, except as otherwise specifically prescribed in this act, continue in full force and effect and be administered as now provided by law: Provided, That, excepting section 190, Revised Statutes of the United States, all laws or parts of laws restricting the freedom of persons on the retired lists of the Regular Army, who are otherwise eligible to accept any civil office or employment, or affecting their retired status or retired pay on account of holding any civil office or employment and receiving the compensation thereof, are hereby repealed in so far as they apply to said persons; and any such person who may be employed in any civil office or position under authority of the United States shall be entitled to receive the full compensation allotted to such office or position without regard to such person's retired pay: Provided further, That when any officer of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts shall have served 35 years or more, including all service counted toward eligibility for voluntary retirement under existing laws, including this act, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the unlimited retired list: Provided further, That when any officer of the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts shall have served 40 years as a commissioned officer in active service in the Army of the United States, or is 60 years old, he may, without action of a retiring board, be retired from active service at the discretion of the President, and placed upon the unlimited retired list: Provided further, That in computing eligibility for voluntary retirement of officers of the Army each officer shall, in addition to all service now credited under existing laws, be credited with additional constructive credit equal to one-half the time, if any, that he shall have been actually detailed to duty involving flying, except in time of war: Provided further, That flying officers of the Air Corps who become physically disqualified for all flying duty shall be eligible for retirement for physical disability.

SEC. 6. That during each fiscal year promotion-list officers who were originally appointed in the Regular Army or Philippine Scouts prior to July 1, 1920, or as of that date, may file applications to be transferred from the active list in the manner hereinafter provided and the President is hereby authorized, on or before June 30 of each fiscal year, to designate for transfer from the active list from among such applicants who shall have been recommended for such transfer by a board of general officers such number as shall not exceed 1 per cent of the maximum authorized number of promotion-list officers of all grades.

Officers designated for transfer from the active list under provisions of this section shall be ordered to their homes as soon as practicable after such designation and, upon expiration of such leave of absence with full pay as may be granted under existing law, shall be transferred to the unlimited retired list with retired pay at the rate of 2½ per cent of active pay, multiplied by the number of complete years of service, but not exceeding 30 years, with which credited for pay purposes, excepting non-Federal service: Provided, That each computation of service and pay of an officer designated for transfer from the active list under this section shall be as of the date of such designation: Provided further, That any officer originally appointed in the Regular Army as of July 1, 1920, at an age greater than 45 years, may if he so elects, in lieu of retired pay at the rate hereinbefore provided, receive retired pay at the rate of 4 per cent of active pay for each complete year of commissioned service in the United States Army, not exceeding 75 per cent of active pay.

Officers designated in any fiscal year for transfer from the active list shall, for purposes of computations under provisions of this act, be deemed to have been transferred from the active list during the fiscal year in which designated, notwithstanding the deferment of separation as herein authorized.

SEC. 7. That on and after the date of the passage of this act, Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired, shall have the rank of lieutenant general on the retired list of the United States Army, and shall receive pay and allowances determined as provided by law for other officers on the retired list, and based upon the active pay and allowances provided for lieutenant generals during the World War. Said Hunter Liggett shall also be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances and the pay and allowances of a major general, retired, from March 21, 1921, to the date of the passage of this act. Said Robert L. Bullard shall also be entitled to receive an amount equal to the difference between such pay and allowances and the pay and allowances of a major general, retired, from January 15, 1925, to the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 8. That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint any commissioned officer of the Army who served in the Army of the United States during the World War, whose service during that war was creditable, and who has been or hereafter may be retired according to law, a rank on the retired list at the highest rank held by him during the World War, but, except as otherwise specified in section 7 of this act, not above the rank of major general: Provided, That no increase of retired pay and allowances shall result from the provisions of this section.

SEC. 9. That except as specifically provided in this act, nothing therein shall be held or construed to discharge any officer from the Regular Army or to deprive him of the commission which he holds therein, or to reduce the rank or pay, active or retired, of any officer therein. All laws and parts of laws, in so far as the same are inconsistent herewith or are in conflict with any of the provisions hereof, are hereby repealed.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to regulate promotion in the Army, and for other purposes."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. While it is a unanimous report that is submitted to the Senate, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] has a further amendment which he asks to offer to add to the bill, and upon which further amendment I shall speak very briefly when he offers it.

In reporting this as a privileged matter—because it is an amendment to an amendment of the House and would not in any way displace the unfinished business—I move that the Senate agree to the amendment of the House with the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if the amendment is a lengthy one?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It is about eight pages long.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator make a brief analysis of it, so that those of us who are interested in the bill may understand what is effected by its terms? As the Senator will recall, I was formerly a member of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and was greatly interested in the subject and had prepared a bill relating to it.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It was a matter of great regret to all of us when the Senator from Arkansas withdrew from that committee.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, to begin with, this bill does not propose to increase the aggregate of officers of the Army. That aggregate is now fixed at 12,000 officers. This bill does not propose to increase it. The bill does not increase the pay of the several ranks; it leaves the pay act of 1922 unchanged. It provides a system of promotion by length of commissioned service, including in that commissioned service the period between the armistice and the going into effect of the national defense law of 1920, because we did not want to discriminate among officers in accordance with the rapidity of demobilization.

The bill provides that a second lieutenant whose service is otherwise creditable shall be promoted to first lieutenant after 3 years of commissioned service; to captain after a total of 10 years of commissioned service; to major after 15 years of commissioned service; to lieutenant colonel after 20 years of commissioned service; and to colonel after 26 years of commissioned service. There is no throttle in that system of promotion except after the grade of major. It is obviously necessary, in order to prevent the whole Army from being colonels, to put a throttle on somewhere.

Mr. NORRIS. It is necessary to have a few privates.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We have got to have privates; ours is not the kind of an Army where all can be generals.

So with the recommendation of the War Department—and I might say this bill meets the full approval of the War Department—the throttle is put on between major and lieutenant colonel. It is provided that the total number of promotion-list colonels and lieutenant colonels shall not in the aggregate exceed 15 per cent of the total commissioned strength of the Army. The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] very properly called attention to the unfairness that that would work upon the older captains who were taken in from the World War Army and who were commissioned in 1920. He pointed that that throttling provision would operate to prevent their ever getting their colonelcy, and probably their lieutenant colonelcy, before they were retired at 64 years of age. So, in collaboration with him, a proviso was worked out that majors who had the requisite 20 years' service should, if they had reached the age of 52, be promoted to lieutenant colonel and carried as extra numbers; that they should not dislodge any officer ahead of them on the promotion list, but would get permanent appointments as extra numbers; and, similarly, after 26 years of service and after a minimum of 2 years as lieutenant colonels, they should get their colonelcy and be carried as extra colonels.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will that affect a large number of officers?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. It will affect, I think, approximately 800. The Senator from Alabama will correct me if I am wrong. That took care of the officers in the general branches of the Army, but still left unsolved a serious problem in the Air Corps, because the Air Corps, according to its tables of organization, needs a considerable number of colonels and lieutenant colonels, and yet almost all of Air Corps officers are youngsters who came into the Army in the war time and in the natural course of events would not get to be field officers for a good many years.

In the first place, it was somewhat of an injustice to the Air Corps officers, although they are young, and, in the next place, it was a very serious injustice to the Air Corps as a unit because it deprived it of the higher commands that were necessary, and we should see such spectacles as majors in the Air Corps exercising commands that were appropriate for colonels, and in charge of millions of dollars of Government property, and very large bodies of men. It was right that some method be devised to take care of them. So we did it in two ways:

First, by accelerating their promotion from captain to major, and allowing that to occur at the end of 12 years' service instead of 15 years; and next allowing promotion from first lieutenant to captain at the end of 7 years instead of 10 years, as for the remainder of the Army.

Then, further, we provided that for the Air Corps there should be 3 per cent of its officers in the grade of colonel, and if they did not reach that grade naturally, as a part of the whole promotion list, then they should be promoted to it and be carried as extra numbers, but their appointment would be permanent and not temporary; and, similarly, that 4 per cent of the Air Corps officers should be lieutenant colonels and 18 per cent should be majors.

Then, having reached that point, we allowed in the computation of service for retirement, and other purposes in the field, time and a half for such time as flying officers were actually engaged in flying duty. That was an effort by the committee to recognize the increased hazard of flying in peace times over the hazard that confronts the other branches of the service.

Furthermore, in order to avoid injustices in retirement, we have provided that any officer of the Army may retire at any time during his commissioned service, but, instead of getting full 75 per cent retired pay, he will receive 2½ per cent of his base pay for each year of his commissioned service with a maximum of 75 per cent.

We have also provided that officers with 35 years' experience may voluntarily retire on their own application, receiving the full 75 per cent retired pay.

We have also provided that after an officer reaches the age of 60 he may be retired on the order of the President for unfitness or general disability. The present limit is 62 years. We have dropped that limit two years and given the President the power to order retirement, with the idea of increasing the attrition in the promotion list, speeding up the flow of promotions and helping the junior officers.

Then, Mr. President, we have carried in the bill the provision that was in the original bill as it passed the Senate giving Gen. Hunter Liggett and Gen. Robert L. Bullard, the only two commanders of American field armies in battle, the permanent grade of lieutenant general, which they held during the time they actually commanded those battle armies. It is worth while, I think, to call attention to the fact that both General Liggett and General Bullard had under their command in the World War more men than the American Nation ever had under any command at any time in any previous war of its history.

Finally, we have embodied as an additional section the essential provisions of a bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TYSON], which was passed by the Senate some time ago, allowing a brevet title, without any increase in pay to those officers who have been retired or may in the future retire, the brevet title to be the same as the highest rank they held during the World War. The Senate can scarcely understand—I myself can scarcely understand—the importance attached to that by these officers. It is a mere title; it is a mere reminder of the command they exercised during the war; it does not bring them one penny in pay or allowances, but to them it is more important than a considerable increase in the money reward which they receive from their Government.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. A question has been asked me as to whether or not the carrying of extra numbers would increase the expense. I think probably it would be wise for the Senator to explain as to that.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am glad to do so. Under the pay act of 1922 the compensation of a lieutenant colonel and a colonel and, indeed, a major is substantially the same for those who have had the periods of service specified here for promotion. I had a particular application of it in the case of a lieutenant colonel of my acquaintance, who told me while this subject was under consideration that he would be benefited by the bill and would get his promotion immediately to colonel. I asked him, "Just what difference will that make to you in a money way?" He replied, "It will make a difference of exactly $1.95 a month." That resulted from some detail in connection with the matter of allowances; but the essential base pay of the officer is just the same whether he gets the promotion or does not. So, on behalf of the committee, I want to assure the Senate that the cost of this amendment which we report will be practically nothing; it will be so slight that it is not worth paying attention to.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate agree to the amendment reported by the committee to the amendment of the House. If that motion shall be agreed to I will then move that the House amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. As was stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair inquire of the Senator if the amendment which he proposes to offer will not be in order after the vote shall be taken on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania on behalf of the committee?

Mr. BINGHAM. The amendment I desire to offer is an amendment to the committee amendment, and I think should be voted on first.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think the Senator is right in that, Mr. President.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, my amendment is that section 1 of the House amendment shall be included in the bill at the proper place. I will state briefly just what that does. Section 1 of the House amendment provides a separate promotion list for the Air Corps. That is virtually all that it does.

For many years the Air Corps has been earnestly striving to secure a separate promotion list. Casualties in the Air Corps from accident are ten times greater than those in any other branch of the Army. It is true that the other portion of the amendment as reported by the committee will correct the situation in regard to the securing of promotion after a certain length of years and without regard to the number of senior officers ahead of a particular officer, and it also provides a certain amount of benefit for the Air Corps; but it does not recognize the fact that the Air Corps in peace time labors under an entirely different kind of hazard from that under which the other branches of the Army labor. To grant them a separate promotion list would have this advantage, I believe, so far as the general psychology of the whole Army is concerned: Under the amendment as recommended by the committee, where the Air Corps is left in with the rest of the service, a captain in the Air Corps would continue alongside of a captain in the Regular Army for a period of 12 years, and then the captain in the Regular Army would continue as a captain for three years more until he became a major, whereas the man who had been alongside of him on the promotion list all these years would be suddenly promoted to the grade of major.

In other words, every time an Air Corps officer gets the advantage of this bill in the shortened length of service and the counting of flying time, it disrupts the promotion list, it makes hard feelings, it shows the rest of the Army that this man is being promoted over their heads, because the man who is interested in his own promotion studies the list and sees upon it the fact that he, Mr. C, is between Mr. B and Mr. D; and that goes on for a certain numbers of years until suddenly the man below him disappears and goes up to a higher grade.

I believe that that will have a bad effect on the Army and will cause hard feeling between the branches, whereas if we make a separate promotion list, retaining the other features of the bill, then Mr. C will not know that Mr. D has been promoted ahead of him unless he happens to be familiar with that particular case, because the lists will be separate, and when he looks for his own place in the list he will find as he goes up with the other officers that he retains exactly that place during all the years. For that reason, Mr. President, it seems to me that it is for the benefit of the entire Army, and it is also in line with what the Air Service has been seeking for a great many years, and which I believe it is entitled to.

I may say, for the benefit of the Senate, that this section of the bill has been approved repeatedly by the meetings of the National Aeronautic Association and by the convention of the American Legion.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I am sorry to have to oppose this amendment, but I believe that it is very wrong in principle.

Down to the Spanish War, and for a short time afterwards, we had separate promotion lists for every regiment, and it worked out most unjustly. Classmates at West Point found themselves two grades apart simply because there had been more resignations or deaths in one regiment than in another. They were equally meritorious; and so, back about 1900, a system of promotion by branch, with separate promotion lists in each branch, was instituted. Then it was found that as the types of war changed one branch came to be very greatly increased, like the Field Artillery, and another one did not increase, like the Cavalry, and classmates at West Point found themselves with just as much disparity as before, through no fault of one or merit of the other; and when the national defense act was passed it was decided to consolidate into one promotion list all the officers of the Army in combatant or staff service—that is, all except chaplains and doctors and dentists and veterinarians.

It was pointed out, of course, that the officer on duty with mounted troops was in greater danger, and probably had more accidents, and died more often, than the officer who was a quartermaster officer, sitting in the War Department; and yet, after a great deal of thought, Congress followed the advice of the War Department not to take that into account, but to prevent the greater injustices by consolidating all the officers into one branch.

This, I think—and the majority of the Military Affairs Committee agrees with me—would be a distinct step backward. It is dangerous, of course, to fly an airplane in peace time, but it is not exactly safe to go on with a battery of Field Artillery at a gallop. I have done both, and I think I felt in greater danger with the galloping battery than with the smoothly flying airplane. I think I was more scared at one time than the other, although I was properly scared at both times, and always will be. But you can not make separate lists just because of some differences in degree of danger; and, furthermore, they do not need it in the Air Corps in view of the provisions we have put in this bill that allow them this promotion as extra numbers.

That was the recommendation of the Secretary of War, so as to provide that within their own branch they should always have a supply of officers going forward to keep up their full percentage of field grades.

In substance, it is nothing more than a sentimental gesture to give them this separate promotion list. The practical benefits of it are all included in the committee amendment intentionally, purposely, so that they should have those practical benefits, but whatever we might do sentimentally to please the Air Corps by creating a separate list would do far greater damage to the rest of the Army by giving the impression that the Air Corps had been picked out for favoritism.

Therefore I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I should just like to call attention to the fact that the rest of the bill certainly does pick out the Air Corps for favoritism, in that it permits promotion to go faster in the Air Corps than in the rest of the Army; and the argument which the Senator has used about two classmates at West Point will apply in his amendment more bitterly than it will apply in the amendment which I have proposed, because those two classmates will be in separate lists, and will not know it when they get separated.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. That is true, Mr. President; but it will be cured as time goes on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BINGHAM] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment reported by the committee to the House amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the House amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to regulate promotion in the Army, and for other purposes."

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and request a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE, IOWA-NEBRASKA

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on behalf of my colleague [Mr. HOWELL], who is ill, I desire to ask the Senate to take up and pass a bill which has been unanimously reported, which simply extends the time for building a bridge that has been heretofore authorized. The bill has received the unanimous approval of the committee and of the department. It is Senate bill 5664.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I know of no objection to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5664) to extend the times for the commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "from," to strike out "the date of the approval hereof" and insert "May 24, 1929," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River, between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the city of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and the city of Omaha, Nebr., or either of them, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from May 24, 1929.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement, I move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being until 12 o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until Monday, February 18, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, February 16, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father everlasting, Thou who makest the mornings and the evenings to rejoice together, open for us the deeper and the broader meanings of life. We ask for the very essence of that blessing that cometh through faith and for the fullness that cometh through knowledge. Thou art not an absentee God, far, far away, but an imminent Father of love and wisdom, still at work in the hearts of Thy children. Quicken our understanding, touch our weakness, and let us even dare to chant the songs of lives which transcend their mortal years. Do Thou let the ebbing tides of the week leave us better men, more thoroughly devoted to the needs of our country and with purer passions of the human heart. May we have a restful to-morrow. Through Christ our blessed Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2695. An act for the relief of Gilliam Grissom;

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 9961. An act to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy; and

H. R. 13825. An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes.

MONTANA STATE COLLEGE

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 11510) for the relief of Montana State College and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill and Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (H. R. 11510) for the relief of Montana State College.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

F. STANLEY MILLICHAMP

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11064, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11064, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COLLECTION OF FEES FROM ROYALTIES ON PRODUCTION OF MINERALS FROM LEASED INDIAN LANDS

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8831) to provide for the collection of fees from royalties on production of minerals from leased Indian lands, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title to the bill and the Senate amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has asked unanimous consent to send it to conference, and I am obliged to object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, is it not proper to have the Senate amendment reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection.

QUARTERING OF TROOPS IN CERTAIN PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 418, to provide for the quartering in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 418

Resolved, etc., That the Director of Public Buildings and Public Parks of the National Capital is authorized to allocate such space in any public building under his care and supervision as he deems necessary for the purpose of quartering troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies to be held on March 4, 1929, but such use shall not continue after March 6, 1929. Authority granted by this resolution may be exercised notwithstanding the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved April 28, 1902, prohibiting the use of public buildings in connection with inaugural ceremonies.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana regard this as an emergency matter?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I do.

Mr. SNELL. This is the usual resolution passed under such circumstances?

Mr. ELLIOTT. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think I shall object, I understand the sole purpose of this is to care for troops that will be here during inauguration?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes; National Guard troops from the different States.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is not expected that any part of the public buildings will be set aside for any other purpose?

Mr. ELLIOTT. No.

Mr. LOZIER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to some regulations by the District of Columbia Commissioners which in effect prohibit owners of homes allowing guests to view the procession from their windows and premises. I call attention to it in order to indicate the reckless disregard of public and private rights the District Commissioners are attempting to exercise in connection with the inauguration, evidently for the benefit of persons who have concessions for places from which the parade may be viewed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HOSPITAL FOR DISABLED MINERS, UTAH

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 15732, making an additional grant of lands for a miners' hospital for disabled miners of the State of Utah, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15732, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk reported the bill and the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to do so—I objected before when the matter came up principally because I do not like this method of legislation, which is the insertion of an amendment in the Senate that is not germane. I am not disposed to press that further, but I was desirous of knowing that the acceptance of this amendment would not be ground for a precedent for similar appropriation of public lands in a number of States. I am advised now that the conditions in Arizona, as well as in Utah, are exceptional, and that this bill does not establish a precedent for all public-land States. I do not object.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. How are the conditions in Arizona exceptional to those that prevail in other States?

Mr. CRAMTON. Under the terms of the enabling act, when the Territory became a State.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In what particular were they different?

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Speaker, all of the other institutions in Arizona, as well as in Utah, were granted at least 100,000 acres of land when the States were admitted to the Union. In this particular instance, for some unexplainable reason, only 50,000 acres of land were granted, and it is not sufficient to carry out the purposes of the grant. Mining is one of the leading industries in both States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion with reference to these unanimous-consent requests, and the question put by the Speaker? I did this once or twice before but it seems that we have gotten back to the old habit again. I think it would be much better for the membership of the House, speaking for their individual records, if in instances of this kind they would ask unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and consider the amendment, and that the Speaker then should put the amendment, and the RECORD then would show that it was taken up by unanimous consent, and considered and agreed to. Instead of that the Journal will show that the Member asked unanimous consent to take the bill from the Speaker's table and agree to the amendment, and the RECORD will show that the amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent. It is just as easy for the RECORD to show that it was agreed to by the House, and that it was taken up by unanimous consent. I think that would be a much better procedure in the House than the one that we are following.

Mr. SNELL. That is practically the same request that the gentleman from Utah made.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, no; it is not. He asked to take it up and agree to the amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Is not that practically the same thing that the gentleman stated?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. No; it is not. We may give unanimous consent to take it from the Speaker's table and consider it, but it is another question as to whether we will agree to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that the request involves two affirmative propositions, one to take it up, and the other to agree to the amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Senate amendment will be considered as having been agreed to.

There was no objection.

EXPORTATION OF ARMS, ETC., IN VIOLATION OF PACT OF PARIS

Mr. KORELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have House Joint Resolution 381, to prohibit the exportation of arms, munitions, or implements of war to nations violating the pact of Paris, withdrawn from the House Committee on the Judiciary to which it has been referred, and have the same referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The chairmen of both committees have consented to the withdrawal and the rereference.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. Was the resolution properly referred in the first place? I think that is the important thing to be considered on a rereference of these matters.

The SPEAKER. The Chair at the time this resolution was before him was in some doubt, because while this refers definitely to the question of the exportation of arms, and so forth, there is a section in it which imposes a very severe penalty upon anyone who violates it. It imposes a penalty of a fine of not exceeding $10,000 and imprisonment of not exceeding two years. The Chair thought that was so important that it ought to be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary rather than by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It appears that a number of similar resolutions, however, have gone to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SNELL. Then, it is a "border-line" proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is a very close question, but inasmuch as both chairmen have agreed to the suggestion of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. KORELL] the Chair has recognized him to make this request.

Mr. SNELL. I think as a general proposition that bills and resolutions which have been properly referred in the first place, ought not to be rereferred, but with a "border-line" proposition like this, there may be exceptions.

The SPEAKER. Yes. It is a very close question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, does the matter go any further than merely an agreement between the two chairmen, or is it done with a knowledge of some other members of the respective committees?

Mr. SNELL. I understand that the Foreign Affairs Committee has already taken it up and have had a hearing upon it with the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. The Foreign Affairs Committee has a similar bill before it on which they have had hearings, but not a bill which imposes such severe penalties as this resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am reluctant to object; but I think that with bills of this nature, of large public import, where it is desired to have a rereference, the minority members should have an opportunity at least of knowing that such a plan is in progress. I understand it is satisfactory to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I was wondering in regard to the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not know.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The gentleman mentioned the number of the resolution; I do not know the title.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is a bill, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, providing an embargo on the exportation of munitions of war under certain circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill is "To prohibit the exportation of arms, munitions, or implements of war to nations violating the pact of Paris." Clearly that subject is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The only reason the Chair referred it to the Committee on the Judiciary was because there was such a heavy penalty for the violation of the statute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the request; but may I make this public statement, that I hope in the future that gentlemen who are desirous of securing these transfers from one committee to another will give the minority some notice of it before making the request, at least. If gentlemen will be kind enough to give me notice, I will try to get in touch with the minority members so that it can be taken up with the minority members before the request is ever made. I shall not object to this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon that this bill be rereferred——

Mr. DYER. I will ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw the request temporarily, so the committee may have an opportunity to look at it on Monday?

Mr. KORELL. I will be glad to do so.

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will report.

House Resolution 321

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 15430, a bill continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I present another similar resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House Resolution 322

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1781, an act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the act and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the act, the act shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the act for amendment the committee shall rise and report the act to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the act and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks with reference to the proposed $24,000,000 appropriation for prohibition enforcement, and in doing so I desire to include a letter to me from Bishop Cannon. As I referred in my remarks to the bishop, in accordance with his request, I desire to insert the letter in the RECORD, and also I desire to insert a statement from Dr. Clarence True Wilson on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, are the gentlemen in favor of the $24,000,000?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is some slight difference of opinion between them.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I think that comes within the class of requests to which I have consistently objected, and unless the gentleman can convince me to the contrary I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman I do not think this is within the class to which the gentleman has objected.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. But it comes within the class to which I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENSION OF HATCH AND SMITH-LEVER ACTS TO ALASKA

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13882, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13882, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13882) to extend the benefits of the Hatch Act and the Smith-Lever Act to the Territory of Alaska.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BEGG. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the parliamentary status of that bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a House bill with a Senate amendment. The request of the gentleman from Iowa is to take the bill from the Speaker's table and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BEGG. What is the Senate amendment?

Mr. HAUGEN. It is to strike out the word "and."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] on a matter of very great importance to the House.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs directed me to make a favorable report to the House on H. R. 8305. I made the report yesterday and I notice that no mention of it appears in the RECORD this morning. If any parliamentary reason has presented itself to the Speaker as to why the report should not be accepted I should like opportunity to discuss the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. Is it a matter of privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is a parliamentary inquiry as to why the Speaker has not referred the bill to the Union Calendar.

Mr. CRISP. Would not the best way to present the matter to the Speaker be for the gentleman from Tennessee to rise to a question of the privilege of the House?

The SPEAKER. That would not involve the privilege of the House.

Mr. CRISP. I understand this is a matter of privilege in the House itself. If he rises to a question of privilege in the House and presented the matter the Speaker ought to bring it before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in presenting a question of personal privilege the Member is not required, in the first place, to make a motion, but must state the reason which would give him general privilege.

Mr. CRISP. Does not that apply to a case of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. It is specifically held that it does not apply in the case of personal privilege, but it does apply to a privileged resolution. I read from section 734 of the Manual:

In presenting a question of personal privilege the Member is not required, in the first instance, to make a motion or offer a resolution, but such is not the rule in presenting a case involving the privilege of the House.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, is it a parliamentary inquiry that is propounded to the Speaker as to why he did so?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. Of course, it is the duty of the Chair to refer bills to the appropriate calendar if they are regularly reported from the committee. In this case the Chair has some doubt and has not referred the bill to the Union Calendar. The Chair will be glad to hear a discussion of the matter, as the Chair regards it as of much importance, on which there are no precedents.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs met in the regular committee room on Thursday, which was the regular meeting day of the committee.

The committee for a period of years has held out Tuesdays and Thursdays as regular meeting days of the committee, and by mutual understanding of the membership these are our regular days, and that information is carried in various publications.

The Congressional Directory lists a number of committees and states their regular meetings day, under the remark—

Committees other than those mentioned meet upon the call of the chairmen.

In this list occurs the Committee on Military Affairs, listing its regular meeting days as Tuesdays and Thursdays. The Committee on Military Affairs also publishes a little pamphlet which contains the names of the members of the committee and the various subcommittees, and on the front page of the pamphlet appears the following under the head, "Regular meetings":

Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.30 a. m. and on the call of the chairman.

Accordingly, on Thursday, last, the committee assembled in its committee room. A quorum was present and the chairman was absent. The ranking member of the committee called the meeting to order. I think it may be well for me at this place to read for the information of the Speaker the minutes of the committee. I read:

The Committee on Military Affairs met in regular session Thursday, February 14, in the appointed committee room. The meeting was called to order by Mr. WURZBACH, the ranking majority member, presiding in the absence of the chairman. The roll was called, and the following members answered to their names:

Mr. Wurzbach, Mr. Reece, Mr. Speaks, Mr. Wainwright, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Quin, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Wright, Mr. Boylan (proxy), Mr. Garrett, Mr. McSwain, Mr. Hill, and Mr. Chapman.

The chairman announced, 13 members having answered to their names, a quorum was present, and the meeting opened for the consideration of business.

Mr. REECE was designated as acting secretary to record the proceedings of the meeting, the regular clerk being absent. On motion, a committee of three members was appointed to notify the chairman that a quorum was present in the committee room, this being the regular meeting day of the committee; that there was business to be transacted by the committee; and that the chairman be requested to preside. This committee reported, after repairing to the office of the chairman, that he was not there, but that his secretary was advised of the object of the committee's visit, and the chairman's secretary stated she would endeavor to get in communication with him. She later advised she had done so and that he was on his way to the office. The chairman did not appear in the committee room during the meeting.

The following bills were favorably reported by unanimous vote:

H. R. 15703, H. R. 11105, H. R. 17095, H. R. 16408, H. R. 17034, H. R. 12960, H. R. 15562, H. R. 14449, H. R. 12333, S. 4461, H. R. 15209, H. R. 9238, H. R. 12674, H. R. 13052, H. R. 13872, H. R. 14021, H. R. 14137, H. R. 14723, H. R. 15405, H. R. 15655, H. R. 15656, H. R. 15686, H. R. 16364, H. J. Res. 339, H. J. Res. 362, H. R. 16258, H. R. 16291, H. R. 16685, H. R. 16732, H. Mr. WURZBACH then relinquished the chair to Mr. REECE, the next ranking majority member, and moved to reconsider the motion by Mr. HILL to report H. R. 8305, with the recently submitted recapture amendments, without recommendation, which had been adversely acted upon by the committee on February 7. The secretary called the roll. The following members voted "aye":

Ayes, 11: Mr. Wurzbach, Mr. Reece, Mr. Speaks, Mr. Wainwright, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Wright, Mr. Garrett, Mr. Hill, Mr. Chapman, and Mr. Boylan (proxy).

The following member voted "nay":

Nay, 1: Mr. Quin.

Whereupon the Chair declared the motion to reconsider had prevailed.

Mr. QUIN then made the point of order that two-thirds were required to reconsider the motion. The Chair overruled the point of order. Mr. WURZBACH resumed the chair.

Mr. REECE moved that the committee report H. R. 8305 with the amendments agreed upon by the Muscle Shoals subcommittee and the recently submitted recapture amendments, as amended, to the House with a favorable recommendation. The roll was called on Mr. REECE's motion, and the following members voted "aye":

Ayes 11: Mr. Wurzbach, Mr. Reece, Mr. Speaks, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Wright, Mr. Garrett, Mr. McSwain, Mr. Hill, Mr. Chapman, and Mr. Boylan (proxy).

The following Members voted "nay":

Nays 2: Mr. Wainwright and Mr. Quin.

The Chair declared the motion carried.

The committee directed Mr. REECE to submit the report on H. R. 8305 to the House.

The committee, upon motion of Mr. WAINWRIGHT, voted to have hearings on H. R. 14038 and the war history bill by Mr. ANDREWS at its next regular meeting, Tuesday, February 19, at 10.30 o'clock. Thereupon the committee adjourned.

B. CARROLL REECE,
Acting Secretary.

The above three pages is a correct report of the proceedings of the committee, and the original copy is signed by 11 of the 12 members present. The other member, I understand, agrees that the proceedings are correctly reported.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice in that report a statement that one or two members were present by proxy. Just what is meant by "proxy"? What do you mean by members voting by proxy in a committee meeting?

Mr. REECE. Only one member was present by proxy, and in accordance with the rules of the committee he had submitted a proxy in writing and handed it to one of the members, the proxy stating how his vote should be cast. The member holding the proxy submitted it to the acting chairman to have it properly recorded before the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Was there a quorum present?

Mr. REECE. There was a quorum present without it; there were 12 present without the proxy, 11 being required to make a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, the practice in the committee for at least 12 years has always been, when bills have been considered and hearings had, and a member desired to leave the city to go home or elsewhere, who had his mind made up on that particular legislation, that the committee has always granted him the right to leave his written proxy with the chairman of the committee, directing some member to cast his vote for or against, which was done in this case, some having voted for and some against the former action taken in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. DYER. That can only be done by the unanimous consent of the committee, under the rules of the House.

Mr. REECE. There was no objection raised to the proxy, I might add incidentally.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose a proxy were given to a man to vote in his discretion. Would that be proper under your rule?

Mr. REECE. It would, under our form of procedure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In other words, if a member of the committee were not there at all but was in the city of New York, and he handed over to another member of the committee in writing authority to vote in his discretion, that would be legal under your rules?

Mr. REECE. That would be legal. Of course, as a matter of fact, there is always a direction as to how the vote shall be cast.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to interpose a point of order, but it seems to me that the question of a proxy does not enter into this question at all, and it simply befogs the issue. Since the question of a proxy has nothing to do with the point to be decided it should not be discussed at this time.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. Has this committee actually met on each Tuesday and Thursday during the session?

Mr. REECE. It has met on a majority of these days. I am not prepared to say that it has met on every one.

Mr. LUCE. The matter is of such vital consequence to other committees that I would ask the gentleman to correct us if we are wrong in supposing that there must be a call?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Let me say to the gentleman that the practice in the Committee on Military Affairs for the past 12 years has been to meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays unless by unanimous consent those days were passed over. If the committee met on Tuesday, and it were desired not to have a meeting on Thursday, by unanimous consent the Thursday meeting was passed over until the next Tuesday.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. I prefer to complete my statement, if the gentleman will permit me to do so.

Mr. HUDSON. I desire to ask a short question. During this session has the committee ever met on any of these days without a call by the chairman?

Mr. REECE. The custom has been for the clerk to send out notice of the meeting. I have one of the notices in my hand. The card which is sent out is captioned:

Notice of meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs will meet at a certain hour on a certain day. By direction of the chairman.

The card is signed by the clerk. That is not a call but merely a notice that the committee is going to meet on those days.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska and Mr. HUGHES rose.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. I should prefer to go ahead.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the gentleman a short question.

Mr. REECE. I would like to go on with my statement, and I will ask that I be permitted to do so. Strange to say there are few precedents on this question. There is one, however, of which doubtless the Speaker is aware, which is very nearly parallel to the situation presented here. This appears in Hinds' Precedents, Volume IV, paragraph 5488:

On June 7, 1906, Mr. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, proposed to report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill to supply a certain deficiency in an appropriation.

Mr. John J. Fitzgerald, of New York, made the point of order that the report was not properly authorized.

It appeared in debate, by the undisputed statement of Mr. Tawney, that the committee was not formally called together, but that a majority of the committee were present at the time and authorized the report.

On this statement the Speaker overruled the point of order.

Mr. Speaker Cannon was in the chair.

Mr. Oscar W. Underwood, of Alabama, having appealed, the appeal was laid on the table.

There are other precedents dealing with a report being submitted when some question of irregularity was charged, but so far as I have been able to ascertain the questions involved in these precedents are not on all fours with the one involved here. There is a drift in all the rulings toward permitting the report to be filed when it was authorized by a majority of the members of a committee meeting in the committee room.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. In this particular case, however, Mr. Tawney was the chairman of the committee, was he not?

Mr. REECE. He was chairman of the committee, but I can not understand how the presence or the absence of the chairman would affect the validity of the meeting of the committee.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. In the case of the meeting of the Military Affairs Committee were the absent members notified of the meeting?

Mr. REECE. They were not notified in writing, but, according to my understanding, it was generally known there was going to be a meeting on this day, it being the regular meeting day of the committee. The clerk, however, did not notify the committee members.

Mr. MAPES. As far as the gentleman knows did the absentee members have notice of the meeting and have a chance to exercise the privilege of attending or not as they saw fit?

Mr. REECE. They had constructive notice, this being the regular meeting day of the committee.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. What is the usual time of meeting of the committee in the morning?

Mr. REECE. Ten thirty.

Mr. BACON. What time did the committee meet at this time?

Mr. REECE. We met at 10.30. We were called to order at 10.30 or approximately that time.

Mr. STOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REECE. Yes.

Mr. STOBBS. On all your other regular meeting days the card which the gentleman has referred to has gone out as a notice, and on this particular day this card did not go out?

Mr. REECE. No; I am not prepared to say it has gone out on all occasions, but ordinarily it has gone out.

Mr. STOBBS. In other words, the custom is to have that card go out to each member of the committee, even if it is a meeting on a regular meeting day; is that true?

Mr. REECE. Yes; that is the general custom.

Mr. LAGUARDIA and Mr. BEGG rose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman state on how many Tuesdays and Thursdays during the present session of this Congress no meeting was held and no notice sent out?

Mr. REECE. There have been but few, if any, Tuesdays and Thursdays when we have not had meetings, except very early in the sessions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As a matter of fact, would not the records of the committee show that you had meetings on 10 of the regular days where the notice was sent out, and nine of these days, no notice having been sent out, and on three of these days the rooms of the committee were occupied by subcommittees, thereby making 10 of these days regular meetings of the committee on proper notice and 12 of these days no meetings of the full committee and no notices sent out?

Mr. REECE. I am not prepared to verify that statement.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question right on that point?

Mr. REECE. I yield to the gentleman and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I do not want to be persistent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BEGG. I should like to ask the gentleman this question: What was the reaction on the minds of the members of the committee if they received no notice on this particular day of a committee meeting? What was the customary reaction if they received no notice?

Mr. REECE. Of course, I can not give the reaction on any Member's mind except the Member speaking, and I have always——

Mr. BEGG. I will make the question easier.

Mr. REECE. No; I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. BEGG. Did the committee member report at the meeting room if there was no notice to find out if there was going to be a meeting? What has been the custom?

Mr. REECE. I have gone on the assumption that there was going to be a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs on Tuesdays and Thursdays. If I received no notice, I assumed the responsibility to check up and see if there was going to be a meeting. I think a majority of the Members have done likewise.

Mr. BEGG. Was that the common practice, that committee members if they failed to get a notice either by telephone or personal appearance at the committee room showed up just the same?

Mr. REECE. The assumption has been we would have a meeting on the designated days unless the committee had ordered otherwise.

Mr. BEGG. Then why the notice?

Mr. REECE. Merely to call the attention of the Members to the meeting of the committee, that they may not overlook it. It is on the same principle, in my judgment, as the ringing of the bells 15 minutes before the House convenes. The bells are rung merely to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the House is about to convene; but the House would convene in regular session even though the bells should not be rung.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska and Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. REECE. I yield first to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee to state whether the committee report which he has been divulging was a report of an executive meeting of the committee.

Mr. REECE. I presume this was an executive session.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am not raising the point of order.

Mr. REECE. I feel this action would meet with the approbation of the members of the committee, and that the Members of the House are entitled to the information.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. I am not raising the point of order, but I may, however, if you do not give me a chance. I simply desire to call the attention of the gentleman and the Members of the House generally to the fact that once upon a time I stood here and inadvertently, perhaps, divulged a little bit of the secrecy of an executive meeting of my committee. I was called to order and the Speaker properly rebuked me and took me off the floor momentarily, but he let me back again pretty soon. I am not going to make the point of order, but I merely wanted to call attention to it.

Mr. BEGG. One more question, if the gentleman will yield. Did any member of the committee get notice by telephone or a request by telephone or otherwise to attend the meeting?

Mr. REECE. That I can not state.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman tell us at what time this alleged meeting actually commenced doing business?

Mr. REECE. I can not state the exact time. It was between 10.30 and 11 o'clock; I think it was very shortly after 10.30.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What time did it adjourn?

Mr. REECE. It adjourned before 12 o'clock.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This was on Thursday—was there a meeting of the committee the Tuesday preceding?

Mr. REECE. A quorum was not present, and the chairman adjourned the meeting.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Any business done?

Mr. REECE. Not officially, except some of the subcommittees held meetings.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Any bills reported out on Tuesday?

Mr. REECE. A majority of the members assembled in the committee room after the committee was adjourned, and the subcommittees reached an agreement with reference to the bills that were before them.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As a matter of fact, did the meeting of members who remained in the room after the adjournment of the regular meeting—did they report any bill?

Mr. REECE. None were reported to the House.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Did that meeting of members which remained in the room after the regular meeting adjourned recess to meet on Thursday?

Mr. REECE. There is some doubt about the discussion that took place on that question, but members were generally agreed that the committee having been formally adjourned it would be best not to undertake to transact business on that day but wait until Thursday, the next regular meeting day, when the committee would reassemble.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. When I asked the question my colleague from Texas nodded his head.

Mr. WURZBACH. If the gentleman will yield, I think this is a fair statement. On Tuesday the chairman of the committee [Mr. MORIN] at 10.30 o'clock came into the committee room and announced that there was no quorum present and adjourned the meeting. Within five minutes thereafter, after the chairman announced that there was no quorum present, members came in; and my impression is that there was a quorum present within 15 or 20 minutes after the chairman had left the room. It is my recollection that at this meeting the secretary of the committee being present was directed to notify members to be present at the meeting to be held on Thursday.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That was after the regular meeting had adjourned?

Mr. WURZBACH. After Mr. MORIN had left the hall.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Could you tell me if the personnel of the committee who met on Thursday was the same as those who remained in the room on Tuesday.

Mr. REECE. Additional members were also present. Permit me to add that the committee on Thursday met as a new committee meeting and not as after a recess.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman state how many bills besides the bill that this question was raised on were reported out during the Thursday meeting?

Mr. REECE. About 30 bills. I might say that these were mostly private bills which had been passed upon by the subcommittees.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, when my colleague began his statement I thought that the point was raised on the legality of the alleged meeting that met in the committee room on Thursday, but by the questions propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], referring to the meeting on Tuesday, I am compelled to make some explanation to the House as to what was done on that day.

I appeared at the committee room at 10.30 Tuesday morning, for the reason that on Monday afternoon members of the committee had asked me on the floor of the House if we were to have a meeting on Tuesday. I informed them that there was no business that I knew of to bring before the committee, and therefore I did not see the necessity of calling the committee together on Tuesday.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORIN. In just a minute. Later in the day, or in the evening, I heard that a member of the committee had called up other members by telephone and had told them that there would be a meeting on Tuesday. I decided then that while it was not called according to the established custom of 16 years, during which I have been a member of the committee, and notwithstanding that on the day previous Mr. GLYNN, chairman of one of the subcommittees, had made arrangements with the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee to use the committee room that day for a subcommittee meeting, I concluded that I would appear, and that if there were a quorum of members present I would telephone the remaining members, and if they desired a meeting I was willing to have it.

There was no one present when I appeared in the room at 10.30 o'clock. I walked across the room to my private office, looked at a letter; then I returned to the committee room. At 10.35 o'clock Mr. GLYNN came in. Mr. WURZBACH came in also. At a quarter of 11 I asked Mr. GLYNN if he had anything particular on his mind and he said that he would like to have the committee room for a meeting of his subcommittee. I then said, "Well, there is no quorum present, and it looks as though there will not be." I then called the committee to order and requested the clerk of the committee to make a note of those who were present. As there was not a quorum present I declared the committee adjourned, and turned the room over to Mr. GLYNN for a meeting of his subcommittee. I had an appointment with the chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, to make arrangements for conferences on seven bills we had in conference.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MORIN. No; I will not yield now. I went to see Senator REED and remained at his office until about 10 minutes of 12 o'clock. I then came back to the House, and after transacting some business in the House returned to my office and was informed that after I had left that morning another subcommittee had come in and held hearings. At 20 minutes of 12 the subcommittees concluded their work, and those present decided to organize a meeting of the committee with Mr. WURZBACH acting as chairman. At 15 minutes of 12 o'clock Mr. GLYNN, chairman of the subcommittee that had a large number of bills before it, left the room.

I did not ask him whether there were any bills reported before he left or not. At 10 minutes of 12 Mr. CHAPMAN left the room. So the committee organized then in a few minutes, according to the minutes which the Speaker has in his hand, and reported out 21 bills. At 5 minutes of 12 there was a discussion as to whether or not they would take the Muscle Shoals bill up at the next meeting, and the minutes will show that on motion of a member present they agreed to recess. The motion was made by Mr. WRIGHT that the meeting recess until 10.30 o'clock Wednesday morning. After the discussion of that motion Mr. WRIGHT amended his motion to have the committee meet at 10.30 o'clock Thursday morning.

When I saw the minutes of the meeting I wrote to the Speaker making a formal protest against any of the bills reported by this meeting being placed on any calendar of the House. Now, as to the meeting on Thursday: No request was made to me by any member of the committee to have a meeting on Thursday, as has been the custom in the committee for the 16 years that I have been a member of that committee. I had knowledge of this meeting only as being a continuation of an illegal meeting by a group of committee members. I did not get to my office until about a quarter to 12 o'clock, having important matters to attend to elsewhere. In the belief that the meeting in the committee room was a continuation of the illegal meeting of Tuesday, of course, I decided not to appear in the committee room and take part in what I fully believed to be an illegal meeting.

I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs for 16 years. There has never been a meeting of that committee except by the call of the chairman, regardless of what days are set for regular hearings. The gentleman stated it has been the custom to meet on regular meeting days, Tuesdays and Thursdays, for 10 or 12 years. I shall refer to the minutes of the meetings that run back for 10 or 12 years, having examined them carefully, and give this information to the House.

In the Sixty-seventh Congress the regular meeting days were set for Tuesdays and Thursdays, and were not observed. In the second session of the Sixty-seventh Congress, beginning December 6, 1921, the chairman stated the committee would meet regularly and only meet on call. On December 7, 1922, in the Sixty-eighth Congress, it was agreed that the chairman should call all meetings. No meeting days were set, but we met always on the call of the chairman. In the Sixty-ninth Congress, when we organized the committee, and I became chairman, I presented some rules that I wished the committee to adopt by means of which I thought we might expedite business and have the members become more interested in the committee hearings. I shall refer to those later. At the first committee session in the Seventieth Congress no mention is made in the committee minutes of any fixed regular meeting days. When I became chairman of the committee at the first session of the Sixty-ninth Congress in December, I outlined my policies to the committee and asked if they would not approve and adopt them, and I shall ask the Clerk to read the minutes of that meeting.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FRIDAY, December 18, 1925.

The first meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives in the Sixty-ninth Congress was held this date in the committee room. The committee was called to order by the new chairman, Hon. JOHN M. MORIN, of Pennsylvania, at 10.40 with all the members present with the exception of Mr. Hill, of Maryland, Mr. Frothingham, and Mr. MCSWAIN. The chairman made a short statement outlining his policy as chairman, and asking the cooperation of every member. He also stated each subcommittee would be given an opportunity to consider the bills referred to each one, and would be expected to take care of any bill reported to the House when it came up for consideration.

H. F. Sedgwick was appointed clerk, William E. Murray, assistant clerk, and Raymond L. Franklin, janitor for the committee, on motion of Mr. Fisher and unanimous vote. The chairman of the various subcommittees were named as follows: Mr. MORIN, No. 1; Mr. JAMES, No. 2; Mr. RANSLEY, No. 3; Mr. Hill of Maryland, No. 4; Mr. Frothingham, No. 5; Mr. WURZBACH, No. 6; Mr. REECE, No. 7; Mr. SPEAKS, No. 8; and Mr. WAINWRIGHT, No. 9.

The chairman asked the members to notify the clerk of the committee ahead of time when it was expected to bring up any measure for consideration by the committee.

It was agreed the committee should meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.30 o'clock, on call of the chairman. The motion was made by Mr. JAMES and carried unanimously.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, agreed to by the committee, the following resolution regarding the reporting of private bills was adopted: "Resolved, That private bills which were reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs and placed on the calendar during the Sixty-eighth Congress and failed to become law, and which have been reintroduced at the present session of the Congress, be, and the same are hereby, again reported by the said committee, the new reports to be made by the members of the subcommittees having charge of private bills, and to be named by the chairman of the said subcommittee."

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORIN. Let me complete my statement.

Mr. DYER. Just one question coming out of the minutes.

Mr. MORIN. One question.

Mr. DYER. The minutes say the committee shall meet on a certain day of the week on the call of the chairman. Does the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs claim that that committee could not meet on those days or any other day unless the chairman called the meeting?

Mr. MORIN. I do not know of any rule by which they could, and I have been a member of the committee for 15 years, and there have been no meetings of the Committee on Military Affairs, to my knowledge, either on regular or irregular days, without a call from the chairman.

Mr. REECE. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. DYER. And if he never called it they never could meet.

Mr. REECE. Is it the gentleman's view that if the chairman, because of illness or some other reason, failed or refused to call a meeting of his committee that committee would be helpless to consider legislation during the Congress?

Mr. MORIN. I think the chairman would assign somebody else to call the meeting. I would under those circumstances.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORIN. Let me finish my statement.

Mr. SPEAKS. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question on that very point?

Mr. MORIN. I refuse to yield at this particular time. For information of Members of the House I read from minutes of the present Congress beginning in December the number of committee meetings held and the days on which they were held.

On the following regular meeting days of this session of Congress falling on a Tuesday or a Thursday no meetings were held by the Military Affairs Committee: December 4, December 6, December 13, December 18, January 3, January 5, January 15, and January 24—eight regular meeting days.

On the following days of this session of Congress falling on a Tuesday or a Thursday meetings were held by the full committee on the call of the chairman: December 11, December 20, January 8, January 17, January 22, January 29, January 31, February 5, and February 7—nine so-called regular meeting days.

On the following regular meeting days of this session of Congress falling on a Tuesday or a Thursday meetings were held by subcommittees of the Committee on Military Affairs: December 18, Subcommittees Nos. 3 and 5; January 15, Subcommittee No. 2; and January 24, Subcommittees Nos. 2 and 4.

On the following days of this session of Congress meetings were held by the Committee on Military Affairs on the call of the chairman on January 11, January 25, February 1, February 2, February 4, and February 7, these dates not falling on a Tuesday or a Thursday.

Now, the gentleman from Tennessee has referred to a call. The only evidence he seems to have that there are regular meeting days on this committee in the Seventieth Congress is the record of a previous Congress. Of course that can not be relied upon, because the Congressional Directory of the Sixty-eighth Congress——

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MORIN. I can not yield just now.

It is evident that it was just copied from some previous book. Before each issue of the directory is published the Joint Committee on Printing send a query to the clerk of each committee. So far as the Military Affairs Committee of the House is concerned, the clerk gives the meeting days as Tuesday and Thursday as a matter of form. As to the meeting days of the committee and the meeting days of the subcommittees in the Sixty-ninth Congress, the Congress in which we did designate Tuesdays and Thursdays on the call of the chairman, the regular meeting days are not stated except on the back: "Regular meeting days on Tuesdays and Thursdays."

Now, as to the meeting held on Thursday, I will say to the Members of the House that no request was made of me to call a meeting on that day, or to have a meeting.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Was the regular committee clerk present at this so-called "rump" meeting?

Mr. MORIN. On Tuesday?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes. Were the records of that meeting reported in the regular minute book?

Mr. MORIN. They were noted by the clerk and a memorandum of the same was handed to the Speaker.

Mr. MICHENER. And did the chairman read those minutes before the meeting of the committee here complained of?

Mr. MORIN. I did.

Mr. MICHENER. Then, the chairman had knowledge that his committee was to meet on the regular committee meeting day in the regular room, at the regular meeting hour, and purposely absented himself from the meeting?

Mr. MORIN. No. The only knowledge I had of any meeting was that a recessed meeting of the meeting on Tuesday, which I considered was illegal, was to be held, and I declined to take any part in it. I did not absent myself intentionally.

Mr. MICHENER. The majority of the committee met and attempted to get a meeting of the whole committee. They served notice on the chairman on that date?

Mr. MORIN. No; they did not.

Mr. MICHENER. The chairman's clerk was present?

Mr. MORIN. The chairman's clerk was not present.

Mr. MICHENER. They reported the minutes to the chairman. The chairman read the minutes. He then had notice that the committee would meet on Thursday—the regular?

Mr. MORIN. The minutes of Tuesday?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. MORIN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. MICHENER. They decided that the majority of the committee had business and wanted a committee meeting. The chairman was then present in the city?

Mr. MORIN. I was at the adjourned meeting of the regular meeting at a quarter of 11.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman was in the city and was present and knew that the majority of the committee wanted to meet on the regular committee day?

Mr. MORIN. No.

Mr. MICHENER. And they determined to meet on the regular committee meeting day?

Mr. MORIN. No. I did not know that there was any person in the committee room except the subcommittee until I came back to my office at 1 o'clock that afternoon.

The SPEAKER. In order that there may be no dispute as to the facts, the gentleman from Tennessee said specifically that this meeting was not the result of a rump meeting, but it was a regular meeting on the regular day at the regular time.

Mr. MORIN. If we follow the rules of the committee during the Sixty-ninth Congress, Tuesdays and Thursdays were agreed upon as regular meeting days, but by the call of the chairman; no regular meeting days were designated for the Seventieth Congress. There have been no meetings held and no group of members has attempted to have a meeting on Tuesday or Thursday except by call of the chairman until last Tuesday.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORIN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman maintain that there have not been any meetings of this committee during the Seventieth Congress except by his call? In what way did the gentleman issue his call?

Mr. MORIN. Notices were sent out by the chairman not later than the day before, notifying the members of the committee that there would be a meeting on a certain date and certain hour.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Is not that the practice of all the committees of the House?

Mr. SPEAKS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. SPEAKS. For the purpose of making an observation, which I feel should appear in the RECORD. It is unfortunate that many facts and circumstances bearing upon the question at issue have not been clearly presented for the Speaker's consideration and for the information of Members of the House.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN], chairman of the Military Committee, holds the view that the committee could not meet for the transaction of business without his authorization. If this position is correct, could not the chairman prevent consideration of any bills referred to his committee? This is practically the only question involved in the controversy.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair rules, I would like to make this inquiry: The inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] was addressed wholly to the question of the proceedings on last Thursday, was it not?

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] made no inquiry as to the proceedings of the preceding Tuesday, but that matter was brought into the RECORD by inquiries made by other gentlemen upon the floor. I should like to inquire if under those circumstances the Chair would feel inclined to extend the parliamentary inquiry to both days and define the status of the proceedings on both days?

The SPEAKER. The Chair intends to refer to both days and the preceding Thursday as well.

The Chair has given a great deal of thought to this question, and he has had the advice and cooperation of a number of the leading parliamentarians of the House—the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP], and others, and, of course, the advice and cooperation of our very competent parliamentarian, Mr. Deschler.

It seems rather extraordinary that we have been unable to find any precedent directly in point. Apparently, this situation has not occurred in the last 100 years. There are some conflicting decisions, but none of them touch precisely the same point raised here.

On Thursday of last week, at a meeting of the Military Affairs Committee, the legality of which is not in dispute, a motion was made to report the so-called Muscle Shoals bill to the House without recommendation; that motion failed. Now, it becomes significant, in view of the motion to reconsider made on Thursday of this week, as to whether that motion was legal or not. First, however, the Chair wants to lay down what he thinks is a sane and sensible rule—there being none in existence that the Chair knows of—as to the legal status of a meeting of a committee. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states that in his recollection there have been no meetings of the Committee on Military Affairs except those called by the chairman. The Chair would be very loth, though, to hold that it is necessary for any legal meeting of a committee that it should be called by the chairman. The Chair believes there must be some other method of securing legality. Therefore the Chair would not want to take the extreme position of holding that a meeting of a committee to be legal must have been held at the call of the chairman; on the other hand, he would not want to accept the other horn of the dilemma as laid down in section 26 of Jefferson's Manual, which provides:

> A committee meet when and where they please, if the House has not ordered time and place for them, but they can only act when together, and not by separate consultation and consent—nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled.

The Chair would not want to hold that a committee might meet and transact business at any time or place.

In this case the Chair understands it to have been for many years, at least 20, the practice to carry this language in the Congressional Directory, under the heading:

> Meetings days of House committees: Committees other than those mentioned meet upon call of the chairman.

And there, among other committees, it is stated that the meeting days of the Committee on Military Affairs are Tuesdays and Thursdays. In the pamphlet containing the subcommittees of the Committee on Military Affairs it appears, on the first page:

> Regular meetings, Tuesdays and Thursdays, at 10.30 a. m., and on call of the chairman.

Query: If a majority of the committee assembled at 10.30, approximately, on Tuesday or Thursday morning and acted together as a committee—a quorum always being present—is their action legal or otherwise? There is no question in the Chair's mind about the illegality of the proceedings of the Committee on Military Affairs on last Tuesday. It appears that the chairman of the committee came to the committee room at approximately 10.30 a. m. He found only two other members present, and in about a quarter of an hour, having waited for a quorum, adjourned the meeting on the ground that there was no quorum present.

The rest of the proceedings taken from that point on, in the opinion of the Chair, are entirely illegal, whether a quorum was in fact present or not. The Chair would think from the facts that a quorum was not present until the time when action was taken by that committee, but whether that be true or not, in the opinion of the Chair there could be no legal meeting of that committee following the adjournment for lack of a quorum.

Now, we come to Thursday of this week. It seems to be undisputed that 12 members of that committee assembled in the regular committee room at 10.30, the time noted as being the regular time for a meeting on Thursday, and proceeded to do business. Query: Was their action legal or not? Now, another question comes in there, which is a little perplexing. Was the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Muscle Shoals bill failed to be approved in order on Thursday, a regular meeting day having occurred between? There is no rule the Chair can find governing the motion to reconsider in committees, and yet it can be conceived that it might be of very great importance. The Chair thinks that there being no rule the rule of the House should apply as to motions to reconsider in committees, and we all know that a motion in the House to reconsider must be entered either upon the day or the day following the legislation to which it refers. The Chair would think, applying by analogy to that a motion to reconsider must be made on the day of the committee meeting or the next committee meeting in order to be valid. Now, was Tuesday a day which should be counted in determining the days elapsing since the action by the committee?

The Chair is not absolutely certain whether a motion to reconsider in this case was necessary and does not feel it incumbent upon him to decide the point; but for the purposes of the argument, the Chair proposes to assume that that motion was necessary in order to make in order the next proposition to report a bill favorably, as the committee did, a quorum being present in all legal form.

The Chair thinks that so far as a business meeting was concerned, that the meeting on Tuesday was on a dies non—that it meant nothing. Had anybody been present who desired to make a motion to reconsider, he could not have done it, because there was not a quorum present.

Therefore the Chair is of the opinion that Tuesday must not be counted as a day according to the rules in the House, but the motion to reconsider was valid on Thursday, although a meeting had been held between.

Now, that motion having been legal, was the action taken by the committee, under those circumstances in reporting the Muscle Shoals bill and other bills, legal? In the opinion of the Chair it was, as applied to last Thursday, of course.

The precedents are conflicting. The decision cited by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE] was specifically overruled some years later by Chairman Campbell, who held, on July 18, 1921, RECORD, 4016, that the majority members of a standing committee having met informally, a quorum of the committee having been present and authorized certain committee amendments, that since the meeting had not been regularly called, the action taken by the informal meeting was invalid.

The Chair does not think that this is a sensible and sane way of solving the question of the legality of committee meetings of the House. The Chair does not think it is necessary that the meetings should be called by the chairman provided the custom of that committee has been for many years to fix a definite day or days for meeting and a time for meeting.

The Chair would prefer to follow in this case the decision of Speaker Cannon, who overruled a motion to outlaw proceedings taken under those circumstances. He would prefer to follow this decision rather than the decision of Mr. Campbell, and the Chair is not quite certain that that decision is in direct point, because it occurred during the consideration of a tariff bill where the Ways and Means Committee was in perpetual session practically and was offering something like 200 committee amendments to the bill.

So the Chair thinks that 12 members of the committee having assembled on a regular day at the regular time stated, were competent to act in this instance.

Under the circumstances the Chair will refer the bills reported on Thursday, the Muscle Shoals bill and the other bills, to the appropriate calendar, but the Chair will hold that all proceedings had on Tuesday were illegal and will not refer any of those bills to the calendar.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I venture to suggest, if I may, that it would be proper for them to go in the RECORD in connection with the ruling of the Speaker, because I apprehend this is going to be a very important precedent—the provisions of paragraph 3 of rule 10, which reads as follows:

> At the commencement of each Congress the House shall elect as chairman of each standing committee one of the members thereof; in the temporary absence of the chairman the member next in rank in the order named in the election of the committee, and so on, as often as the case shall happen, shall act as chairman; and in case of a permanent vacancy in the chairmanship of any such committee the House shall elect another chairman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman suggests that the decision be put following this paragraph?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; or that it be put somewhere in connection with the decision,

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the parliamentarian will in all probability include this decision in the new edition of the House rules and manual.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a decision of considerable importance. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Speaker may have permission to elaborate his decision and buttress it by precedents as he may see fit in giving his ruling.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENISON. Is it proper practice in meetings of committees of this House for members who are not present in person to authorize others to vote for them in the transaction of the business of the committee?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent of the committee itself. When the Chair was a member of the Ways and Means Committee that was very often done, because it was rather necessary to have record votes on various matters that came up, but no member was permitted to cast his vote in the form of a proxy except by unanimous consent of the committee itself.

Mr. DENISON. And that should be made of record, of course.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I have personal knowledge that on Thursday, about 12.30, I filed a report from this committee session that has been under discussion, with regard to a bill of which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] is the author. The author of the bill is very anxious that that bill should appear on the Consent Calendar on Monday, if possible. I rise to ask whether or not the bill having been filed within the time, it will have been on the Consent Calendar three days by the Monday session.

The SPEAKER. Was that a bill considered on Tuesday?

Mr. McSWAIN. It was considered on Thursday.

The SPEAKER. The bill was not considered on Tuesday at all?

Mr. McSWAIN. I do not think so. It had only one consideration.

The SPEAKER. Did the committee order the bill reported on Thursday?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. At what time?

Mr. McSWAIN. I think about 11 o'clock. I am not sure exactly what time it was, but it was during the session—after we met and before we adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that bill would be legally on the calendar, but no bill or resolution that was reported out at the alleged meeting on Tuesday has any standing whatever.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, owing to some confusion here I could not understand the reply of the Speaker to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] as to proxies. Was it the Speaker's ruling that a member of a committee can give a general proxy to another member of the committee?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The Chair is not called upon to rule upon that, but the Chair is of the opinion that a proxy on one particular vote must have the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Can a member of that committee appoint a proxy orally, or is he required to make the appointment in writing and have it recorded?

The SPEAKER. The custom in the Ways and Means Committee was for some member of the committee to ask unanimous consent that another member who was absent might be permitted to vote by proxy.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Suppose the member whose vote has been recorded by proxy comes in afterwards and says that his position was misunderstood and a mistake made. Ought not the proxy to be in writing and copied into the minutes of the committee?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, does the Chair mean to make this a ruling on proxies?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has made no ruling, it is merely a matter of opinion. It is entirely a question for the House.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, when the Chair says "committee," it is assumed by the Speaker that a majority, or quorum, of that committee is present?

The SPEAKER. Of course, a proxy could not be counted in making up a quorum.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of a committee during my service here, which has a stated meeting day, and said meeting day having been perfectly perfunctory, never having been observed, would it be possible for the Chair in elaborating his admirable ruling to qualify the responsibility of a member of such committee as to whether he is to be put on notice by the publication of a meeting without a call from the chairman?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not gone to the full extent of that; he thinks that wherever the circumstances are such that members of the committee feel it necessary to procure legislation and they have a quorum present, that that meeting is legal if it occurs in the committee room on the regular day of the meeting.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Massachusetts will not limit the liberal ruling of the Speaker.

PREVENTION OF INFLUENZA

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on one of the bills that I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I appeared and was heard before the Appropriations Committee this morning on the following bill:

A bill (H. R. 15339) to combat and prevent influenza in the United States

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated the sum of $25,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, to be expended by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, in an effort to combat and prevent an epidemic of influenza in the United States, which now threatens our country, with full authority to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to add to his force as great a number of physicians and other personnel as in his judgment may be necessary and to work in conjunction with the various State, county, and municipal health authorities throughout the country in an effort to check the spread of this disease and in getting up, printing, and distributing bulletins to the people on how to prevent and treat influenza.

A hearing was requested by me on this bill at the time of its introduction. The committee to which it was referred is one of the hardest-worked committees of the House and has been quite busy in the short session, so this is the first time I have had an opportunity of being heard before the committee in question on my bill.

At the hearing I made a statement which in effect is the same as I am now making. I am anxious that my views on this matter be known to the Members of the House and for that reason I have sought this opportunity to get them in the RECORD.

My bill seeks an appropriation, as stated therein, with which to study the flu and with which to try to prevent flu epidemics and with which to try to find a cure.

You are all as familiar with this subject as I am. It is your cause, as it is mine. The epidemic came in 1918, and we will never know what an awful toll it took in life and cost of money. We were told then there would be a recurrence of it in about 10 years. The cycle ran true to form, and we had another epidemic of the flu in 1928–29. The last or present epidemic, while nothing like as bad as the one in 1918, was terrific and from newspaper articles and estimates from what seem to be good authorities there were approximately 30,000 deaths as a result of the flu. I have not seen an estimate as to what it has cost thus far in dollars and cents and in lowered vitality and loss of production. It will run into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Despite the fact that we were told in 1918 there would be another epidemic in 10 years of the flu, we were not prepared for the epidemic that struck the country the latter part of last year. While the wave has reached its crest and it is on the wane, there is still considerable of it over the country yet. "What is everybody's business is nobody's business." The matter was left to the medical profession, without concert of action and without funds for the specific purpose with which to make research, tests, and experiments, and the result is there is not much more information on the subject than before.

I am in no sense criticizing the doctors. Many of them, no doubt, have found how to successfully treat it, while, perhaps, many more have not. The point is that the people ought to know something about it and how to prevent and treat it. When this last epidemic occurred the idea occurred to me that I would get ten or fifteen thousand copies of a bulletin on the "flu" and send them out to people in my district that they might learn something of it, but those bulletins could not be gotten from any bureau, folding room, document room, or department of the Government. There were plenty of books and bulletins on hog cholera, horse colic, the boll weevil, hollow horn, and other diseases of cattle, horse, and swine, but I was unable to get a single bulletin on the "flu." I did manage to get 25 or 50 copies on the common cold, or some such subject, from the Public Health Service. This is in no sense a criticism of the Public Health Service nor any of the other health services of the Government. If on any body, the criticism is on Congress itself for not providing money for this thing 10 years ago with which to make exhaustive studies and to make available data and literature that could be had by the people on the subject. No appropriation, as I understand it, has as yet been made by the Congress for this subject. What is of more importance, and what should be of more concern to a nation, than the health and happiness of its people?

From yesterday's Star I clipped an article which states that German scientists have discovered a plant in Mexico from which a cure for "flu" can be made. What is this plant? Can it be grown in this country? What efforts are being made by our country in that direction except by privately endowed institutions? Why not the Government establish the most modern laboratories in the world, attract the most able doctors and scientists that can be had and set them to work at the cost of the Government on efforts to discover the cause of "flu" and its cure? The same thing can be followed to great advantage with respect to all diseases of mankind, and the aid would be of great help to the doctors and scientists generally. No greater body of men can be found than the doctors, but what they need is money and an agency through which to work.

Visualize, if you can, what an army of 30,000 people is? Suppose it is found, as it possibly will be, that flu is a preventable disease. Suppose it is found that it is an easily curable disease. Then we will look back over the epidemics of 1918 and 1928 and wonder why it was we had not bestirred ourselves sooner, especially when we wake up to the fact that a great many of those who died in those epidemics could have been saved in the first place from having the flu and, in the second place, that many of those who developed and died of it could have been cured and saved to their loved ones and to society. But more important than looking back after the water has gone over the wheel is to look forward. We are told that within 8 or 10 years we will have another outbreak of the flu. We have occasional outbreaks of it in localities, but we have had only the two general epidemics. Let us look ahead and try to work out something that will solve not only this disease and prevent and stop it, but let us wake up the fact that the Government is not doing half enough to help the medical men in their noble work. Many doctors give up their lives fighting disease. It costs a great deal of money and time to become a doctor. Generally they are men of small means, many of them poor. They are often unable to dig into matters, make investigations and researches. The Government, through a central head, such as the Public Health Service, ought to have a corps of doctors, scientists, and chemists working all the while, with plenty of funds behind them, to ascertain and print more about diseases, their prevention, cure, and eradication. Much, with the limited means that have been allowed, has been done. Every once in a while we read of where some foundation or individual has offered a reward for a cancer cure. What is the Government doing? We have the examples of Walter Reed and others who have sacrificed and died that others might live, and, as I have said, great progress has been and is being made. The idea I have in mind is, why not speed up this important thing and make more certain discoveries and cures.

Some will say: "This is paternalism." I say it is no more paternal than to study plant diseases and to combat them at Government expense; nor is it any more paternal than to study and combat the diseases of cattle, sheep, hogs, and other animals. It is no more paternal than the study of chicken diseases, and to work out and disseminate cures for sorehead, mites, pip, and the like, with which the fowls are afflicted; and by far it is more important than bird refuges, and we just passed a bill a few days since to establish a bird and wild-life refuge in every State of the Union. It will cost $10,000,000 in about six or eight years, to save the quail, and the like, for the sportsman's pleasure. It was argued in that it would be well also for our people as it would give them "the great outdoors." It will all help; but we better realize before it is too late that such legislation for the preservation of "woodpeckers" and other birds, while called "wise conservation," is not the very highest conservation that we can effect. The conservation of human life, of health, and of happiness is the most important thing on that subject we can address our thoughts to.

Only recently, a doctor wrote me in an effort to secure a copy of a medical article printed in the Philippines on the treatment of malaria. I understand good results have been gotten by the treatment he wanted this article on. I tried to get a copy of that particular article, and the only one I was able to find in my search is in the library of the Surgeon General of the Army and, of course, he would not let that go out, and properly so. Now, if we had funds available whereby the Public Health Service could have such publications printed in bulletin form and available to be sent on request, great good would come from it. In fact, as I have said, there should be a recognized, established governmental health service, and it in turn should have the name and address of every doctor and medical student in the United States; and as a matter of interest, a new discovery, a new and successful treatment develops, a bulletin on the subject should be sent them. Then the bulletins on flu and other diseases, their prevention and treatment, should be available for distribution to the people. There are many sections in the rural parts of the country where there are no doctors. If the people knew there was a bureau or governmental service from which literature on such subjects could be gotten, they would seek the information and I believe would profit by it. Those behind the book and magazine trusts will oppose this idea and, of course, call it paternalism. If it is paternalism to save thousands of lives from preventable diseases then paternalism of that kind is worth while.

This medical or health service I am trying to give you an idea about ought also to be able to get from other doctors many good ideas. Some of the very best doctors in the world are to be found in the country sections, practicing in rural parts of the country.

Useful information should be gotten regardless of where it comes from, and they ought to be able to draft the best talent that can be found and put it to work for the benefit of our population, in trying to stamp out disease, and in trying to find cures and treatments. To my mind, there is nothing more important than this very thing. If we depend upon some rich fellow to leave a foundation, just to perpetuate his name, we will go along like we have been going. Great good has been done in this way, but this is the business of the Government, and while bequest and foundations should be encouraged, we just as well be frank about it and admit we are not making the progress we should. We all know that more can be done and we likewise know it should be done.

The present epidemic, we are told, is about over, so it is probably too late for this particular epidemic, but let us prepare for the epidemic that is certainly ahead. Something should be done in advance of these epidemics. It is no use to lock the stable door after the horse has been stolen. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Let us act and obtain all the information we can get on the flue as well as on other preventable diseases and get it in such shape that it can be disseminated to the people that they may in turn protect themselves and families as far as possible. It will save thousands of lives and millions upon millions of dollars in cost incident to illnesses and deaths. Let us try the use of a little prevention as well as try to work out some cures. It can and should be done.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION AT THE MILITARY ACADEMY, WEST POINT

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11469) to authorize appropriations for construction at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11469) to authorize appropriations for construction at the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert in lieu of the language stricken out by the Senate the following: "Provided, That the new cadet barracks heretofore authorized to be constructed shall be erected on the site of the old cadet mess hall, the street face of the said barracks to be in prolongation of the street face of the west academic building, leaving an open area on the north side of said barracks so that the said barracks can be supervised from the present south cadet guardhouse: And provided further"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID A. REED,
W. H. MCMASTER,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

Amendments Nos. 1, 2, and 3, made by the Senate, have been agreed to by your conferees because a further investigation of this matter discloses the fact that the primary need at West Point is for quarters for the officers and noncommissioned officers who are now inadequately provided for, rather than for a veterinary hospital and the alterations to the west academic building. It is the opinion of your conferees that these latter projects can be postponed until some future date. The amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 4, which your conferees proposed and the Senate conferees agreed to, has for its purpose more clearly defining the original intention of Congress when, in the act approved February 18, 1928, it was provided for the razing of the old cadet mess hall and otherwise preparing the site for the new cadet barracks. Since the passage of the above-mentioned act, a difference of opinion has arisen as to the exact location intended by Congress in the act of February 18, 1928. In order to clear up this matter and make it definitely certain that the new cadet barracks shall be located in exact accordance with the intention of Congress as disclosed in the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, the amendment to the Senate amendment numbered 4 was agreed to by the conferees.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

DEFINING THE TERMS "CHILD" AND "CHILDREN"

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 12449) to define the terms "child" and "children" as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12449) to define the terms "child" and "children" as used in the acts of May 18, 1920, and June 10, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID A. REED,
FRANK L. GREENE,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The amendments of the Senate to this measure are merely to clarify the meaning of the language and thereby make definite the intention of Congress as respects this legislation. Therefore your conferees agreed.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

MORRIS FOX CHERRY

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report (H. R. 12538) for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12538) for the benefit of Morris Fox Cherry having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment of the Senate insert the following: "That no back pay or allowances shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID A. REED,
FRANK L. GREENE,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

This is a private bill passed by the House without the usual proviso providing that no back pay, pension, bounty, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of the act. The Senate added the amendment, and because of the fact the bill is for the benefit of a World War veteran your conferees agreed to an amendment without the words "pension" or "bounty."

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. McSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

BATTLE FIELDS OF BRICES CROSS ROADS, MISS., AND TUPELO, MISS.

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 8736) to provide for the inspection of the battle fields of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up a conference report upon the bill H. R. 8736, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8736) to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

In the report of the Secretary of War of a study and investigation of battle fields in the United States for commemorative purposes, together with his recommendations for further operations, as provided for in section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1926, there is recommended for the battle fields placed in class 11B the following:

With respect to the battle fields in this classification, the area to be included need be only sufficient to suitably contain a marker tablet, or monument, and detailed surveys are not required until such time as the acquisition of the land is undertaken. If Congress determines that any battle in this classification should be commemorated, the proper method would be to erect a monument, tablet, or marker to indicate the location of the battle field, to fence the land required, and to build an approach thereto. Twenty-seven battles, engagements, and campaigns in this classification have been studied and investigated, and as a result the following information is furnished with respect to each. It will be noted that the estimated cost of commemoration varies widely. This variation is made because it is felt that distinctions in this class may be fittingly indicated by the type of memorial.

Brices Cross Roads, Miss. (reference, H. R. 8736 and 10866, 70th Cong.):
Method of commemoration	Marker.
Land required	1 acre.
Cost of land required	Free of cost to the United States.
Estimated cost of commemoration	$5,000.
Estimated annual maintenance cost	$250.
Attitude of local community: The owner of the land in question states that he will be willing to cede to the United States free of cost the amount of land required.
Tupelo, Miss. (reference, H. R. 8736 and H. R. 10868, 70th Cong.):
Method of commemoration	Marker.
Land required	1 acre.
Cost of land required	Free of cost to the United States.
Estimated cost of commemoration	$5,000.
Estimated annual maintenance cost	$250.
Attitude of local community: The land is owned by the United Daughters of the Confederacy, at Tupelo, Miss., who will cede to the United States, free of cost, the required amount of land.

The conferees, believing these recommendations should be followed, have agreed to the amendments of the Senate bringing the measure within the purview of the said recommendations.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later. There is a special order for this morning.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] for 30 minutes under a special order of the House.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, in arising at this time to discuss a question of momentous importance to the industries of our country, a question of vital importance to the workers of our country especially, I trust the Members of the House will bear in mind that I am here representing a constituency made up almost exclusively of industrial workers, many of whom have been unable to find employment at their chosen trade or vocation for long periods of time. Their present plight is due almost entirely to our present tariff legislation.

I speak not as a Democrat nor as a Republican. During the last election both parties honored me with their nomination for Congress. Therefore I can truthfully appeal to the membership of both parties and ask that they bear in mind that my speech is not delivered for political effect or political advantage to either party.

The workers of my district—the shoe workers of Lynn, the textile workers of Lawrence, and the leather workers of Peabody—all have suffered the loss of an opportunity to earn a livelihood for, in some cases weeks and in many cases months, due entirely to the heavy importations of foreign-made goods which can and are being imported under our present tariff and landed in our country at costs which are in many cases less than one-half the actual labor costs of making the same commodities in America. We can and we should make these commodities in America.

During the recent national election both political parties promised that the present tariff law would be changed and that the workers of America would be protected in their opportunity of securing employment.

The Democratic platform dealing with the tariff, in part, read:

Actual difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, with adequate safeguards for the wage of the American laborer.

And the Republican platform, in part, read:

We realize fully that there are certain industries which can not now successfully compete with foreign producers because of lower foreign wages and a lower living cost abroad, and we pledge the next Republican Congress to a revision of these schedules to the end that American labor in these industries may again command the home market, may maintain its standard of living, and may count upon steady employment in its accustomed field.

The Ways and Means Committee are now hearing those who are appealing for protection to American industries. Manufacturers and workers meet upon a common ground. The American manufacturer, with his capital invested, in many cases the accumulation of a lifetime, is asking for tariff legislation which will permit him to sell the products of American labor in competition with the cheaply produced goods of Europe and Asia. The representatives of the workers are appearing before the same committee asking that tariff legislation be enacted which will permit the members of their organizations to obtain and to retain much needed employment.

The workers fully realize that unless the manufacturer can sell the products of American labor that the American workers will be unable to find employment.

We hear considerable talk of our foreign trade. What does it consist of so far as manufactured goods go? Do you realize that we consume more than 90 per cent of our own products? We have a foreign trade in so far as manufactured goods go of less than 10 per cent of what we produce, and were much of what we are now importing shut out I do not believe that we would have any great trouble in consuming almost 100 per cent of the manufactured goods which we produce.

The other day one of my constituents, in writing me about the fact that neither he nor his two brothers had been able to obtain employment—and they are all skilled tradesmen—inclosed in his letter a cartoon drawn by a former Member of this body, former Congressman John Baer, which tells the story in a very few words.

This cartoon shows that we in America consume 92 per cent of the goods we manufacture and we export only 8 per cent. If our workers had steady employment, they could consume a large part of this 8 per cent.

During the last decade the inventive genius of America has made available to America and to the world labor-saving devices which make possible the turning out by 2 or 3 men or women what years ago it took 20 or 30 and sometimes 50 men to turn out in the same length of time.

And, while I am referring to machine production, bear in mind that the latest and most up-to-date machinery is now in use by most of our European and Asiatic competitors.

Yet even with the handicap of machine production the American workers, differing somewhat from the attitude in past years of the workers of other countries, have hailed the new labor-saving machinery as a godsend, as in many cases it has made the work of the tradesmen a bit easier.

To-day, and for the past few years, we have in America an army of unemployed workers.

America, perhaps the richest country in the world, with some of our citizens rolling in wealth and with many of them able to spend fabulous sums of money to bring to America the art treasures of the world, yet we have in our country to-day millions of skilled American tradesmen who are unable to find employment, and therefore many millions of American families are to-day in want or the recipients of charity.

The American workers are not charity seekers. They believe that it is holier to give than to receive. Yet our people must live. The mouths of the little ones must be fed and our children must be sheltered.

The shoe workers of my home city of Lynn, skilled workers of which there are no better any place in the world, find that their American market is taken away from them, due to the fact that our present laws permit the importation of shoes from Czechoslovakia and France, and the sale of the product of the labor of those countries in distributing houses less than 10 miles from Lynn at prices which are less than the labor costs of producing the same shoes in my home city.

Does such a condition permit the statement that we in Congress are playing fair with our American workers? Does such a condition permit the statement by Members of this House, irrespective of what party we may belong to, that we are carrying out the pledges which we made to the workers of our country during the last national election?

During the year 1923, the first full year under the present tariff law, the total importation of women's shoes from all countries was about 115,000 pairs. Last year the importations of women's shoes from Czechoslovakia alone was more than 1,500,000 pairs. In addition to the women's shoes which we imported from Czechoslovakia, we imported also another million pairs of shoes from other European countries.

A sinister condition. Thousands of competent and highly skilled shoe workers of Lynn and other American cities out of employment, and we import 1,500,000 pairs of women's shoes from Czechoslovakia alone.

And why are these shoes imported instead of being made here?

They are imported because they can be delivered to the distributing houses of our country at prices which are much less than even the labor costs of similar shoes made in America.

Last year a shoe manufacturer, with a plant in Czechoslovakia employing more than 12,000 shoe workers, shipped into America more than 1,000,000 pairs of shoes. The head of this foreign shoe company holds membership in the Chamber of Commerce of Lynn and some years ago he, together with several of his associates, were employed in the shoe factories of my home city, where they learned how to make good shoes efficiently.

The workers in this Czechoslovakia shoe factory receive wages per week ranging from $13.50 down to less than $5. While these wages may be looked upon as low in America they will average with what skilled workers receive in Czechoslovakia.

On the other hand the shoe workers of Lynn, who are not paid any too much, receive in wages from four to six times the wages paid shoe workers in Czechoslovakia.

In addition to the more than 2,600,000 pairs of women's leather shoes, which last year were imported from European countries, we also imported more than 1,000,000 pairs of shoes, the chief value of which was in the uppers composed of materials other than leather.

These shoes are women's shoes and we all know that when we purchase women's shoes to-day that we pay prices which would permit the manufacturer to employ American workers in the production of the shoes. These shoes, because the uppers are composed of materials other than of leather, are taxed under our present tariff law at 35 per cent upon their foreign value. And what is the value the foreign manufacturers of these shoes place on these shoes? An average value, according to the Government's own figures, of less than 30 cents per pair. Is it any wonder that skilled American shoe workers are unable to find employment at their trade?

That which is true of women's shoes is also true of men's shoes. As an instance of what the makers of American men's shoes are up against, let me cite you the case of a prominent shoe manufacturer, formerly operating a shoe plant in Brooklyn, and who is now manufacturing shoes in England and selling these shoes to those who formerly purchased the shoes which he produced in Brooklyn.

This manufacturer was no novice. His family had been making shoes in America for three generations and his name was a byword with American shoe retailers as a producer of first-class men's shoes.

When he found that he could not compete against the product of foreign labor producing all-leather shoes, which under our present laws are admitted free of any duty, he closed down his factory, and without much thought eliminated from their jobs some three or four hundred highly skilled American shoe workers.

He leased a factory in the shoe-manufacturing center of northern England at a rental so small that it makes one laugh, and he then proceeded to employ English shoemakers to make shoes according to his specifications for the American market. He did not bother with the English market, even though the shoes were made in England.

After having some samples made he hied himself to America and proceeded to offer his shoes to the American retailers at prices which were less than he himself had been able to manufacture them for in his own factory in Brooklyn. To-day he is exporting to America thousands of pairs of first-class shoes at prices which are lower than our American shoe manufacturers can compete with. Of course, the shoe retailer gets the shoes cheap, but I have not yet been able to find that the saving through the lesser cost of the shoes is passed on to you and me when we make our purchases.

The English shoe workers have profited, but what about the American shoe workers who are unable to find employment as a result of many such cases as I have just referred to?

The city of Lawrence, which is in my district, is located on the banks of the Merrimack River only 26 miles from the city of Boston, and the cost of carting wool to Lawrence is almost as great as is the cost of transporting the finished textiles from foreign countries to Boston and New York.

There are about 25,000 textile-mill workers living in Lawrence, all of whom are dependent upon the mills of that city for employment. When fully employed, while a thrifty and a saving class of people, realizing the need of providing for the rainy day, they earn an average of something like $25 a week. Lawrence is one of the 100 largest cities in our country, and the living costs in a city, as you all know, are greater than the cost of living in a small town or mill village.

Not only are the mill workers dependent upon the operating of the mills for their employment, but many other industries in Lawrence are dependent upon the prosperity of the mill workers for their own prosperity.

Surely assistance is needed when you find a city with less than 100,000 residents which has more than 500 vacant stores and with some 2,500 tenements empty.

I do not need to call your attention to the fact that our relief department has had many calls upon it under the conditions which exist at this time.

The workers of Lawrence are not responsible for the conditions which prevail. They have only their labor to sell and they are entitled to an opportunity of disposing of their labor under conditions which will permit them to live properly.

Surely, if they have no employment and they have no income because the employment which they previously had, and through which they had a weekly income, has been transferred to workers in foreign countries it does not make for better feelings toward the Government or those officials of the Government who, through the passage of laws which deprived the workers of employment, brought about this pitiful condition.

The textile workers of Lawrence, where we have the finest mills and most up-to-date equipment the market affords, have suffered to such an extent that in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee it was testified that at least 4,500 mill operatives have left that city. The textile workers of Lawrence are conceded by manufacturers to be as competent and as proficient as any in the world; and yet these workers for the past four or five years have been unable to secure employment for more than two and three days per week.

While the textile workers of Lawrence receive an average of less than $25 per week when employed, the product of their labor comes in competition with the product of the labor of England, Germany, Czechoslovakia, and Italy, where the wages paid to the textile mill workers are from one-half to one-sixth what the workers of Lawrence receive.

Let me cite you as an illustration some of the wages paid to mill workers in England and Germany:

England: Wool spinners, men	$11.00
Germany:
Wool spinners, men	10.00
Wool spinners, women	6.80
England: Wool weavers	9.00
Germany:
Wool weavers, men	10.26
Wool weavers, women	9.14
England: Worsted spinners	7.71
Germany:
Worsted spinners, men	11.26
Worsted spinners, women	6.28

Since the passage of the present tariff law, no less than three large cotton mills in Lawrence have closed their doors, and their workers have been forced to look for work in some other industries.

The wages paid to the cotton-mill workers of Lawrence will run from three to five times the wages paid to cotton-mill workers in those countries from which millions of yards of cotton cloth is being imported at the present time, due to the fact that these foreign-woven cotton cloths can be laid down in the storehouses of American merchants for less than the cost of producing comparable American-made cotton goods.

The mill workers of Lawrence realize that the present tariff law is not protective, and their knowledge comes from the fact that since the passage of the present tariff law the importations of fine woven woolens have each year exceeded by almost 50 per cent the importations of these fine woolens in those years immediately preceding the enactment of the present law.

Peabody, one of the centers of the tanning industry of our country, is also located in my district, and there is hardly a day passes that I do not receive at least 10 or 15 letters asking when will Congress pass a tariff bill which will protect American workers in their employment.

The wages of the tannery workers of Peabody will average better than 60 cents per hour, and the product of their labor competes in the markets of America with the product of European labor, where the wages paid will run from as low as 10 cents an hour in Czechoslovakia and Rumania to 15 and not more than 25 cents per hour in France, Germany, Holland, and Belgium.

For instance, the importations of calf and kip leather have increased from less than $3,000,000 in 1923 to more than $14,000,000 in 1928, an increase of more than 400 per cent.

The tannery workers of Peabody and other leather centers have been denied an opportunity to secure employment. Why? Simply because the users of these goods can secure them cheaper in foreign countries and place them in their factories in America for less than the same goods can be manufactured for in America.

Finished calf skin had some protection from 1846 up to the passage of the tariff act of 1913, and since then it has been on the free list. It may interest you to know that the total importations the year this commodity was first placed on the free list amounted to less than $130,000. Last year the importations amounted to more than $14,000,000. Is it any wonder that the workers of Peabody are praying for some action on the part of Congress?

What is the cure for this intolerable condition? The cure is for Congress to enact as speedily as possible a tariff law which will protect the employment opportunity of American workers.

Some may contend that the American people should purchase the product of American labor in preference to the products of foreign labor.

However, we are living in a world where selfishness prevails to an extent beyond any reasoning on the part of many. We find that the buyers seek to secure what they want at the lowest possible figure. Even our Government, under the false cry of economy, purchases what it needs, even for our Army and Navy, in foreign countries if the foreigners will quote a price lower than the American manufacturer.

And, yet, it is the American manufacturer and the American workers who pay the taxes which support this same Government.

It is only a few years ago since our Government in purchasing airplane cloth awarded a contract to an English manufacturer because of the fact that the price which he quoted for the same material was a few dollars less than the price quoted by a manufacturer operating a large textile plant in the city of Lawrence.

In my investigation of the imports of shoes and the value placed upon them by the foreign producers I came across something which startled me.

We, here in Congress, are charged with legislating in the interests of the American people. And yet I found that the shoes which are imported from foreign countries, and which, because of the fact that they are made wholly of leather, come in duty free, were valued by the foreign shoe manufacturers at an average value of more than $2 per pair. The shoes of which the uppers are composed of materials other than leather, and upon which there is a tariff protection of 35 per cent, were imported at an average value of less than 30 cents per pair.

Upon inquiry I found that while these shoes are imported into America for sale in America when the Government places the duty on these shoes the duty is placed on the foreign value of these shoes. Without hesitancy I can say that it is impossible for American shoe workers to compete with shoes, with cloth uppers, produced for anything like 30 cents per pair plus any duty which might be imagined if that duty is based upon a value of 30 cents per pair.

That which is true of shoes is also true of the textiles produced in Lawrence and the tanned leather of Peabody.

The result of this system of foreign valuation is, to my mind, that the Government is defrauded of the taxes which it should collect, the workers are deprived of their opportunity of securing work because they can not compete with the products of foreign labor on the basis of foreign value of the product, and the American manufacturer is denied an opportunity of operating his plant and employing American workers. In America we can not produce these commodities where labor costs form a large part of the total costs unless adequate and proper tariff protection is afforded the products of American labor.

In looking through the past actions of the House on tariff legislation I noticed that when the present tariff act was adopted the House, upon recommendation of the Ways and Means Committee, based the duties on the basis of the American valuation instead of the foreign value.

When the bill was finally adopted in the Senate the American valuation was eliminated and duties were continued on the basis of the foreign value—that is, all of those commodities which were imported into America were made dutiable on the basis of their value in the country where they were produced except in so far as the law applied to the products of the chemical dyestuff industry, and, in the importations of these commodities, the importers had to pay duty based upon the value of comparable American-made goods—American valuation.

As to whether or not the system recommended by the Ways and Means Committee and adopted by the House was a proper one, it will interest you to know that I had the pleasure while attending the hearings of the Ways and Means Committee recently to hear a representative of the cotton-fabric glove industry make the flat-footed statement to the committee that had the same phraseology been written into that section of the tariff which dealt with cotton-fabric gloves as had been inserted into the section covering chemical dyestuffs, that the American cotton-fabric glove industry would to-day be in a flourishing condition similar to that of the chemical-dyestuff industry instead of being almost eliminated.

I noticed that the representatives of every labor organization affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, when presenting their case before the Ways and Means Committee, demanded and have explained why, if the workers of America are to receive real protection, the duties must be based upon the American valuation system.

To my mind there is no logical reason why we should give special privilege to one industry, as has been done in the protection afforded to the chemical industry, and deny similar protection to our other industries.

The records furnished by the Government show that the chemical industry is one of the few industries which during the past years has had almost complete control of the American market and which, since the passage of the present tariff act, has been able to build up a real export trade.

We are Americans and we presumably are interested in American workers and American industries whether they be industrial or agricultural.

I trust that when the Ways and Means Committee make their recommendations to this House that we may have the privilege of adopting a tariff bill which will really protect the employment opportunities of American workers, and that the rates which they see fit to recommend will be based upon the value of the articles in America—American valuation.

Let us take care of America. Those in control of the destinies of our competitors seem to be able to take pretty good care of themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman referred to employment conditions in his district. Does the gentleman know that with the very limited immigration that we are now getting from European countries, about 1,000 a month from England, Scotland, and Germany, settle in New England, there to find no employment? That is to say, with the limited immigration, New England factory cities can not take care of those who arrive and settle in those sections.

Mr. CONNERY. That is true at present. There is no work to be had for them in Lawrence, Lynn, or Peabody.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me there for a moment?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, who delivered such a wonderful speech on the national-origins clause the day before yesterday.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might not that condition be caused by the fact that American capital is being sent over to Europe and is subsidizing European capital to compete with American capital?

Mr. CONNERY. My colleague's statement is absolutely correct. Mr. Speaker, I repeat again, on a pair of shoes on which there is no duty, the valuation that is put on is $2 a pair foreign valuation. On a pair of shoes on which there is a duty, shoes with uppers other than leather, the foreign valuation is 30 cents a pair. How can American manufacturers compete with labor costs and overhead on shoes which are brought in at the foreign valuation of 30 cents a pair? That is what we mean when we say that we are striving for an American valuation of goods so that the American manufacturers and American labor may be protected against this unfair foreign competition.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. The gentleman spoke a moment ago about the unemployment of the textile workers in New England in his section of the country?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. Does the gentleman know that the average spindle hour for New England is about 5½ active hours per spindle per day, while in the South the average active spindle hour is about 12½ per spindle each day?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; and in Massachusetts we have a 48-hour law, and if the southern mills would follow that we would not be so much troubled with foreign competition. We do not work women and children in Massachusetts over 48 hours a week.

Mr. BUSBY. We do not work women down there. Our men work and are not idle.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman knows they work far more than 48 hours in the southern mills.

Mr. BUSBY. They use three shifts.

Mr. CONNERY. I talked with a gentleman who just came back from the South, who made a tour of the mill sections, and he said that he saw them coming in and going out, and that they worked sometimes as long as 60 hours, without three shifts.

Mr. BUSBY. Let me explain to the gentleman that those special investigators who go South to find out a certain condition never report any condition when they go back except the condition that they went there to see, and the facts do not come out in those reports.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman to whom I referred merely went on a visit to the South, and is not in the wool business, cotton business, nor connected with them at all. He told me about living conditions in the South, and he said that the people in Lawrence and Lynn and Peabody could not live on the food that those mill workers in the South get as a result of the cheap wages and long hours they work.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it not a fact that the destructive competition in the textile industry is due to the cloth that is imported from Italy, and that that is the main trouble with your woolen mills?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; some from Italy and some from England, Germany, and other countries of Europe.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman is, therefore, in favor of protection?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, yes. I am in favor of protecting the workers and industries of my district against destructive foreign competition.

Mr. BUSBY. Will the gentleman let me follow up the thought that he suggested?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio. I will be glad to yield later to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman from Massachusetts has made a fine speech, as he always does, a logical speech.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. The gentleman comes from a great manufacturing district where they make a lot of shoes. I fully approve of everything that he has said. While I have no shoe manufacturers in my district we have some leather manufacturers. I am going to go along with the gentleman on shoes, but I am wondering if he will go along with us for a tariff on leather?

Mr. CONNERY. I certainly will. I read in my statement facts showing where at Peabody, in my district, one of the greatest leather centers in the country, the tanners were being practically driven out of the business by foreign competition in leather.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I will.

Mr. JONES. Would the gentleman vote for a tariff on hides?

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to the gentleman—and I believe that I am voicing the sentiments of the shoe workers and manufacturers of my district—that we would prefer, if it were possible, free hides; but first of all we believe that a duty on hides inures to the benefit of the packers only and not the farmers. But if the Congress considers there should be a duty on hides for the benefit of the farmers every shoe manufacturer and the workers in my district are willing to have a duty placed upon hides if Congress will give us a compensatory tariff on shoes.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman does not think that the packers get all the benefit?

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman knows the packers get the hides.

Mr. JONES. They, of course, buy the animal in many instances, but as one of the parts of the animal it affects the price paid the producers.

Mr. CONNERY. Bought on the hoof. The gentleman is not going to tell me the farmer gets the benefit of the tariff on hides.

Mr. JONES. There is no tariff on hides. In many instances the animal is skinned on the farm or ranch. Besides, in other instances the animal is slaughtered locally. But even when sold to the packer, a tariff would go into the price.

Mr. CONNERY. I think the gentleman realizes that it will inure to the benefit of the Chicago packers alone. What I want to say is that if the Congress wishes to put a tariff on hides, we are not going to find fault. We favor the farmer getting a tariff on the farm products which he sells. I am not standing here saying, Give me justice and nothing for the rest of the country. That is not our principle. My constituents are out of work, they are hungry, their children are hungry, and if Congress wants to put a protection on hides in the belief that it helps the farmer, I am not going to object.

Mr. JONES. Does not the gentleman think that if we are going to have a tariff law it should be a uniform tariff—one on articles which come through the customhouse——

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; I do.

Mr. JONES. On raw products as well as on the finished articles? It should not be a special-privilege tariff.

Mr. CONNERY. I think that we should have a tariff that will protect every manufacturer and every worker and every farmer in the country who needs protection.

Mr. JONES. On jute, hides, and all raw material?

Mr. CONNERY. On everything which really needs protection.

Mr. SEGER. We have mills in the district I have the honor to represent that are going South on account of cheaper taxation and lower wages. The gentleman comes from Brooklyn, does he not?

Mr. CONNERY. From Brookline? No; I come from Lynn.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has given the House valuable information relative to the importation of shoes from Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia and other countries of Europe. Can the gentleman give us the number of shoes exported to those countries from this country?

Mr. CONNERY. The number is almost negligible that we export. It is not worth putting in the text. There is no export of shoes to Czechslovakia and Yugoslavia that amounts to anything worth putting in the RECORD.

Mr. YON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. YON. There is one question that I would like to ask of the gentleman. I have been a shoe man—not a manufacturer, but a dealer—and I am sympathetic with the shoe industry. While I was in Boston not long ago one of the big leather men outlined the situation relative to the supply of leather. He said that the supply had decreased from 1920 from 13,000,000 down to less than 2,000,000 of the available supply. The urgent requirement at that time was to use low-cut shoes. They were bringing in substitutes for leather, and at the same time they were asking protection on shoes, all the while knowing that when they asked protection on shoes the producers of hides and leather are entitled to protection on hides.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will examine the record, he will find that the 1,500,000 pairs of shoes that came in last year from Czechoslovakia paid no tariff at all. There was no duty on them at all.

Mr. YON. I understand that those shoes are made where a great deal of extra work is placed upon them, and those shoes so made carry duty; and the majority of the shoes manufactured are of that general character of manufacture. As I say, I want to do the fair thing and believe in doing the fair thing for the shoe manufacturer.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to the gentleman that I believe firmly that if Congress does not put a tariff on boots and shoes the shoe industry in my city will be wiped out within the next five years. I am not saying that for effect. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. In the district that I have the honor to represent we have a great many shoe manufacturers and tanneries. I want to have a tariff which will protect these industries and labor employed therein from unfair competition of foreign products. I will, however, oppose a tariff on shoes if the shoe manufacturers keep up their propaganda for a tariff on shoes and opposition to a tariff on hides and finished leathers.

Mr. CONNERY. Every shoe manufacturer that I have talked with has hardly mentioned the question of hides. If you will ask them about it, you will find they will say to the Committee on Ways and Means when they appear before it next week, "If you see fit to put a duty on hides, all we ask is to have a compensatory tariff placed on shoes." I will say to the gentleman that the propaganda that he mentions certainly does not come from my district.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. If we destroy the shoe factories and the tanneries, will not the hide market be wiped out ultimately?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; because there will be nobody to buy hides.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman know where the capital comes from that is put into the manufacture of these shoes in Czechoslovakia?

Mr. CONNERY. I believe that the capital that is behind the Czechoslovakia shoe manufactures comes from the United States. The manufacturers here have put money into business over there, because they say they can not compete here, and with cheap labor costs over there they can, and thereby throw thousands out of employment in the United States. That is admitted by business men in New York.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Is it not a fact that in the last few years millions of dollars of American money have been loaned to countries in Europe in order that European industry may come in competition with domestic products here?

Mr. CONNERY. I understand so.

Mr. MORGAN. Does the gentleman stand on the Democratic platform, where protection is demanded?

Mr. CONNERY. I certainly stand on the Democratic platform, which demands that our industries be protected.

But, of course, the Democratic platform says we should have protection. I have no argument with my distinguished friend from Texas on that point.

Mr. JONES. The occasion for my question was this: I received a printed letter—and I am sure all the Members received it—from the National Boot & Shoe Manufacturers' Association urging a tariff on boots and shoes and urging free hides. Now, it seems to me it is going pretty far to ask the ranchmen and farmers who produce hides to sell their products in a free market and at the same time compel them to buy their supplies in a protected market. Does the gentleman think that is fair?

Mr. CONNERY. No; I do not. And, I repeat, I believe a tariff on hides will only inure to the benefit of the packers, and I am not interested at all in the packers; I am interested in the farmers. I want to see the farmers protected.

Mr. JONES. I want to say in that connection that the farmer sells the whole animal to the packer. The packer in turn sells to others. The packer is an intermediate agent. If he can get more for the hides, he can pay more for the animal. That is elemental.

Mr. CONNERY. And when the packers get the animal they skin him and dispose of the hide.

Mr. JONES. I want to say to my friend that hides can be brought in free from other places. These packers have big plants in other countries—in South America and elsewhere—and they can bring hides in free of duty. The same is true of other concerns which use hides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 5094) making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 5094, with Mr. BACON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with the reading of the bill, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the committee for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when the committee was about to rise last night an agreement was reached by which we agreed to proceed with Senate bill 5094 to-day in accordance with the rule under which we were operating. As we were about to rise, it was apparent that amendments would be offered to provide for a paragraph which would include violators of certain parts of the liquor laws. They would be alien violators, of course. One or more Members had sent to the Clerk's desk amendments to that effect, and your Committee on Immigration, after surveying the situation and feeling rather of the opinion that an amendment of some kind along that line would be voted, met this morning and perfected an amendment. I think, in fairness to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], who was claiming recognition at the time we made the agreement, that his proposed amendment might as well be read, after which the chairman of the committee will offer the committee amendment as a substitute.

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is the proposition the committee has agreed on, in effect, the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it is rather more embracing.

Mr. BRIGGS. It relates not only to violations of the prohibition laws but to other violations?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In order to save time I will read the amendment. It will add one more classification, and it will be as follows:

(9) An alien who is convicted of manufacturing, selling, or transporting intoxicating liquor, for which he is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of one year or more, or who is convicted of manufacturing, selling, or transporting intoxicating liquor, for which he is sentenced to imprisonment for a term which, when added to the term or terms to which sentenced under one or more previous convictions of manufacturing, selling, or transporting intoxicating liquor, amounts to one year or more. This subsection shall apply only in the case of offenses committed after the enactment of this act.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. In other words, the language makes the terms cumulative; that is, adds one to the other?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; cumulative for liquor violations and separating them from general violations. With that explanation, I will ask that the Clerk read the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Amend by adding a new paragraph to be numbered "2–A" after line 7, on page 3, as follows:

"2–A. An alien who hereafter violates or conspires to violate any statute of the United States or of the several States by manufacturing or selling intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, and is convicted of such offense in a court of record when such conviction is for a second offense of the same character."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the purpose of this amendment, of course, is to authorize the deportation of those who have manufactured or sold intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws of the United States. It does not affect any other class of violators of our prohibition laws. It provides that conviction must be had in a court of record and not only that but it must be a second conviction. It does not have anything to do with the length of the sentence that may be imposed, and I respectfully submit to you that an amendment such as was described by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Washington, will not have the effect of authorizing the deportation of a large majority of these alien violators of our prohibition laws, for the reason that in those sections of the country where such violations are most rampant and where there are the largest number of alien violators of the prohibition laws the judges who customarily pass upon such cases do not impose sentences of the length of one year for the offense of selling intoxicating liquors or for the offense of manufacturing intoxicating liquors, in the vast majority of cases.

The penalties imposed by the judges, range from a small fine to a few days in jail. The minimum punishment for a first offense under the law may be as small as one day in jail or a penny fine. For a second offense, it may be as small as 30 days in jail or a fine, I believe, of $200.

Now, I contend that an alien who has engaged in the business of manufacturing or selling intoxicating liquors to the extent that he has been twice caught and twice convicted in a court of record has no right to insist upon his being allowed to remain in this country.

The bill as it is at present, without the amendment of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], would require not merely one year's sentence but two years, and the amendment changes that condition to some extent, if it should be adopted, but only to the extent of requiring that the aggregate sentences shall be one year; and I submit to you that in those sections of the country, the large cities, where these aliens ply their illegal trade, it would be a long, long time before you would find sentences in very many cases imposed by the judges in those jurisdictions aggregating 12 months.

The question is, Do you consider an alien who engages in the business of violating the Constitution of the United States and the laws enacted in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States, a desirable citizen of the United States? If you do not, then you ought to vote down the committee substitute and adopt this amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. No; I have not time to yield, I am sorry to say to the gentleman. I only have five minutes.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Box] on yesterday made some statement to the effect that the reason for not including a provision of this kind was because it would result in placing in the deportable class such a large number, in addition to those already authorized to be deported, that they might not be properly handled under the appropriations which are now available. The same objection would apply to every other provision of this bill. It is admitted that there are at least several hundred thousand aliens in the United States subject to deportation under our laws who can not be deported for lack of sufficient appropriation. If the gentleman's argument is correct, then why should we add any number to that class?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TARVER. This bill, gentlemen of the committee, provides that an alien who is guilty—not convicted in a court of record, but who is guilty of any sort of a violation of the laws of the United States against the handling of narcotics—shall be subject to immediate deportation upon order issued by the Commissioner General of Immigration.

Why should there be such a tremendous distinction between the violator, in a small way, of the narcotic laws, who may be deported even without trial or conviction, and the violators of the prohibition laws of the country?

My amendment, as I have said, provides it shall apply only to two classes of cases, those who manufacture and those who sell, and that it shall not apply to them unless there shall have been two convictions for the same offense.

I submit this presents to the committee the sole question of whether or not they believe aliens who have twice violated and been convicted of violating the prohibition laws of the country are desirable residents of the country and ought to be permitted to remain here.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why not also include those who are found guilty of buying and transporting?

Mr. TARVER. So far as I am concerned, I believe that violators of the prohibition laws of the character indicated by the gentleman should be included, but I have sought to put this amendment in such form as that any man who even pretends to believe in prohibition and in the enforcement of prohibition could give it his support.

I want to say to the House, in explanation of my own position, that I am sincerely an advocate of prohibition. I am offering this amendment as a friend of prohibition. I believe that the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States is the best legislation enacted by this Congress in the last 50 years, and I do not believe that the wholesale violation of it in certain sections of this country any more calls for its modification or repeal than that the wholesale machine-gun murders which we have been reading about, occurring in the city of Chicago, require the repeal of the laws against murder, and I believe that if you pass this amendment and write it into law, it will go a long way toward effectively enforcing the prohibition statutes of this country, and it will rid the country of some of the foreigners who have been carrying on this illegal business in a wholesale way in certain sections of the country.

If you adopt the amendment of the committee, adopted by the committee since yesterday afternoon in order to prevent your adoption of a more vigorous amendment, you leave the matter almost where it is now, because there will be very few cases in which the aggregate penalties will be as much as 12 months in those sections of the country which stand most in need of legislation of this character. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Gentlemen, this is quite a serious matter. The gentleman from Georgia has made a very earnest statement. We ought to analyze it. We are dealing with aliens, even though the words of his amendment have been reduced to two or three phases—transporting and manufacturing—the facts remain that if an alien should be fined once $5 for a violation in a court of record, and then again fined $5 you have provided that he must be deported provided the Secretary of Labor thinks him an undesirable citizen.

Mr. TARVER. If the gentleman will yield, the police courts are not courts of record.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is the gentleman sure? How about the State of California?

Mr. TARVER. I think there is no question but that police courts are not courts of record in any State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They have a different system in California.

Mr. EVANS of California. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that the police court in California is not a court of record.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then I am mistaken. It is agreed, however, that many of these offenses are punished by imprisonment for 30 days or 60 days, and with fines in proportion. You must understand that we are creating one or two additional classes of aliens who commit crimes of a serious nature, and they must be proceeded against by the Secretary of Labor. This amendment which has been proposed would confer so much possibility of a burden in the name of deportation that the Department of Labor would be greatly interfered with and would have to have a third branch of the Government for this phase of prohibition enforcement.

Mr. CRAIL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. CRAIL. As I understand the amendment, the alien would first have to be determined to be an undesirable citizen——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That would come after he was convicted.

Mr. CRAIL. If he is an undesirable citizen, would it not be better to deport him on a minor offense than to wait until he has committed a felony?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If you carried it out in that detail, the Department of Labor would not be able to function at all. The work and burden on the department would be terrible. I will ask the House to vote down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia and vote up the substitute which I shall offer as a committee amendment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Considering the various paragraphs, when it comes to deportation to Russia, we not having recognized the Government in that country, what is the attitude of the department in that respect?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We would be unable to deport.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia is a prohibitionist and believes in the enforcement of the law, but, unfortunately, he is under the impression that all the violations of the law are committed by aliens. Now, I will say that many aliens are arrested; they have no one to intercede for them; they have no influence, and when they are arrested they are fined. On the other hand, the influential citizens, in the gentleman's State of Georgia, or any other State, do the same thing; they make it; they sell it; they consume it, to a much greater extent than many of the aliens, but they very seldom are convicted or even arrested.

What I want to bring home to you is that we have very stringent provisions in the present deportation act which provides for the deportation of aliens committing any kind of an offense, whether it is violation of the Volstead Act or whether it is larceny, robbery, or any other offense or crime. Now, why should we have a special provision in the act applicable to those who happen to violate the Volstead Act, a thing which has been made illegal only a few years and which up to the time before hysteria had taken possession of our legislative bodies, was recognized to be legal all over the United States. Lo and behold, to-day we must have a special law which must be much stronger than the law which applies to a man guilty of robbery, larceny, or any kind of a real crime against the laws of the States. It is to be regretted that people go or are carried away by blind prejudice to such an extent and can not see the situation as it really should be seen by sane and sensible men.

I feel that the present-day hysteria and intolerance on the part of certain organizations and individuals should cease, and that we should legislate sanely as men and not be overlorded by an organization simply because a few years ago it was powerful, but which now is fast disintegrating. It is to be regretted that its accredited officials still come down here or by a word influence Members of Congress who are elected by the people to believe that they must do as this organization tells them, regardless how vicious, otherwise the organization will bring about their defeat. We ought to be big enough to say to all such organizations and their agents that we are men who are sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States, and who at the same time have the right and privilege to cast our votes according to the dictates of our conscience and not according to the dictates of these prohibition leaders or people who really do not know what it is all about, and are being misled and used by the professional prohibitionists on one hand, and, on the other, the restrictionists, who are about as narrow-minded and bigoted, and who are forcing the legislation now before us.

Unlike the gentlemen from Georgia, Florida, Washington, or Maine I am frank enough to admit that there are many violations of the prohibition law in my State and in my city.

I exceedingly regret to say that there are many bootleggers, and many killings among these bootleg gangs, something that was unheard of before prohibition, and for which the prohibition law is responsible. This, however, the professional prohibitionist, or the prohibitionists on the floor of this House, dislike to concede, notwithstanding that it is a fact, and is recognized by those who are not blinded with prejudice or who are not crazed on the question of prohibition.

In a measure, I do not blame certain gentlemen in trying to secure a special provision in this act, applicable to aliens guilty of violating the Volstead Act. I take it they want that lucrative business to be solely conducted by and be in the hands of native-born Americans.

In view of the tremendous importation of liquors, it does not affect the price of their native manufactured white mule and moonshine, because the greater importation of these liquors the lesser the price of white mule and moonshine, but surely they can not maintain that aliens are guilty of violating the prohibition law in their respective States, because there are no aliens there, and, notwithstanding that fact, the records will show, that there are as many stills confiscated as there are in any other section in the United States.

I grant that there are not as many arrests made, but we know, and it can not be denied, and, in fact, it has been demonstated and proven on the floor of this House, that the prohibition law is not being enforced in the South, and that the same southern hospitality of old still prevails.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I can understand the attitude of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] in presenting his amendment. After all, in these days of tariff revision and protection of American industry, it is natural and logical that America's greatest and most profitable industry should be reserved to citizens of the United States. [Laughter.] The gentleman states that there are thousands of bootleggers. Of course, we have not had the benefit of the Census Bureau in classifying these bootleggers as to citizens and noncitizens, but again I want to point out to the House and to repeat at the risk of becoming tiresome, that you would not have thousands of bootleggers if you did not have millions of drinkers. It is because of the great demand for liquor that you have this large number of bootleggers. Just how the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] is going to differentiate between the alien bootlegger and the native consumer, I do not know. There can be no serious objection to the gentleman's amendment. In fact, I rather welcome it, because it will answer a great many of the charges based upon misinformation, that the bootlegging industry is in the control of aliens. I assure the gentleman from Georgia that in his State, and in many of the States of the Union, business is too good to be left in the hands of aliens.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. TARVER. The gentleman on previous occasions has made statements of this character concerning my State upon the floor of the House, and I rise to inform the gentleman now that in my district in Georgia the prohibition laws are enforced, and if the gentleman will take the trouble on some occasion to visit my district, as I hope he will, he will discover that to be true. He will find that his charges made against my State at least are not correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall permit the records of the gentleman's own State to speak for themselves, and if the gentleman will consult them he will find an alarming increase in violation of both the Federal and the State prohibition laws, and I believe that the conditions in the State of Georgia as to violation of the liquor law is such that this House can take judicial and legislative notice of it.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Might I also call to the gentleman's attention the fact that in the report of the provost marshal general to the Secretary of War on the operations of the selected-service system, to December 20, 1918, one of the States mentioned where forcible resistance to the draft existed was the State of Georgia.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That has nothing to do with this, but I want to say this about the State of Georgia in all fairness, that the State of Georgia in so far as liquor conditions are concerned is no worse than other States of the Union.

Mr. TARVER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. TARVER. The statement of the gentleman made with reference to violation of the liquor laws in Georgia was based upon the records, I presume, indicating the number of distilleries seized?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the number of arrests and convictions.

Mr. TARVER. The fact that the law is enforced and that violators of the law are arrested is no evidence to sustain the gentleman's charge. The fact that in some sections of the country violators go unpunished and no arrests are made does not sustain the contention that the law is not violated there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I refuse to yield further and say as to the gentleman's very clumsy innuendo as to my State, that he will find that in comparison to population, the conditions in the State of New York are better than in his State.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of my amendment, which I offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington for the amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 4, after line 9, and after subsection (8) already inserted by the committee amendment, insert a new subsection, to read as follows:

"(9) An alien who is convicted of manufacturing, selling, or transporting intoxicating liquor, for which he is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of one years or more; or who is convicted of manufacturing, selling, or transporting intoxicating liquor, for which he is sentenced to imprisonment for a term which, when added to the term or terms to which sentenced under one or more previous convictions of manufacturing, selling, or transporting intoxicating liquor, amounts to one year or more. This subsection shall apply only in the case of offenses committed after the enactment of this act."

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment when it is offered as a substitute. The amendment which I propose is to page 3 of the bill after line 7, adding a new paragraph to follow subsection 2 of section 1. The amendment proposed by the committee through its chairman is to page 4 of the bill, and an entirely different part of the bill, and can not be properly considered as a substitute for my amendment. There ought to be a vote upon my amendment, and then a vote upon the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Both the amendment and the substitute are offered to the same section, and the Chair thinks the substitute is clearly germane and overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think this matter has been fully debated and the committee has looked as carefully as it could and given consideration to this. I think we should now have a vote and proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen of the committee, it is unfortunate that in the consideration of matters here we should at any time legislate with respect to what has happened in this State or that State. We should, at least, be broad enough to approach legislative matters in the interest of the whole country. Every once in a while slurs are made at some State. The gentleman from Massachusetts, very unkindly, so far as the statement that Georgia resisted the draft, put it in the RECORD that Georgia resisted the draft. He read and quoted from some War Department report. I do not care where that statement emanates from, it does our great State an injustice. In the name of the great State I have the honor to, in part, represent, I brand it as false. We just as well have this thing out now as later. The statement is not true. There were, perhaps, men in Georgia, as there were men in Massachusetts, as well as other States, who objected to the draft, but the citizens of the great State of Georgia were as loyal to the Stars and Stripes as were those of the great State of Massachusetts. [Applause.]

It is unbecoming a Member of this House to make these nasty digs and mean slurs at any of the States. As a Representative of the State that has thus been insulted, I resent the remarks, and whether they come from the War Department, or wherever they come from, I denounce them as unkind and unfounded. [Applause.] The people of a whole State ought not be indicted by the War Department report because of the attitude of some of its citizens. I claim no superior patriotism for Georgians but they are patriotic, and the State of Georgia is one of the great sovereign States of this Union, and is entitled to proper respect here and elsewhere.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, supplementing the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS], I want to say that we saw in New York City a great number of men of alien blood march forth to the war and perform nobly, as did those living in other cities and States. When the leaders of the immigration restrictionist movement and the drys get together they can furnish a melting pot that would satisfy a witch burner. This amendment is another tower to hypocrisy in America.

I am surprised that the chairman of this Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has capitulated to the drys. This matter has nothing whatever to do with the immigration bill. The committee refused to have anything to do with it at first, but they are now panic-stricken when the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] offers his amendment, so that immigration is going to be tainted with the corruption of prohibition. But I am not much surprised. I think the Labor Department is one of the best departments in Washington; and if there is any gravy in this thing, I think they ought to have some of it. That department will be as much corrupted as any other department with which the prohibition fanatics have come in contact.

Who in this day and generation is going to say that the bootlegger is undesirable? How are you going to get by common sense on this proposition? I am not surprised that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] should offer his amendment. He speaks of violations of the Volstead Act as being on a par with violation of the narcotic act. Quite evidently there is a great difference. Narcotics poison the minds of American people, and the bootleggers are catering to the ordinary appetites of Americans. This amendment can not only affect the violators; it affects their families also. It affects thousands of men because they happen to sell booze a couple of times and get caught. Here is an American citizen buying liquor from an alien bootlegger. The alien bootlegger goes into the business in order to support his family. You give three cheers for the American violator. I suppose this amendment will prevail, although it is nonsense on the face of it. The House was off its feed when by its vote it turned down the $24,000,000 additional appropriation for prohibition enforcement. I congratulate all the dry gentlemen on once more answering "present" when the captains of the drys demand it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Washington for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now occurs on the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 3, line 18, after the word "false," strike out the words "or misleading," so that paragraph 5 will read as follows:

"(5) The alien who hereafter willfully enters the United States at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or eludes examination or inspection by immigration officials, or obtains entry to the United States by the willfully false representation or the willful concealment of a material fact."

Mr. SABATH. That is the amendment I submit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the debate has closed on all amendments to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is correct. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDSON. The House has adopted an amendment of the committee. Would it now be proper to offer an amendment to that amendment adopted by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HUDSON. It is part of the section, is it not, and would it not be in order to amend it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman should have offered an amendment to the amendment when it was pending. It is too late now. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 4 strike out the "ten" and substitute "five" for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, that amendment was offered yesterday and voted down.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no amendment pending. The gentleman has not sent it to the desk in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. For the purposes of subsections (6) and (7) of section 1—

(a) No conviction shall serve as a basis for deportation proceedings unless such conviction is in a court of record and the judgment on such conviction has become final;

(b) In the case of a sentence for an indeterminate term in which the minimum term under the sentence is less than one year, the term actually served shall be considered the term for which sentenced; and

(c) An offense of which an alien, after conviction, has been unconditionally pardoned, shall not be considered an offense.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: On page 4, line 10, strike out "(6) and (7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6), (7), (8), and (9)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. (a) If any alien has been arrested and deported in pursuance of law, he shall be excluded from admission to the United States whether such deportation took place before or after the enactment of this act, and if he enters or attempts to enter the United States after the expiration of 60 days after the enactment of this act, he shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall, unless a different penalty is otherwise expressly provided by law, be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

(b) For the purposes of this section any alien ordered deported (whether before or after the enactment of this act) who has left the United States shall be considered to have been deported in pursuance of law, irrespective of the source from which the expenses of his transportation were defrayed or of the place to which he departed.

(c) An alien subject to exclusion from admission to the United States under this section who is employed upon a vessel arriving in the United States shall not be entitled to any of the landing privileges allowed by law to seamen.

(d) So much of section 3 of the immigration act of 1917 (U. S. C. title 8, sec. 136(j)) as reads as follows: "persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port or their attempt to be admitted from foreign contiguous territory the Secretary of Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission" is amended to read as follows: "persons who have been excluded from admission and deported in pursuance of law, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a place outside the United States or their attempt to be admitted from foreign contiguous territory the Secretary of Labor has consented to their reapplying for admission."

(e) So much of section 18 of the immigration act of 1917 (U. S. C. title 8, sec. 154) as reads as follows: "or knowingly to bring to the United States at any time within one year from the date of deportation any alien rejected or arrested and deported under any provision of this act, unless prior to reembarkation the Secretary of Labor has consented that such alien shall reapply for admission, as required by section 3 hereof" is amended to read as follows: "or knowingly to bring to the United States any alien excluded or arrested and deported under any provision of law until such time as such alien may be lawfully entttled to reapply for admission to the United States." The amendment made by this subsection shall take effect on the expiration of 60 days after the enactment of this act, but the provision amended shall remain in force for the collection of any fine incurred before the effective date of such amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SABATH: Page 4, line 24, strike out all after the word "deported," on line 24, all of line 25, and up to and including the word "of," in line 1, page 25, so that provision (a), section 3, will read as follows:

"SEC. 3 (a) If any alien has been arrested and deported after the enactment of this act, and if he enters or attempts to enter the United States after the expiration of 60 days after the enactment of this act, he shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall, unless a different penalty is otherwise expressly provided by law, be punished by imprisonment for not more than two years or by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman and the members of the committee will agree to this amendment. I feel they are interested in drafting a law that will be upheld by the courts. As this section is now drafted there is no question that it is a retroactive provision, because it provides for the punishment of those who have committed offenses, long before the adoption of this act. My amendment provides for the same deportation but for offenses committed by those who have been deported since the adoption of this law or this act, so as to make it lawful, and make it legal, and so the courts will uphold it.

I do not believe it should be the policy of this House to pass laws that are retroactive or exposte facto, laws which the courts have frequently held are void. For that reason I am hopeful the chairman and the committee will agree to this amendment. It will strengthen the provision; it will make it absolutely legal, and I feel justice requires that we should not enact legislation, as I have stated, which is retroactive.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BURTNESS. What offense committed in the past does the gentleman claim is punishable by this section?

Mr. SABATH. It provides for deportations which took place before the enactment of this act.

Mr. BURTNESS. But the act which is punishable is the attempt to come in again, is it not?

Mr. SABATH. No; that is not the fact. This is the provision, that if at any time a man has been deported, for instance, for overstaying his leave, we will say, three, four, or five years before this law was enacted, he should not be punished under this act. I say that such a stringent provision should not apply to him in view of the fact that when he was ordered deported, years ago, this was not the law of the land. That is my position.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are thousands of Mexicans who have come across the line unlawfully and who are now within the United States. Has not the Congress the right to pass a law to deport them?

Mr. SABATH. There is no question about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that ex poste facto?

Mr. SABATH. No.

Mr. BLANTON. Can not Congress provide for the deportation of any certain class of people?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not ex poste facto if it applies to a whole class.

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman that there are many of them here in violation of the law and that they should be deported. We have embodied such a provision in this act and that is being taken care of. There is no question about that.

Now, I am again going to appeal to the gentlemen of the committee to grant my request for an amendment of paragraph 5 of section 2, which I believe should be eliminated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Proceedings for the deportation of an alien made deportable by this act may be begun at any time after the entry of such alien, without regard to any of the periods prescribed in the immigration act of 1917; but no proceedings based on subsection (6) or (7) of section 1 of this act shall be begun after the expiration of three years after the termination of the imprisonment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Washington: Page 7, line 20, strike out "(6) or (7)" and insert in lieu thereof "(6), (7), (8), or (9)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 5 to offer an amendment striking out the word "of," in line 14, and inserting the word "to."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to section 5, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I object, pending a statement as to what the amendment is.

Mr. CROSSER. It is for the purpose of correcting the language, changing the word "of," in the last part of line 14, and making it "to." It is not good English as it stands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will have to object to that, Mr. Chairman. The last several bills contain that language.

Mr. CROSSER. If they do contain such language in like connection, they were wrongly phrased, and I insist that the English at least should be proper. There is no reason why we should use wrong phraseology or bad grammar merely because there are other matters in dispute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let us avoid diction and grammar in this connection.

Mr. CROSSER. But the diction in this case is important.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to subparagraph (6) of section 1, on page 3, because it seems to me, from a reading of the two or three lines there, that there is a contradiction. It provides that one of the aliens who may be deported is—

An alien who is convicted of any offense (committed after the enactment of this act and at any time after entry).

If this provision were enacted into law to-day, the alien could not be convicted, under the first language, unless the offense was committed after to-day; but the next language provides that he shall not be convicted unless his offense is "committed after the enactment of this act and at any time after entry." Suppose he came in a year ago?

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will notice that the language is inclusive. Two distinct things must take place. The offense must be committed after the enactment of this act and it must be committed after entry.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then say so, and leave out the words "at any time," because his entry may have been a year ago, and "any time after entry" means any time within that year.

Mr. TILSON. It provides "at any time after entry" and something else—"after the enactment of this act."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is a direct contradiction in language to say "after enactment of this act and at any time after entry."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to return to subparagraph (6) of section 1, on page 3. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I did not have the time to prepare the amendment I desired, so I move to strike out the last word, and I fully recognize it matters not how carefully the amendment might be prepared, it will not receive much consideration to-day. Still, I want to bring it to your attention for just a few moments.

Section 6 provides:

> Proceedings for the deportation of an alien made deportable by this act may be begun at any time after the entry of such alien, without regard to any of the periods prescribed in the immigration act of 1917.

The present law provides when these deportations can be had. This proposed law says, regardless of the time that the alien may have resided in the United States, he should be deported. Now, there may be men who have resided here for 12, 15, 18, or 20 years. He may be a married man, and may have three, four, or five children born in the United States, and he may be guilty of making a little home brew at home, yet some neighbor who does not like his looks reports him, and he is convicted, and then is convicted, perhaps, a second time, for taking a drink with a friend. Under this provision of the bill it matters not whether that be ascertained 3, 5, or 10 years hence, or whether it has occurred 10 years ago, he can be apprehended and deported. I just want you to know what you are voting on to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. There is one good thing the bill does, and that is that some Mexicans who have come into the United States unlawfully within the last five years may be deported if the department can get enough money to apprehend them. But how about those who came in six, seven, or eight years ago? There were thousands that came across the border unlawfully. You can go up and down the Mexican border in Texas for 10 and 15 miles and you will not see a house, and sometimes you will not see an immigration agent for 40 miles. They can wade across the river in lots of places. They come into Texas by hordes all of the time. If you take the Texas & Pacific Railroad, that runs from Texarkana to El Paso, 900 miles, you will find that practically every section hand is a Mexican. Take the hotels close to the border, and practically all the employees who work in the hotels are Mexicans. Take many of the stores, and the employees are Mexicans because they can get them for a stipend by the month. They are taking away jobs from American citizens. I am surprised that this committee would permit that to exist any longer.

I know that my friend Judge Box has been making a just fight against this situation for years. He gets a little handout now and then from the committee, but it does not help him much. Why could not the committee have put a provision in here, and why could not the Appropriations Committee give the department enough to apprehend the thousands of these Mexicans who are in Texas now unlawfully and put them back across the Rio Grande and keep them there? Then you would not have the report coming in here from Austin, Tex., and many other places that many Americans are going to be without jobs and many Mexicans are to be without jobs until another cotton crop comes in.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Mexicans can come over here by the thousands—they do not come illegally, they come because there is no quota against them; they could come in by the thousands or 5,000 a day. They are not here illegally, because they come under the law and because there is no restriction against them. There is no quota.

Mr. BLANTON. What about the head tax? They do not pay the head tax required by law.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER. These Mexicans also come into Wisconsin in droves, and take the places of American citizens in the factories and on the farm. Often we see the spectacle of war veterans walking the streets unable to obtain employment because of the unfair competition of cheap Mexican labor.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the energetic, enterprising 300-pound Member from Wisconsin put some of his energy into action along that line and stop it?

Mr. SCHAFER. If the gentleman will read the hearings he will see that I appeared before the Immigration Committee in behalf of the Box bill, which would put the nationals of Mexico under the quota restrictions.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Even the payment of the head tax would not disturb this influx for the reason that the sugar-beet growers and the railroads would pay the head tax in order to get the Mexicans in. You have got to stop it.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the committee stop it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Because the influence of the sugar-beet growers and the railroads is too strong.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman know why it has not been stopped?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In my opinion, the employment of a quota on both borders and contiguous territory in South America and in Central America is inevitable, but you have not the laws in accord with it that will permit it without several preliminary amendments.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Washington will go down to the international bridge at Brownsville, or if he will go to the one at Laredo, or at El Paso, or any of those international bridges——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I have been to several of them.

Mr. BLANTON. And stand there, he will see the hordes that come across the bridges with no intention of ever going back, coming across to get jobs of Americans, and if he would ride up and down the Rio Grande River for miles and see them coming in in hordes, the gentleman would take some action to stop it. I am sorry that he is not going to be able to take much action along that line, but somebody else in his place ought to do it, and it ought to be stopped, and if we do not do it we are going to have Americans starving to death in the Hoover administration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And a bringing down of a standard of wages.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, you have been discussing for a few minutes a matter with which I as one member of the committee have been wrestling for some years. I have not been inclined to inject that question into this debate because it is not the question at issue, but the situation pointed out by gentlemen during this debate exists. It is a very serious condition. It seriously embarrasses the whole purpose of the immigration law. There are conditions created by the incoming of people from Mexico and other American countries which it was and is the purpose of the immigration laws to prevent. The law is poorly enforced, mainly because the appropriations made for the border patrol are not adequate. There are great sections that under present provisions can not be adequately guarded. There are many interested in the importation of these poor peons. They are often imported and left in pitiful condition. They do take the places of American workmen, who are already put to it to find jobs; in fact, there are hundreds of thousands, possibly millions, of Americans out of employment now. They are raising a serious race question. During this month a riot occurred at a point in Texas where a crowd of white men who had been superseded by Mexicans, and who, after having notified the Mexicans to leave, fired into the camps of the Mexicans. This Congress ought to have statesmanship enough in it to look over the past and see what grave problems have been injected into our national life by the importation for labor purposes of great numbers of people essentially different from us in character, in social position, and otherwise. We are breeding another one of those great race questions. We are degrading labor, we are defeating all of the essential purposes of the immigration laws. These facts explain why I have worked so hard in committee and before this House and everywhere else to get this subject adequately dealt with. Seeing this big question, while I have the honor to remain one of you and on this committee, I shall continue to press it on you for attention. We have the opposition of the classes mentioned.

Practically every big beet-sugar manufacturer in the country opposes it, and every Class A railroad except one in the United States appeared before your committee and opposed the passage of this bill because they want their cheap subservient labor. Many other selfish and powerful influences have arrayed themselves against the restriction of this immigration. As against such influences, a few men, thinking only of the public welfare, are not strong enough to get action even when they have justice and patriotic considerations of every kind on their side.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOX. Yes.

Mr. W. T. FITZGERALD. Another feature I suggest to the gentleman is from a moral standpoint. They are poisoning the American citizen. They are of a class that come across the line which are very undesirable from that standpoint alone.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman from Ohio is correct. I had the privilege of making a statement covering several hours before the committee. And I tried to place before the committee some of the facts that have come to my knowledge. They are badly infected with tuberculosis and other diseases; there are many paupers among them; there are many criminals; they work for lower wages; they are objectionable as immigrants when tried by the tests applied to other aliens. Of course I am not talking about the better class of people of our neighboring countries, but I am talking about the poor unfortunate beings who are poverty stricken and drifting about the country hunting for work at any price. Quite often they are induced to come here by our own people, who employ them for a while and then leave them to drift from one place to another, the victims of all kinds of suffering and mistreatment. We will correct this evil some time, perhaps after it is too late, though I hope we will deal with it in time to remedy the situation before it becomes much worse than it now is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. If any alien is liable to deportation upon any ground specified in any paragraph of this act, he shall be deported whether or not he is liable to deportation upon a ground specified in any other paragraph of this act or in any other law, and any alien who is liable to deportation upon a ground specified in any law other than this act shall be deported whether or not he is liable to deportation upon a ground specified in this act.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, a great deal has been said in the last few moments about the situation on the Mexican border. Since we have adopted the quota plan of immigration we have watched the borders on the Pacific coast and on the Atlantic coast very thoroughly, and it is, indeed, difficult for the aliens to get through those borders, but we have not looked after the borders to the north or south. It is not the fault of the Department of Labor. I think we have as fine a lot of men along those borders as we could possibly get, but we have not enough, nor do we provide enough money to enable the department to protect those borders. The question of Mexican immigration has been mentioned here to-day. I would like to see the laws we have at the present time enforced. Mexican immigrants are subject to the following provisions to-day:

That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who practice polygamy or believe in or advocate the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property, prostitutes, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons likely to become a public charge (this clause excluding aliens on the ground likely to become a public charge has been shifted from its position in section 2 of the immigration act of 1907 to its present position in section 3 of this act in order to indicate the intention of Congress that aliens shall be excluded upon said ground for economic as well as other reasons and with a view to overcoming the decision of the Supreme Court in Gegiow v. Uhl, 239 U. S. 3 (S. Rept. 352, 64th Cong., 1st sess.)); persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port or their attempt to be admitted from foreign contiguous territory the Secretary of Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission; persons whose tickets or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who are assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such persons do not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign government, either directly or indirectly, stowaways, except that any such stowaway, if otherwise admissible, may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor. (See rule 3, subdivision O.)

In addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish (see rule 3, subdivision N): Provided, That any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter.

In addition the Mexican is required to pay a head tax of $8. I believe we could keep out most Mexicans to which objection has been made to-day if we simply enforced the laws above mentioned. [Applause.]

Mr. EDWARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREE. I will.

Mr. EDWARDS. Would the passage of the Box Act accomplish what the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. FREE. No sir. Unless we provide the money to enforce it. The reason I took my feet to-day is this. We have a feeling here that by passing a law you will stop immigration. Unless you back it up with the money for enforcement and the protection of your borders it will not mean a thing. We are not enforcing the laws we have to-day on the northern and southern borders of our country.

Mr. EDWARDS. Why not? We have the money.

Mr. FREE. The committee has been criticised because we have not done anything in reference to this situation. We have been appealing to this House for eight years to my personal knowledge for money to protect the borders. We had an increase of a million dollars in the last Congress, but why pass another law when we do not enforce those we already have on our statute books?

Mr. EDWARDS. How much will it take?

Mr. FREE. Several million dollars in addition to what we have at the present time.

Mr. EDWARDS. Why not put it up to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREE. I will.

Mr. NEWTON. What the gentleman has said about the borders is also true of getting rid of undesirables—we ought to have more money to deport them.

Mr. FREE. Absolutely. We have investigated, and there are over 200,000 people in this country who should be deported. We only deport a few and from the places where they can be easily found.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREE. I will.

Mr. HUDSON. Does the gentleman not recognize that if we can have a coordination of the enforcement departments that have to do with enforcement laws we might have sufficient money to enforce those laws, but as long as we have a system that puts four different groups of enforcement officers on the borders, each one to do a litle particular thing while allowing the violation of any of the other laws, we will have the very conditions suggested.

Mr. FREE. That would help a great deal. I want to say concerning the men along the border, that they have been cooperating to a remarkable degree, and they are a fine lot of men, and they are doing the job as best they can; but we need more of them and more authority to cooperate.

Mr. HUDSON. I am not complaining about the inefficiency of these gentlemen. I am simply complaining of the fact that from the deviousness of the law their activities are made inefficient. The law makes them inefficient. A man in one department of the service has not a right to arrest a man for doing something that does not come within his jurisdiction. The whole thing is wrong in theory and in practice.

Mr. FREE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, it is believed from what we hear that we receive a tremendous immigration from Mexico. I have been asked by a number of Members how it is that our present restriction of immigration admits only 165,000, and, notwithstanding that, over 300,000 arrived last year? There is no restriction, no quota, on Mexico, Canada, Central and South America, Cuba, and the West Indies, and for that reason they can come in in as large numbers as they desire. But they should be, and they are, subject to the literacy test and to the provisions of the law of 1917. I agree that if the law is rigidly enforced on the Mexican border hundreds of thousands could not have qualified or have been admitted.

But do not lose sight of this fact: What applies to Mexico in a great measure applies also to Canada. Why, last year alone we received from Canada—though our total immigration from entire Europe was but 165,000—81,506 of which a record is made. So it is not only immigration from Mexico, but also from Canada, because what the gentleman from Massachusetts said a moment ago is true; there are thousands of our own people unemployed in Massachusetts, and why should we permit that tremendous number to come in here without the quota from Canada and Mexico?

I introduced, three times, and advocated unsuccessfully, a bill placing Mexico, South and Central America, Canada, Cuba, and the West Indies under quota as it is applicable to European immigration. We need a few more men on our border line. I know the chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has tried to secure larger appropriations, and he did. I have advocated the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUDSON], who spoke a little while ago on the centralization of our forces and activities along the border line. I do not know why we should have a revenue patrol, and an immigration patrol, and a prohibition patrol on the border, one not cooperating with the other. They can be merged into one, and then we would have efficient control, and that would control not only immigration but also prohibition and revenue violations and other violations that are going on. I hope, therefore, that the chairman will be strong enough to convince the Treasury Department and the Department of Labor and other officials, who have the power, to bring about unification that it be done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves that all debate on this section be now closed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. Upon the final conviction of any alien of any offense in any court of record of the United States or of any State or Territory it shall be the duty of the clerk of the court to notify the Secretary of Labor, giving the name of the alien convicted, the nature of the offense of which convicted, the sentence imposed, and, if imprisoned, the place of imprisonment, and, if known, the place of birth of such alien, his nationality, and the time when and place where he entered the United States.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a very friendly suggestion to the men from the border States, which I hope will be taken in good part. For about six years you have been passing legislation to regulate conditions in New York City, telling us how to raise a family, what to eat and what to drink, and when to eat with a knife and when to eat with a fork. In the meantime you have been neglecting your own doorsteps. I say, keep you hands off New York for a while and see that you enact a little good, wholesome national legislation for the benefit of your own constituents. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute to the Senate bill as amended.

The committee substitute for the Senate bill was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the committee automatically rises and reports the bill to the House.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. BACON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill (S. 5094) making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law, reported that that committee had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the title be amended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can be done after the passage of the bill. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LAGUARDIA moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Immigration with instructions to report back the bill forthwith with the following amendments:

Page 3, line 20, after the word "offense," insert "involving moral turpitude."

On page 4, line 3, after the word "offense," insert "involving moral turpitude."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from New York to recommit the bill with instructions.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be amended.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise the remarks I have made from time to time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that all Members have that right for six days.

DRY VALLEY ROAD—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (S. 3881) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamaugua and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park, for printing under the rule.

EQUALIZATION OF THE RANK OF OFFICERS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy for printing under the rule.

CONSTRUCTION AT MILITARY POSTS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 13825) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes, for printing under the rule.

MINORITY VIEWS

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on Senate bill 3723, to amend and reenact subdivision (a) of section 209 of the transportation act, 1920.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

HOSPITAL CONSTRUCTION LEGISLATION

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes in order to give it certain helpful information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, various Members of the House are receiving letters and telegrams in considerable number expostulating because of the failure of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation to present a hospital construction program. It may be of service to Members if I very briefly explain the situation. This Congress has within a month appropriated $8,000,000 for new hospital construction and $3,250,000 for extensions, alterations, repairs, et cetera, making a total of $11,250,000 available for construction purposes in the coming fiscal year. The Veterans' Bureau informs us that this is as much as it can wisely expend in the 12 months onward from the 1st of July next. Additional authorizations now, therefore, would not result in the expenditure of a dollar more of money before July 1, 1930; on the other hand, it might do harm to the welfare of the soldiers themselves, in view of the probability of favorable action within a year on a measure which has been under consideration this week by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the measure contemplating the turning over of the soldiers' homes to the Veterans' Bureau. There are 10 of these, each with large tracts of land, and there would be great economy to the Government if it could take advantage, in the further construction of veterans' hospitals, of the land in question, together with the water, sewerage, lighting systems, and other necessities that need not be freshly provided or built new from the ground up. It is estimated roughly that by adding to these homes or building upon their lands we can get twice as many beds for the same money as if we built absolutely new hospitals. In view, then, of the strong probability that this change in the organization of the agencies for serving the soldiers of all wars will be brought about by next winter, and will make possible a considerable revision of the building program of the Veterans' Bureau, greatly to the advantage of all concerned, we will do well to make haste slowly.

Since nothing whatever is to be accomplished in the way of practical results by immediate action, it seems reasonable that we await the changed situation of affairs a year from now and then provide the money that is needed and that is certain to be provided in ample time. No veteran will suffer by this delay but, in my judgment, many veterans will gain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. I desire also to state that of the money we have recently appropriated $2,000,000 has not been allocated, and that gentlemen concerned with particular exigencies, feeling there is pressing need for immediate action, have open to them the doors of the Federal Board of Hospitalization. That board with the money already at its command can take care of the needs which seem to be most urgent.

It may be useful to add that there were hospitalized December 31, 1925, 21,899 service-connected cases; December 31, 1926, 19,267 such cases; January 31, 1928, 17,829; and September 30, 1928, 16,253. Hospital construction now under way will provide 1,690 beds within the next 12 months. Additional construction for which the money has been appropriated will provide in excess of 2,000 more. No name, with residence, of any veteran shown to be suffering from an injury or ailment resulting from service in the war that calls for hospitalization, who is unable to get it, is brought to our attention.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to answer the question first?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; if the gentleman has the time.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Do I gather from what the gentleman has said that we do not need any more legislation to secure the needed hospitals?

Mr. LUCE. No legislation is necessary to secure the allotment of $2,000,000 now at the command of the Veterans' Bureau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am going to ask unanimous consent to take up the Private Calendar for one hour this afternoon, and while I do not want to object——

Mr. RANKIN. I submit with all deference that the gentleman ought not to shut me off. I have only asked for five minutes.

Mr. IRWIN. I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. On the other hand, I thoroughly agree with the veterans' organizations that are asking for the passage of this bill for the further construction of hospitals which they deem necessary, and which I deem necessary, for taking care of our disabled ex-service men.

As to the proposition of waiting until the Congress takes over the old soldiers' homes, I desire to say that in the first place that is merely a remote probability, because the Grand Army of the Republic opposes our taking over those homes, and the chances are it will be a good many years before we arrive at that point.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is in error in his statement, I think, about the Grand Army of the Republic. It favors the taking over of the hospitals.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, well, we thought that before, at least you people did. We men from the South did not agree with you, but you brought it in on one bill and the representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic managed to have it stricken out, and they will do it again in all probability.

Besides, a great deal of this hospital need is in a section of the country that has no old soldiers' homes and where we could not use them, even if you were to take them over. So I submit that if we are going to take care of these men as they should be we ought not to delay this proposition but should call the Veterans' Committee together, take this bill up, and report it out, and pass it at this session of the Congress.

Oh, they say it would be some time before we could spend the money. Why, the American Legion of the State of Kentucky came before our committee three or fours years ago and some of us got behind them to help them get a hospital. They have just now decided on its location and perhaps purchased the ground on which to place it. So the longer you delay providing for the appropriation of the money for the building of these hospitals, the longer you are going to defer the day when these men will be properly cared for.

I can not agree with the conclusion reached by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], and I want to serve notice now that I shall continue to insist that the Veterans' Committee be called together and that this bill be reported out and passed at this session of the Congress. [Applause.]

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MEMORIAL BUILDING

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes in order to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes is to make a radio address on Washington's Birthday at 7.30 next Friday evening soliciting funds for the erection of the George Washington memorial building here in Washington.

The site on the Mall, as you know, was donated by the Congress and the foundations have already been built. It is now proposed to raise $7,000,000 from the American people in order to have the building finished by 1932, the two hundredth anniversary of George Washington's birth.

The American Legion originally did not look with much favor on the project because it believed it might interfere with the raising of the $5,000,000 American Legion fund for the disabled soldiers and the orphans. So far as I know, there would be no objection on the part of the American Legion at the present time, although I am not authorized to speak for the Legion. I am very glad to indorse the project personally and to help in any way within my power to further the construction of the George Washington memorial building by 1932.

I have been requested to make the following statement and take this opportunity to call attention to current plans for completing the erection in the city of Washington of the memorial edifice to George Washington:

As you will recall, in 1913 Congress donated a suitable and desirable tract of land on which, according to the terms of the bill giving the site, was to be erected an edifice in honor of George Washington. The work of planning and erecting the building was intrusted to a group of well-known Americans who formed themselves for that purpose into a corporate entity known as the George Washington Memorial Association.

The members of this association have labored long and well at their task. In 1921, with elaborate ceremonies in which the then President of the United States played the leading part, the corner stone was laid, and at the present time the foundations are completed.

It is particularly interesting to note that in determining exact plans for the memorial edifice the association accepted as its guide a desire expressed by George Washington himself. In various messages to Congress and in other public pronouncements and by a statement in his will, Washington urged the establishment of an institution for the general diffusion of knowledge, and also recommended the promotion of science, literature, and art.

With the foregoing in mind, the association plans to have an auditorium in the edifice which will seat 11,000 people and be available, under the administration of the Smithsonian Institution, for use by conventions of all groups of people and for all purposes, whether patriotic, commercial, political, social, and educational.

Thus the expressed wish of Washington will find fulfillment in this memorial, and also the auditorium with its large seating capacity, will supply a long-felt need in the city of Washington. Such a large meeting place is especially needed at this time in a connection to which I will later refer.

It is also planned to house permanently in the George Washington memorial a collection of priceless mementoes, documents, records, and trophies associated not only with Washington personally, but with all phases of the history of the United States. This museum which the memorial will contain will become of national importance.

Public interest in this George Washington memorial project is widespread at this time, because it is now evident that such a building as this memorial will be vitally needed in 1932 in order that the international and great celebration which will be held on Washington's Birthday in that year may be contained within its spacious rooms and in the midst of its most appropriate surroundings. February 22, 1932, will be the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Washington, and it is expected that the celebration of that day will far exceed any memorial exercise ever held anywhere. Foreign devotees of Washington will join with our own American patriots in paying honor to the memory of our first President.

A plan has been devised by the George Washington Memorial Association for going ahead with the construction of the edifice so as to have it completed by February, 1932. The Hon. Charles Evans Hughes will deliver a radio address at 7.30 p. m., Friday next, which is Washington's Birthday, over a nationwide chain of stations. I understand that Mr. Hughes will explain details of the memorial and will also point out that public support and public subscription to the fund is necessary in order that the seven or more millions of dollars needed may be made quickly available.

I believe most sincerely that no project has ever been called to public attention that will so readily find sympathy and response as will this proposition to suitably honor the memory of George Washington. I have made this statement here to-day in order that you ladies and gentlemen will know about the project, and I take this opportunity to urge the entire American people to learn more of this plan from Mr. Hughes on Friday evening next. [Applause.]

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the Private Calendar for one hour and consider such bills as are not objected to, the bills to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not have anything on the Private Calendar, but it does not seem to me that we ought to take up the calendar at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on Saturday, when none of the Members of the House have been notified. However, I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that it is the desire of every Member, especially the chairmen of the committees who have bills in charge, that all of their bills shall be considered. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the chairman of the committee handling this bill would give some explanation of this matter of compensation.

Mr. IRWIN. Mr. Speaker, the facts in the case are that William Gaffney was employed at Hog Island, Pa., by the laid-up fleet. On August 2, 1925, he was on duty. This was on Sunday. He had to report for duty in the morning. He was not permitted to leave the yard or the ship, but the weather was very warm, and the officer permitted him to go in swimming. He was on duty. He was not permitted to go outside because he was on duty for the purpose of looking after fires and the menacing of shipping.

Mr. HUDSON. Then he was not on furlough?

Mr. IRWIN. He was on active duty.

Mr. DARROW. Is it not true also that they encouraged these boys there to engage in these activities because they were required to be there in case of emergency?

Mr. IRWIN. That is true. They encouraged them to enter into a little swimming contest and things of that kind. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is correct. The officers encouraged the boys to get out and play baseball and go in swimming, but they were on duty all of the time.

Mr. HUDSON. I am sure that the gentleman has made the record clear that this man was on duty at this time. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to state that I reported this bill as chairman of a subcommittee. We amended the bill by reducing the amount from $100 to $80. I now find that the $20 we thought would be paid to this undertaker will not be paid to him because the father of the dead man would have a prior claim, so I am going to ask that the amount provided in the committee amendment be increased from $80 to $100. I am giving this notice to the House before the bill passes the objection stage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to cover bill rendered by J. D. Baldwin (undertaker), 1522 Richmond Street, Brunswick, Ga., for services in the preparation and shipment of the body of J. D. Harrell, who died while working on the Government dredge Banyard, and which funeral expenses were incurred at the request of the captain of said dredge.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all of lines 3 down to and including the word "by" in line 4 and insert in lieu thereof:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government the sum of $80 to."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the $80 in the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof $100.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 8, amend the committee amendment by striking out "$80" and inserting in lieu thereof "$100."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House return to Calendar No. 809.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Rayhill, late of Twenty-second Battery, United States Field Artillery, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a private of said battery of the United States Field Artillery on the 26th day of April, 1902: Provided, That no bounty, pension, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLES ROBERT CONROY

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the first bill back of the star, Calendar No. 759. It is Mr. MURPHY's bill (H. R. 15060) who is in the hospital. I think there was only one objection to it before, and I think that objection has been satisfied, and I will be glad to have unanimous consent for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 759, the first bill back of the star. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, have all the objectors to the bill on that occasion withdrawn their objections?

Mr. HUDSON. I was the objector, as Mr. MURPHY was not on the floor.

Mr. SCHAFER. Has the gentleman looked into the matter and withdraws his objection?

Mr. HUDSON. I do.

Mr. SCHAFER. I shall not object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to reinstate Charles Robert Conroy as a cadet in the United States Military Academy in the class of 1932: Provided, That this shall not operate to increase the corps of cadets at said academy as now authorized by law.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Mary L. Roebken and Esther M. Roebken, in full settlement of all claims for damages growing out of a collision of an Army ambulance, operated by the United States, with a Ford car in which said Mary L. Roebken and Esther M. Roebken were riding on Sixteenth Street, in the city of Washington, D. C., on July 20, 1924.

SEC. 2. Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws George W. With the following committee amendments:

Line 8, after the word "States," insert "the 24th day of July, 1865." Also strike out "That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act" and insert "That no back pay, bounty, pension, or allowance shall be held to have accrued prior to the passage of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRITISH STEAMSHIP "KYLEAKIN"

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16117) to authorize the payment of an indemnity to the owners of the British steamship Kyleakin for damages sustained as a result of a collision between that vessel and the U. S. S. William O'Brien.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Salvesen & Co., 29 Great Bernard Street, Leith, Scotland, care of the British Embassy, Washington, D. C., the sum of $3,484.33, or so much thereof as may be required to purchase exchange not to exceed the amount of £715 sterling 19 s. 8 d., in full and final settlement of the claim of the said Chr. Salvesen & Co. for damages sustained by the British steamship Kyleakin in a collison with the U. S. S. William O'Brien in Barry Roads, Cardiff, Wales, on November 26, 1917; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sufficient sum to carry out the purpose of this act.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1618) for the relief of Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; but there is an adverse report from the Secretary of War.

Mr. ACKERMAN. I understand that an amendment has been added which obviated that.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the amendment which has been incorporated meet all of the objections of the Secretary of War?

Mr. ACKERMAN. I understand that it did. This is merely a bill to give the parties an opportunity to be heard in the Court of Claims. No money is appropriated in the bill. It is simply a right to try the matter out before the Court of Claims.

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes; but we do not always send every claim that comes knocking at the door of Congress to the Court of Claims. I notice that the Secretary of War in the final paragraph in his letter states:

The circumstances surrounding this entire case do not appeal to me as justifying a favorable recommendation from the War Department upon the contemplated legislation, and I therefore recommend that the bill be not favorably reported by your committee.

Mr. HUDSON. And does not the bill also take away one of the defenses from the Government?

Mr. SCHAFER. It does.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. But the report of the committee does not waive that defense in the bill. We strike that out, so that there is no objection upon the part of the War Department, except as to the statute of limitations. We have stricken out their right to waive that defense.

Mr. SCHAFER. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG], chairman of the War Claims Committee, believe that the objection of the Secretary of War as contained in his letter of January 7, 1929, appearing in the report, has been overcome by the incorporation of the committee amendment?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I do in everything except the waiving of the statute of limitations, and of course you have to waive that if it is sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will not object in view of that statement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina insist upon his objection?

Mr. WARREN. I withdraw my objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims of the United States be, and hereby is, given jurisdiction to hear and determine the claim of Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson, her husband, of Jacksonville, Fla., and to render judgment against the United States for compensation for the use, occupancy, and possession of a tract of land belonging to the said Margaret W. Pearson and John R. Pearson, her husband, situated in Duval County, Fla., during the period from December 10, 1920, to November 5, 1921; and for waste or damage to the inheritance, if any, attributable to the United States while in possession of said land.

SEC. 2. Said claim shall not be considered as barred because of any existing statute of limitations with respect to suits against the United States; nor because of any tort committed by any agent of the United States resulting in damage or waste to the inheritance; nor because of noncompliance with section 3744, Revised Statutes.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

Page 2, after the word "States" strike out the remainder of line 6, all of line 7, and part of line 8 down to and including the word "inheritance."

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time the House authorized for the consideration of these claims has expired.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE DESTRUCTION OF THE BATTLESHIP "MAINE"

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, at Fort Myer, the observance of the anniversary of the sinking of the Maine was held, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a short oration delivered by the Cuban ambassador on that occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman the remarks of the other speakers on that occasion?

Mr. LEAVITT. I have not.

Mr. EDWARDS. I have no objection.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, yesterday at Fort Myer there took place the annual observance held on the anniversary of the sinking of the battleship Maine. It was an observance held under the leadership of the veterans of the war with Spain and was attended by Col. Orestes Ferara, the ambassador from Cuba, and Commander in Chief Col. W. L. Grayson, of the Spanish War Veterans.

Colonel Ferarra, who was a distinguished soldier in the army of his country when the United States engaged in that war in the cause of humanity, and who has continued to serve Cuba with distinction and signal honor as her ambassador to our Republic, delivered an oration worthy of the occasion, of his country, and of the heroes of the Maine, in whose memory our two friendly nations thus joined in tribute.

I ask that as a mark of our appreciation the address of Ambassador Ferara may be printed in the RECORD:

ADDRESS OF COL. ORESTES FERARA, CUBAN AMBASSADOR TO THE UNITED STATES, AT FORT MYER, VA., FEBRUARY 15, 1929, THE THIRTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE DESTRUCTION OF THE BATTLESHIP "MAINE"

This event, which year after year we assemble to commemorate, far from losing with the passing of time its hallowed significance, actually grows in importance and forms a bond, ever stronger and more intimate, between the United States and Cuba.

When in history such a transcendent event occurs to a nation, augmenting its prestige, enhancing its power, bringing it greatness in many fields—such an event in time assumes majestic proportions. And the consequences which derive from it influence profoundly the deed which caused them.

In Habana Harbor, on the 15th of February, 1898, a formidable man-of-war, beautiful and severe in its sheath of armor, was destroyed by a terrible explosion. With it, on that tranquil and smiling Tropic night, many lives were sacrificed to the honor and glory of their country. There was weeping for the dead, and the sighing of bereaved mothers was heard over the southern seas. With the martyrs to duty, as their mortal remains were borne to their last resting place, went the benediction of two peoples, Cuban and American.

The necessities of the moment compelled severe measures. An armed struggle between two nations ensued, which settled once and for all a colonial conflict that had been impoverishing two peoples—one, the colonizer, Spain; the other, Cuba, which, having reached its majority, aspired to liberty and self-government.

Victory came soon.

Out of the trials of war the United States emerged more powerful and more united than ever. Cuba achieved to freedom, her people happy and grateful. The world had seen something strange and new—and great because of its disinterestedness. A nation had shed the blood of its citizens without aspirations of conquest, without greed of territory, without a wish for aggrandizement. The cause of civilization triumphed in many ways—in the creation of a power able to join force with justice; in the birth of a new nation; in an example to the world of altruism and of virtue.

These results constitute a magnificent epitaph to those whose lives were wiped out by the terrible explosion. The blood that was spilled yielded a rich benefice. More, even though for 31 years those heroes have been figures of glory and immortality, a new felicity yet rises from their sacrifice.

The Americas to-day are united in growing amity, in a continuing labor of peace and love. This hemisphere has listened to the imperative command imposed by the tradition of more than a century; has realized that it is consecrated to liberty and concord; and that the setting of an example of public virtue, the forging of international bonds inspired by morality and strengthened by right, is an act of the highest nobility.

The Americans are creating new principles of friendship among nations; are carrying to the distrustful field of international interests the definitions of standards of good and of evil, of justice and of injustice—and this in spite of opportunism and of self-interest. New precepts are being written; moral obligations are being assumed; manifestations, not of alliances, but of solidarity, are being made; codes are being drafted to resolve the conflicts always possible among groups; laws to resolve difficulties are being voluntarily accepted. That which yesterday seemed the tightly inclosed field of national justice is entering into the vast dominion of international justice.

The shadow of the tragedy of the Maine spreads beneficently over these noble efforts.

The victims of the Maine were a sacrifice to the independence of Cuba. Had it not been for their supreme gift, who knows what would have been the course of events?

Cuba, becoming independent with the aid of the United States and by the will of American statesmen and the American people, is a living proof that force need not be feared when it is animated and controlled by right. That a nation overpoweringly strong need not be regarded with suspicion, if it does not abuse its power, resort to violence, or give way to selfishness.

Many times in the past had the United States helped to independence other American nations, and these services had been remembered with infinite gratitude. But the love of country, like all the loves which turn into passions, caused many to think, as was natural: What would happen when the great Nation of the North, with its tremendous power, unchallengeable in the field of force, should have a justified excuse for expanding to the south? Would it hold back, denying itself the fruits always conceded to victory? Could it resist the enthusiasms of the moment, the aspirations of the multitude excited by military triumphs?

Could prudence, reflection, and a high concept of duty, of a duty never lived up to before, dominate the great Nation when its combined forces, military and economic, should have within its grasp the destinies of another?

These questions, not mere manifestations of suspicion, but of proper foresight, were an obstacle to American harmony. The extraordinary greatness of the United States was a cause of admiration, doubtless, on the part of other sister republics, but at the same time inspired anxiety. Accustomed to see by the example of milleniums that the strong did not recognize the rights of the weak, it was not irrational to think that in a difficult hour we should once more see the triumph of self-interest over right, of ambition over justice.

The situation in Cuba, which was produced in 1898 and which had its epilogue in 1902, came as a triumphant answer to all these doubts. The island of Cuba, since the time of Jefferson, had been the object of much thought by the United States. Its geographical situation throughout a century and a half had been considered as essential to the defense of the United States. Nevertheless, in the moment when the United States could have taken Cuba, annexing her as booty of war, it did not do so. And listening to the voice of its inhabitants the United States helped Cuba to freedom, guided her first steps, nurtured her economic life, and, routing the unbelievers, left Cuba as free in her own government as she is free geographically, as free as nature made her by giving her no other frontiers than the sea.

This noble deed has echoed in the minds of the statesmen of the Americas and in the hearts of its peoples, and ever since there has been forming, with the natural slowness with which collective beliefs are created, a spirit which breathes confidence, security, and friendship.

This explains the recent great successes of Pan Americanism, the late conference at Habana and at Washington, and their results. Because of this there awaits us a future, not alone of concord but of political and economic understandings. Because of this this hemisphere will point the way for the world; not easy, certainly, but indispensable to progress, of human solidarity.

The dead of the 15th of February, 1898, are sponsors for these benefices. That tragic night has been transformed into a radiant day for civilization.

Reverently we salute the memory of those who died to create a new America and to better the destinies of men.

I thank you.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to amend section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit the taxation of shares of national banks upon a fair and equitable basis

Whereas the several States of the Union are prohibited from taxing the personal property of national banks, and may tax their shares only as permitted by Congress under the provisions of section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which, in effect, permits the taxation of such shares only at a rate not higher than the tax imposed upon money owned by individuals and by them invested in mortgages, bonds, and other securities (commonly known as money and credits) in which national banks may invest their funds; and

Whereas it is unfair to tax an individual so using his own funds at as high a rate as bank shares, which derive the benefit of the investment returns of from 7 to 10 times their own amount in the form of deposits; and

Whereas every attempt at taxation of money and credits at more than a relatively nominal rate has always proved a failure, and the practice of taxing them at low rates has, in each of the many States employing that method, resulted in reaching enormously greater amounts of such property and in producing a larger revenue and in better distribution and equalizing of the burden of maintaining government; and

Whereas the courts have held invalid taxes levied on bank shares in States that undertake to tax money and credits at the same rate as bank shares on the ground that a substantial part of such money and credits are not, and by reason of the failure of owners to declare them for taxation at a relatively high rate can not be taxed at all; and

Whereas the schemes contained in section 5219 of taxing bank shares by income or excise rather than by value are neither practicable nor adaptable to States raising their revenue by the ad valorem method of taxation, which method has always been and now is in use by substantially all of the States in the Union; and

Whereas the American Bankers Association and the associations of bankers in various States, entrenched behind the wall raised about them by this act of Congress, have declared that they do not trust State legislatures to tax them, have united in exerting every effort in opposition to relief to the States by the necessary amendment of that section, and have demanded that the States abandon their present well-tried and satisfactory methods of taxation and substitute an income or excise tax, the result of which has been to reduce the tax on bank shares by more than one-half in every one of the three States in which it has been adopted, with the consequent increase of the burden to be borne by other taxpayers; and

Whereas there is no organization corresponding to the bankers' associations to protect the interests of the general taxpaying public in the 40 States whose present methods of taxing bank shares are now found to be unworkable and invalid under section 5219; and

Whereas the deplorable situation in which these States find themselves, faced as they are with the choice of radically altering their present taxation systems in compliance with the wishes of the bankers or of virtually exempting banks from taxation, demands immediate action in the amendment of section 5219 so as to permit the taxation of national banks on a basis that is fair and equitable to themselves and to the general taxpaying public: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota (the House of Representatives concurring), that the Congress of the United States be, and the same hereby is, urgently petitioned and requested to amend section 5219, Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit the taxation of the shares of national banks upon a fair and equitable basis, as contemplated by bills now pending before the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress and amendments proposed thereto.

W. I. NOLAN,
President of the Senate.
JOHN A. JOHNSON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

G. H. SPAETH,
Secretary of the Senate.

Passed the house the 13th day of February, 1929.

JOHN J. LEVIN,
Chief Clerk House of Representatives.

Approved February 14, 1929.

THEODORE CHRISTIANSON,
Governor of the State of Minnesota.

Filed February 15, 1929.

MIKE HOLM, Secretary of State.

Mr. WATERMAN presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

Senate Joint Memorial 1 (by Senators Headlee and Shawcroft, Messrs. Sylvester, Mathias, Johnson (Conejos), and Jones)

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, again respectfully represents to your honorable body that what is known as the San Luis Valley on the Rio Grande, in which is located some 2,000,000 acres of irrigable, productive, agricultural land in the State of Colorado, has been greatly damaged and retarded in its growth and development to the detriment of the peoples of the San Luis Valley and the Commonwealth of the State of Colorado, in this, to wit:

That for and on account of the action taken by the Congress of the United States and different departments of the Government of the United States, and particularly on request of the honorable Secretary of State, contrary to the advice of the Attorney General of the United States, in the year 1896 an embargo was placed upon the construction of reservoirs on the upper Rio Grande in the State of Colorado.

That by reason and on account of such embargo, the peoples of the San Luis Valley were prevented from constructing reservoirs whereby they could scientifically and economically administer the distribution of irrigation waters from the Rio Grande River in that territory.

That as a direct result of the prohibition, illegally and unjustly placed upon the people of the San Luis Valley as aforesaid, a large amount of irrigation water was applied to lands in the springtime when the river was in flood during which period these people were prohibited from the construction of reservoirs to properly regulate their supply of water, in an attempt to secure a sufficient amount of ground storage to supply their crops during periods of drouth. This excessive use of water in the springtime resulted in the seeping of a large area of land aggregating several hundreds of thousands of acres theretofore very productive; a total loss of its productivity resulting, in a direct loss to the landowners and entrymen on the public domain in that locality variously estimated at from $187,000,000 to $200,000,000, in addition to the loss of homes and improvements erected at the cost of a lifetime of toil by the owners of such lands, and the desolation of a thriving and productive community, occupied by several thousands of happy, industrious, satisfied, and contented people, all citizens of the United States of America.

That in the year 1925, the embargo against the construction of reservoirs on the upper Rio Grande in Colorado was removed and was then found by the then Secretary of the Interior to have been illegally initiated and imposed.

That by the drainage of said lands and the construction of reservoirs now permitted, whereby the application of water in the future may be properly and scientifically regulated, said lands, now desolate and unproductive, may be reclaimed and again made productive; but before such reclamation can be provided for it is necessary that an outlet for the excess waters so applied to such lands which caused the seepage thereof, be provided for from what is known as the San Luis lakes to the Rio Grande, a distance of about 22 miles.

That the action of the governmental agencies of the United States in imposing such an embargo whereby the peoples of the San Luis Valley were prohibited from exercising rights unquestionably exercised and enjoyed by all other citizens, was unjust and discriminatory.

That the people of the San Luis Valley have never been recompensed in any particular for the great loss occasioned to them by these unwarranted and unjust acts of the United States Government, notwithstanding that fact that the peoples of southern New Mexico and western Texas on the Rio Grande River, under what is known as the Elephant Butte Dam, have been heretofore compensated by a direct appropriation of Congress in the amount of $1,000,000 to compensate them for 60,000 acre-feet of water ceded to the Republic of Mexico, which as a matter of fact, on account of the embargo heretofore mentioned, in practical operation was charged directly to the San Luis Valley in Colorado.

That the 60,000 acre-feet of water, heretofore ceded to Mexico by the United States, can be replaced in the Rio Grande by the construction of the outlet contemplated; 2,000 square miles can be added to the drainage area of the Rio Grande and the flow of the river be materially augmented, thereby furnishing an additional supply of water for the use of the people in New Mexico and Texas.

Your attention is respectfully directed to a similar memorial to the Congress of the United States adopted by the Twenty-sixth General Assembly of the State of Colorado, since the adoption of which at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior and the Reclamation Service and the State engineer of Colorado have made a joint study of this important matter.

We therefore again urge the Congress of the United States of America to take appropriate action to relieve as far as possible the territory devastated as a direct result of the embargo so imposed by providing an outlet from the San Luis lakes to the Rio Grande in order that these unfortunate people sacrificed upon the altar of what was in 1896, no doubt considered to be for the good of the Nation, be permitted to drain these lands and relieve the condition brought about by the imposition and maintenance for 30 years of an embargo illegally initiated and imposed.

DAVID ELLIOT,
President of the Senate.
ROYAL W. CALKINS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act as amended and supplemented, the pending question being on the first amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, on page 1, line 3, after the word "prescribed," to insert "in a criminal prosecution," so as to read:

That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I merely desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Very well.

Mr. BRUCE. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, and it is as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "wherever," in line 3, and substituting therefor the words "so far as"; and by inserting in line 6, after the word "exportation," the words "for commercial purposes."

Mr. REED of Missouri resumed and concluded the speech begun by him on Saturday, which is as follows:

Saturday, February 16, 1929

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to discuss not only the pending bill but the whole prohibition question, to marshal the facts and lay before the country the unspeakable condition to which we have been brought by prohibition.

On yesterday my duties as chairman of a committee compelled me to leave the floor. During my absence unanimous consent to limit debate was obtained. Because of that limitation I shall only be able to present the barest outlines of a picture which ought in all good conscience to be exposed in every detail.

I assert, Mr. President, that it will not be long until the moral sensibilities of all thoughtful people are awakened to the truth that the prohibitory law is the worst crime ever committed within the borders of the United States. It will not be long until the reign of hypocrisy, cant, chicanery, and fraud will come to an ignominious end.

I characterize the prohibitory law as a crime because it violates the principles of natural justice, has brought widespread disrespect for authority, and has become the facile instrument of graft, bribery, blackmail, and oppression.

The day will soon be here when the men who vote for prohibition that they may gain or retain office and who themselves violate the letter and the spirit of the law will be held in that contempt which justice demands should be visited upon all knavish hypocrites who wear the mask of pretended virtue. The day will soon come when judges who by brutal penalties have made malefactors of decent boys and men will sink into that obloquy which is the just reward of cruelty, oppression, and wrong. The day will soon come when organized groups shall no longer dictate policies of government. The voice of the people will again be heard, and that voice will pronounce the knell of those who surrender principle that "thrift may follow fawning."

Mr. President, I saw the original prohibitory law voted. I saw the veto of President Wilson incontinently overruled. I heard the affirmative vote of man after man who had drunk liquor all his life and who intended to keep on drinking. Time and time again I have seen prohibition bills come before Congress. I have heard roll call after roll call paralleling the one I have just described. Sir, the man who will vote to send his fellow man to jail for selling a drink of whisky and who will buy one himself is a coward—a canting and contemptible coward. I do not apply those terms to men who observe the doctrines they would force on others, but I hold in an abhorrence and contempt that can not be described in any tongue man has ever spoken the creature who to keep his place in the Senate or House of Representatives votes to make a felon of others for doing that which he himself connives at and practices.

If there were no men to drink liquor, there would be no men to make it or to sell it. Morally, if not legally, the man who buys illicit liquor aids, abets, and is fellow conspirator of the man who sells it to him. He who knowingly gets his liquor at second hand—that is, from an illegal purchaser—is morally upon the same plane as that purchaser. What a piece of knavish hypocrisy it all comes to.

Recently, at a great political convention, a number of leading prohibitionists were meeting in a room to determine their course of action. I was informed, and I have no reason for disbelief, that in the center of the table at which they sat and pondered their creed was a quart of rapidly vanishing whisky that had been liberally supplied for convention inspiration.

The Democratic convention was to meet in the driest State under the driest Government in the world. Just before it assembled there was enacted in Houston one of the Nation's periodic and regular farces. A boat, alleged to be loaded with great quantities of liquor was seized. The liquor was accommodatingly on deck where it could be easily observed and quite as easily captured. Only a plain, ordinary fool could doubt that the seizure was arranged for. The papers spread it broadcast that the Democrats were to have a convention as dry as a Sahara Desert camel. But when the delegates and visitors arrived word was passed that in particular hotel rooms and elsewhere liquors could be obtained in sufficient quantities to satisfy all appetites and appease every thirst.

There was a Republican convention held in Kansas City. Some of the leading "political prohibitionists" were paying the bell boys $7, $8, $9, and $10 a pint for a class of whisky that no respectable Missourian would ever think of drinking. [Laughter.]

The supply was just across the street. The bell boys raised the price and for a few brief days enjoyed "Republican prosperity." Then the sniveling hypocrites of the convention hilariously joined in adopting a prohibition platform.

I have sometimes been tempted to write a list of the names of the men who vote dry and drink wet. I do not know but I shall yet do so.

I repeat, for the man who believes in this thing and who lives it, I make no criticism of hypocrisy. But I do criticize, on the ground that he belongs to that class of individuals who think that because they choose to live in a certain way, they have the right to make everybody else live the same way. Paraphrasing the statement of a distinguished French savant—"they conceive liberty to consist in depriving others of their liberty." The proponents of the pending barbaric bill and of similar laws could be aptly described in the verse of Robert Buchanan:

> A race that binds
> Its body in chains and calls them liberty,
> And calls each fresh link progress.

This, sir, is an immoral law. It is the worst crime ever committed within the borders of the United States of America. I make that assertion because prohibition is the breeding place and feeding ground of crime. That which produces crime is itself a crime.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The time of the Senator from Missouri on the bill has expired. He has 10 minutes on the pending amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I move that the Senator be permitted to proceed——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri still has 10 minutes on the pending amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Well, Mr. President, I can not get started in that time.

Prohibition was doomed to failure because it attempted to force the habits of a part of the people—probably a minority—upon all the people. Such laws have never been enforced and never will be. A great British statesman said, "You can not indict an entire people," and I venture to say you can not force a free people.

Prohibition is a progenitor of crime, because it has driven the liquor business from the open day into the dark and secret places. Taken out of the hands of a class of people who were, for the most part, law-abiding and who were obliged to conduct their business in public places and under the constant surveillance of officers, it has been put into the hands of men who are already criminals, or who become criminals the moment they engage in the business. Operating in violation of law, it inevitably follows these men must close the eyes and stop the ears of the officers of the law. The profits are prodigious and can be split several times. Accordingly the collection of graft and the extortion of blackmail has become nation-wide.

There has never been any attempt to enforce this law as we enforce the laws against murder, arson, rape, burglary, and other heinous crimes. In the last 18 months I have traveled extensively in the United States. I have yet to enter a State, a city, a town, or a village where I was not tendered liquor and where a few minutes' conversation did not disclose the fact that illicit stills were clustered roundabout at which moonshine of the "purest ray serene" could be obtained at constantly falling prices. There may be some who do not want liquor, who never did want it, or who do not now know where to get it. But the boys all know; that is, all the boys who know much of anything.

There is not a policeman in a city of the United States who can not collect enough evidence in 24 hours to keep the courts busy for 24 months. In the cities are bars where to the stranger they sell half of 1 per cent beer. The man who is known gets the spiked article. In city after city they are selling beer spiked with ether.

Let us tell the truth, even though Bishop Cannon—who, I believe, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] in the recent campaign described as one of the three American popes—may frown, that he may hold his job and draw his salary. There is not a man with good sense who has looked about him but knows that in the city of Washington he can in an hour's time have delivered at his office or at his home enough whisky to entertain the entire senatorial or congressional body, their wives and their sweethearts, assuming that wives and sweethearts would partake, which, of course, they would not. [Laughter.]

To say that the law has ever been enforced is to stand in the face of truth and deliberately or ignorantly lie to the American people. Graft, without stint and beyond measure, is the order and routine of our day.

Recently a grand jury, sitting in Philadelphia—perhaps still sitting—investigated the bank accounts of some police officers. These men drew salaries of from $3,000 to $4,000 a year, but their bank deposits ranged from $14,000 to $195,000. The inference to be drawn is obvious. Bribery! Graft! The arrested are, for the most part, those who do not pay the graft. Occasionally a victim is dragged in for the purpose of making a record and deceiving the public into the belief that the law is being enforced. Why will Senators close their eyes to facts? Why do we not face the truth as it is? Why do we cringe like cowards and go to heel like spaniels at the lash of an organization that can influence a few votes?

Mr. President, when you pass a law that a large percentage of the people despise violation is certain to become general. A people deliberately violating one law will easily come to violate other laws. Thus we have sown the dragon's teeth, from which has sprung a general disrespect for law.

The former Prohibition Director, General Andrews—the best man who ever held that office—testified that in 12 months' time the department had seized 172,600 stills; that prior to prohibition there had never been 500 licensed stills in the United States, and that moonshining had been inconsequential because it was unprofitable. He practically admitted that he had not captured more than 1 still in 10. Translated that means there were in existence at that time 1,726,000 stills. General Andrews estimated that, at least, five persons were attached to each still or engaged in the distribution of the liquor. That gives us the startling total of over 8,000,000 people deliberately and willfully violating the law.

(At this point Mr. REED of Missouri was admonished by the Presiding Officer that his time had expired. Thereupon, after debate, the unanimous-consent agreement limiting debate was by unanimous consent set aside so that Mr. REED of Missouri could proceed.)

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I thank the Senate for its very generous attitude, and I thank the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] for his consideration.

I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that this question might as well be opened up and discussed. I hope that it will be. It is time to pry open the door of the "whited sepulchre" and expose the "dead men's bones" therein concealed.

When interrupted I had denounced this law as a nursery of crime and asserted that disrespect for one law naturally breeds general disrespect for law. Respect for law, respect for courts, and respect for officials of State or Nation is impaired or completely destroyed once the public is convinced that thousands of public officers are receivers of graft, that graft has become a system and bribery is ordained as a custom. The people have the right so to believe. Do they not see planted in every city of the United States hundreds of tiny drug stores, frequently so insignificant they do not employ a pharmacist? Proprietary medicines stand sparsely on the shelves, thus maintaining the mere pretense of a drug store, yet these places evidently prosper. The real source of income of most of these stores is the illicit sale of liquor. Sensible men at once ask what the policeman on that beat is doing. And then they ask what the policemen on all the beats are doing. Likewise when men know that they can go into cities as absolute strangers and in 20 minutes' time find an abundant supply of liquor they believe, as all sane men must believe, that the officers are not attempting to enforce the law. They have the right also to conclude that somebody is collecting graft. Respect for law and respect for government is thus speedily destroyed.

It is important to bear in mind that a bootlegger necessarily sells to a large number of individuals. In a little while the officers know about the bootlegger; they are bound to; and a system of collection and protection is established. Remember also that inevitably the bootleggers' operations soon or late bring him in contact with a graver class of outlaws who peddle narcotics as well as liquor. These, in turn, have their relations with the most dangerous elements of society. Shortly there is effected a general coalition which embraces all the criminal and vicious elements of the underworld.

Always there has to some extent existed among the real criminal classes a sort of community of interest, a kind of solidarity. But the distinctly criminal class has hitherto embraced a very small percentage of the people. Every honest man's hand was against them as their hands were against every honest man. But gravely consider the ghastly truth that the criminal element has now been recruited by an army of possibly millions of liquor violators, and that there has been established what may be justly described as an offensive and defensive alliance embracing a vast army of outlaws and involving many officers of the law.

What now is the effect upon the efficiency of the officer thus involved? Called upon to apprehend a man guilty of the gravest crime, he is likely to find himself in pursuit of one in whose pay he has been. He fears to perform his duty lest he be exposed and ruined. Thus the law breeds crime. The minute an officer accepts a dollar of whisky graft, his morale is broken. He ceases to be effective against any class of criminals. He becomes a cringing coward. He walks in the shadow of constant fear. Above his head hangs the sword of destruction that any criminal may at any moment cause to fall.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator just for a moment? That is exactly what Mr. Collins, the chief of police, said. He said that the criminal outrages of every sort that prevail in that city—we all know to what a fearful extent—are attributable to prohibition.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I thank the Senator. I do not go so far as to say that all crime is to be attributed to prohibition. I heard the prohibitionists' charge that all crime was to be attributed to the saloon. They cried aloud, abolish the saloon and you will abolish crime. We were told the jails would be empty, the penitentiaries uninhabited. But the prisons are so overcrowded that arms and legs are sticking out of the windows. Farms are established on which to herd the overflow. We were told that there would be no more widows' tears nor orphans' sighs; that workhouses would be abolished and poorhouses would be no more. The demon rum was held responsible for all of human ills.

Now, the fact was and is that a percentage of human beings will drink too much; that intoxicated men will sometimes commit crime; but the whole truth is, and always was, and always will be, that there is a percentage of human beings who are natural criminals. The prohibitionists have heaped upon the head of old John Barleycorn all the sins that were and are inherent in humanity. I shall not follow that unfair example by claiming that all the crime to-day can be charged to this law. I am trying to show, however, that the law promotes and increases crime. In further support of that claim I remark that when you hang up the prize of great profits, you lure men to that prize. And prohibition made the illicit liquor trade the most profitable business on earth.

Consider also that it is particularly easy for men to violate a law when they believe they are doing nothing but disobeying the mandate of some legislative body, a large percentage of whose members were probably full the night before they imposed the law on others, whilst another large percentage were impelled by selfish political reasons.

On this point we should keep constantly in mind that there is a wide gulf between the prohibitory statutes and laws leveled against acts universally denounced by all civilized nations. The first is restrictive, the second protective. The first limits the enjoyment of a natural right; the second protects the enjoyment of a natural right. The distinction is recognized in the law. The phrase malum prohibitum refers to acts not wrong in themselves but merely illegal because forbidden by law. The second class is described in the phrase malum in se, which embraces acts wrong in themselves. Such crimes are nearly always accomplished by force or fraud. They are repugnant to the interests and wishes of the victim and hence meet with his determined resistance. Their general existence would speedily break down civilized society. They are abhorred of all people. The worst criminal will protest against such acts if visited upon himself. The murderer will fight to the death one who attempts to take his life. The thief will resist the stealing of his property. The highwayman will protest against the robbery of himself. The burglar will defend his own home from plunder by another rogue. All of these classes will appeal to the law for protection when their rights are violated. Frequently they will assist in the apprehension of rascals who have committed crimes against third parties. Even more certainly all good and honest men and women regard with abhorrence and will assist in the suppression of these and many other crimes.

It may therefore be justly said that for the protection of themselves all people stand for the suppression and apprehension of villains who by force or fraud accomplish their wicked designs. Against them is raised the universal voice of mankind. Their apprehension and punishment is regarded as a sacred duty.

Once more I emphasize the fact that this class of crime is committed against the will and the protest of the victim. Contrast such acts with those against which the prohibition law is leveled. It is true that law does not expressly forbid the citizen from taking a drink. Nevertheless, that is its object. It tries to cut off the supply in order that it may prevent the citizen from doing that which he desires to do.

There are two great difficulties inherent in the enforcement of the prohibitory law.

First. It seeks to prevent the man who wants to sell liquor from selling it to a man who wants to buy. There is a total absence of either force or fraud. On the contrary, both parties are in complete accord. There is a perfect and harmonious meeting of minds. The seller and buyer are doing exactly what each desires to do.

Second. They jointly engage in a transaction which each believes to be moral and to be within his natural rights. Or, at least and at the worst, each regards the transaction as desirable. They feel they are doing only that which has been done by a large proportion of men since the dawn of history.

It is indisputable that, throughout the centuries, all races of men have indulged in stimulants. Dominant and progressive nations have generally used alcohol.

Call the roll of the master builders of civilization and in the majority will be the names of those who have insisted upon the right as free men to regulate their personal conduct, even to the occasional quaffing of a toast to Bacchus. Poets, who have conjured from words the mystery and melody of music; orators, whose eloquence has aroused enslaved peoples to resist the oppressions of tyranny; martyrs, who died in defense of the rights of men; artists, whose inspired visions are preserved in the glories of architecture, in canvas, in marble, and in bronze; saints, who labored amongst the lowly and consecrated their lives to the ennoblement of mankind; statesmen, who blazed the highway of human progress and guided millions from the darkness of despotism to the sunlit fields of liberty, have nearly all, in greater or less degree, used alcohol in some form.

Prior to prohibition a considerable percentage of the population took an occasional drink and only a small proportion drank to excess. The principles of self-restraint and temperance were everywhere being inculcated. The progress was remarkable and highly commendable.

Then agitation against intemperance itself became intemperate. It took the form of organized propaganda, heavily financed. It got into the hands of a little group of professionals who collected and disbursed huge sums of money. The more they agitated, the more they could alarm the people. The more the people were alarmed, the more cash was contributed. The more cash contributed, the greater the emoluments of the agitators. They went into politics; they played the game ruthlessly.

The war was on. Millions of young men were in the Army camps. Millions were beyond the sea. Weak-kneed legislators became alarmed and began to yield. Suddenly Wayne B. Wheeler loomed as the big boss. Congress was stampeded; the eighteenth amendment was forced through for the express purpose of coercing the will of those States which did not desire to impose prohibition upon their people. The direct intention was to take away from the several States, for all time, the right to enact their own police regulations.

The methods used to secure adoption of the eighteenth amendment by the several States were regarded by many as frequently obnoxious and disgraceful.

Certain it is that the amendment was submitted during the excitement of the war and ratified either during the war or in the troublous times succeeding. The conditions forbade mature consideration and deliberate action. Immediately following came the Volstead Act. It was not prepared by statesmen sitting in solemn council and desirous of producing a statute that would deal fairly and equitably with the situation. On the contrary, it was largely devised by the group of professional propagandists who had for years lived out of the profits of agitation. These enterprising gentlemen gathered from various State prohibitory statutes their extremest provisions and their grossest cruelties. The bill was forced through Congress under the lash of Wayne B. Wheeler, backed by a horde of propagandists and paid lobbyists. Congressmen were threatened with annihilation by the Anti-Saloon League and its cohorts. The most detestable kinds of bulldozing and lobbying were employed.

What wonder President Wilson vetoed the measure! What wonder that Congressmen who had proclaimed him the greatest man since the days of Christ, and who had denounced all who, in any respect, differed from him, now cringed and cowered before the threat of political annihilation by the Anti-Saloon League!

Thus was born the Volstead Act, the cruelties and enormities of which the present Jones bill proposes to magnify.

Let us consider some further circumstances, especially the assertion, constantly reiterated, that the people of the United States amended the Constitution, that the people, therefore, after due deliberation, determined upon a new national policy.

Technically, it is true that the Constitution was amended in the form laid down and that the law pursuant thereto was enacted by the Congress. Both have been sustained by the Supreme Court and are, therefore, legally binding. But that is very far from their ratification or adoption by a popular vote of the people. The people, in fact, never had an opportunity for a direct vote. The amendment was submitted by a total of 347 Senators and Representatives, all of whom had been elected, at least, 11 months before they voted for submission.

In the campaign of 1916, neither party had recommended nation-wide prohibition. The question was not at issue in that election. The people had had no opportunity, by direction or indirection, to vote upon it. Yet, the submission of an amendment is the first and one of the most important acts necessary to any change in the Constitution.

In the State legislatures an estimated liberal total of 5,000 members voted to ratify the amendment. Many of these men had been elected before the constitutional amendment was proposed, and many of these legislators in States where a popular vote had been taken voted in direct opposition to the last-expressed will of the people upon that issue. Thus it appears that a constitutional amendment to govern 48 States and 120,000,000 people was actually submitted and adopted by a total of not more than 5,347 individuals in the State and Federal Legislatures.

I do not claim that the constitutional amendment was illegally adopted, but I do emphasize the fact that both the constitutional amendment and the law were enacted by a very small number of the people without proper time for discussion, and that the voice of the people has never been directly heard. I also urge the importance of these facts in connection with the problem of enforcement, for the constitutional amendment and the laws thus adopted may be very far from expressing the will of a majority of the people.

I am confident that, with ample time for discussion and upon a popular vote a majority would have rejected the nation-wide proposition. To enforce a law, adopted under the conditions stated, which proposed to reverse the custom of the ages and to regulate the individual habits of a great people, is indeed difficult if not impossible.

Again I remark that when you undertake to enforce this law you are at once confronted by the fact that the great percentage of the people want a drink once in a while, think they have the right to a drink, and hence, regard not as an enemy, not as a criminal, but as an accommodating individual the man who comes around with a suitcase containing the desired amount of liquor.

A further difficulty arises from the fact that the prohibition of the legitimate sale of liquor has made its illicit sale highly profitable, and, as I have remarked, whenever you make a crime of a business not ordinarily regarded as wrong, men will engage in it on account of the huge profits to be realized.

At the time General Andrews appeared before the committee and gave the startling figures I have recited, he exhibited one of the stills seized. It was an ordinary copper wash boiler with a small copper contrivance attached. He stated that in that wash boiler 60 gallons of alcohol could be made in 24 hours, which could in turn be transformed into 120 gallons of whisky. At the then current price the product would have brought about $2,400.

Consider the fact that a man with an ordinary wash-boiler contrivance could, in a day's time, make so huge a profit. That mere fact makes violation certain. Add to that the fact that millions of people who had always enjoyed a drink and always proposed to have one were distributed throughout the United States, and you have a situation making it impossible to enforce the law.

Referring to these difficulties, General Andrews testified that as soon as one source of supply was cut off another sprang into existence. When importations were reduced moonshining increased.

There is still another difficulty in the way of enforcement. Making whisky is a simpler chemical process than making bread. It can be even produced by so primitive an equipment as a teakettle and a little corn or rye meal or potatoes, or anything containing starch or sugar.

Fermentation is a natural process. Distillation consists simply in separating and condensing the alcohol produced by fermentation. With the slightest knowledge and the simplest apparatus whisky can be made in every home of the land. The number of people who have learned how to make it is one of the most prominent results of this law. To-day whisky is being made in the kitchen, in the cellar, in the garret, in the garage, and along the creeks, frequently by a class of people who are willing to take the chance of being caught. So enforcement has, at each stage, and in every State, become a farce.

If that were all, the case would not be so terrible; but running along with that condition is another and an appalling situation. Formerly when liquor could be obtained any place, the moral elements of all communities were arrayed in a general endeavor to warn people against the evils of strong drink. The pulpits thundered anathemas on almost every Sabbath day. Great temperance orators went over the country and provoked tears from the eyes of their auditors. Young men and young women were told "Here is a danger. Here lurks an enemy that may destroy you. You must build up your character, you must strengthen your own purpose, you must live without it, or, if you touch it, it must be in very moderate quantities. Here it is. If you want to be a fool, you can be a fool. If you want to destroy yourself, you can destroy yourself. But your duty to your home, your duty to your country, and to your church and to yourself is that of self-restraint." It was presented as a great question of morals, and it was dealt with by the moral forces of society, the church, the school, the home.

Now, all that is changed. There is not a man in the Senate Chamber who has heard an old-fashioned temperance lecture since the Volstead Act was passed. Instead you have heard demands for enforcement of the law and for more penalties. The whole atmosphere is different. In the old days temperance forces were all engaged in saving the drunkard. They wept over the old fellow who for 75 or 80 years had drunk his whisky or sipped his wine and was still hale and hearty. He was pictured as a terrible sot. Over him they shed cataracts of tears. They were bent upon rescuing him from "evil." How the tender hearts of the good sisters and good brethren did ache at the awful spectacle. But the modern professional prohibitionists have turned their kindly hearts to stone; their eyes are now tearless as those of a granite sphinx. They no longer sing: "Rescue the perishing"; they hiss through set teeth, "Chuck them in the penitentiary for life." Closely, indeed, does the hiss of fanaticism resemble the hiss of a serpent.

They once talked of tremendous economic loss. Now, when they lock thousands of men within penitentiary walls, eternally blast their names, herd them with brutes, curse their souls, and destroy them utterly; there creeps over the faces of these humanitarians of a later day the ravening glee of the tiger as it exults above a dying victim.

With chuckle and nudge, they bear the glad tidings: "We convicted 500 men to-day." "Five hundred more must wear the stripes." "Five hundred more are locked in jail."

A boy is driving along the highway. He has a flask of whisky in his car. He is, perhaps, an ignorant and inexperienced lad, the kind of boy that in the old days good women put their arms about and led away from the bar and into the white-ribbon hall and there prayed with and wept over and persuaded to sign the pledge. But now the boy is grabbed by an officer too corrupt or cowardly to tackle larger game, is ruthlessly rushed to the penitentiary and so is absolutely destroyed. On such a scene, the hard-eyed pack of reformers look with approval and shout: "More law, more punishment." "Another twist to the thumbscrew." "Another turn of the rack." "A little more pain, a little more agony, a little more of human wreckage—just a bit more of the lash, good executioner."

Monsters of that kind have existed in every age. They regard law as an instrument of punishment, not of redemption. They believe that the more cruel the punishment, the heavier the club, the longer the agony, the better the law. Such as they broke men upon the wheel; drew them asunder by horses, quartered them, cut out their entrails and burned them before their faces; seared their eyeballs; tore their tongues from their throats. Such as they said that was the way to stop crime; that was the way to make people observe the law and respect government.

Then came an era of humanity. We began to see that revenge was not the just purpose of the law; that punishment should be inflicted only to deter others from the commission of crime and to reform the culprit.

This prohibitory law—what a monstrous thing it is! Under the law as it stands—without fitting it with more nails to be driven into the hands and feet of its victims—for a single act penalties can be piled up that will put in the penitentiary for a long period of years an individual who has been guilty of a single trivial violation.

A boy delivers a gallon of moonshine. He can be indicted for possession; he can be indicted for transportation; he can be indicted for conspiracy to violate a Federal statute. He can also be similarly indicted under State laws, and conviction under the State code does not bar conviction under the Federal code.

I am not sure how many schemes have been worked out to pile penalty upon penalty, but I do know that the law as it now stands is as "cruel as the grave." Penalties may be imposed for the simple act of transporting a pint of liquor far greater than those for manslaughter or murder in the second degree frequently visited upon the killer.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BLEASE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that they can also punish him by putting a tax on his property and then take his property, putting it on the block, and sell it.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Yes; that is true. If I undertook to tell all that can be done it would take a very long time. I thank the Senator.

What is the act? Merely malum prohibitum. The act is bad because it has been prohibited. The penalties that exist to-day are altogether in disharmony with the general policy of the criminal statutes.

Mr. President, it is hard to believe that any human being would want to send a lad to the penitentiary for having possession of a pint of liquor. That is indeed hard to believe. It is hard to believe that in a civilized country we would tear a father from his family, disgrace the wife, the daughters and the sons, and brand them forever with a mark that time can not erase because that father sold a gill of wine or a bottle of beer to a man who wanted to buy.

One would naturally think that for such a violation a fine of a few dollars would be a heavy penalty. But, sir, there is no knife so sharp as that held in the hand of the bigot. It "pierces even to the dividing asunder of the soul and body, of the joints and marrow." There is no cruelty so relentless as the cruelty of fanaticism.

On an occasion the question of poisoned liquor was being discussed. It was stated that a prominent man had been made totally blind by a single drink. When some of those present expressed their sorrow and horror, a lady, naturally a kind-hearted woman, the wife of a great educator, exclaimed through her set teeth, "It serves them right; they ought to go blind if they break our law."

Mr. BRUCE. I would call the Senator's attention to the fact that 187 of the essays which were handed in by contestants in the Durant prohibition competition were in favor of capital punishment or execution in some form or another for violation of the Volstead Act, and that even a Member of this body on one occasion, when I asked him whether he favored capital punishment for violation of the Volstead Act, replied that he did for some.

Monday, February 18, 1929

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, before continuing the discussion of Saturday, I desire again to thank the Senate for abrogating the unanimous-consent agreement limiting debate in order to accommodate me. For that and many courtesies of the past I am deeply grateful. Second, I desire to remove the anxiety which seems to have been created in the minds of some by the remark I made on Saturday that I might "yet tell the names of those who do not vote as they drink." I assure all interested parties that they may compose their agitated nerves. I am not going to do it! [Laughter.] I might feel compelled to tell the names of people who commit real crimes. I should hate to have to do that. Certain it is, I would never violate the confidence or hospitality of friends by disclosing the fact that occasionally they try to introduce a bit of artificial sunshine into the dull days of life. Accordingly, all may be at ease. I have made many mistakes and done many wicked things, but I have never fallen to the level of a prohibition informer. [Laughter.] I thought at the time I had perpetrated a joke, but it appears I should have so labeled it.

Mr. President, on Saturday I made reference to the fact that one of the saddest effects of the law is that it apparently has transformed the kindly sentiments and humanitarian services of the old-time temperance worker into a spirit of persecution. Force is substituted for reason, penalties for persuasion, and cruelties for charity. I repeat that where we once sought to "rescue the perishing," we now send them to the penitentiary. We have abandoned the Bible, the prayer book, and the temperance tract for the lash, the prison, the gun, and the bludgeon.

As was stated by the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], in the recent Durant prohibition enforcement prize competition 187 contestants demanded the death penalty. The vast majority of the plans proposed to pile penalty upon penalty. But perhaps the most classic illustration of fanaticism gone mad, of love turned to hate, and charity changed to crime is found in the suggestions of two persons, one of them a woman.

One contestant urged that the liquor-law violators should be hung by the tongue from an airplane and thus carried over the United States. The woman urged that the Government poison the liquor and distribute the deadly potion to the people through bootleggers. She humanely argued that "only a few hundred thousand persons would die and that it would be worth all the deaths to get prohibition enforced."

If these illustrations were no more than the sporadic utterances of insane persons, the matter would not be worth the mentioning, but the spirit of persecution is abroad in the land. Many people seem to have conceived the idea that whatsoever is done under the form of a statute is just and righteous; that law can sanctify any cruelty, any atrocity.

Sir, law has been the instrument of tyrants, the weapon of brutes since time began. By it despots have sought to cloak villainies that have stained the earth with blood, saturated it with tears, and filled the winds of time with the groans of the tortured and the dying. Law! What, sir, is law? It is—and I speak now of proper laws—it is a rule of conduct springing from common custom and ordained by general consent. It must be all that and more than that; it must be founded upon justice; it must express equity and right; it must be humane in its provisions. Such a law naturally commends itself to the intelligence and appeals to the soul of mankind. An unjust law, a cruel law may be as much a crime as is the act of an individual who assassinates in the dark.

Law! It is urged that a majority may dictate any kind of a law, however brutal, however unjust, however atrocious. Such was not the theory of the founders of this Republic. They declared that all just laws spring from the consent of the governed. They forbade cruel and unusual punishments. They set bounds to the authority of government itself. They created checks and balances in order to preserve the liberty of the citizen. As they unfurled the battle flags of the Revolution they asserted that all men were entitled to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that all just governments were established to preserve these inalienable rights.

Law, I repeat, has been the instrument and cloak of every conceivable atrocity, and that no law can ever transform a villainy into a virtue. Why, sir, the Savior of mankind was crucified according to the forms of Roman law and with the sanction of Jewish law. I repeat now what I think I once before said in this presence, that the wretches who led Him to Calvary, who drove the nails into His feet and His hands, were as great criminals as though they had executed Him against the express letter of the law.

Joan of Arc was burned at the stake in strict accordance with the thing that was then called law. But the judges who signed the decree of execution and the wretch who applied the torch were murderers more foul than assassins who cut the throats of sleeping victims, for they acted in cool deliberation and imposed the cruel death by fire.

John Calvin slowly roasted Servetus, the foremost physician of the time. He acted in accordance with the provisions of the law of Geneva and pretended to act by authority and at the behest of the law of God. But Calvin branded in blood-red letters across his memory the word "murderer."

The highway of the centuries is marked by gibbets, crosses, stakes, dungeons where the bravest and the best were hanged, crucified, impaled, and imprisoned according to laws proclaimed by monsters who, by force and fear, ruled an enslaved world. Their laws were nothing save general rules for the perpetration of villainies.

The British Government dragged our ancestors across the sea and put them to trial according to the laws of England, but the laws were atrocious, the penalties were cruel, and our fathers repudiated both England and her laws. For hundreds of years there was written in the laws of England death penalty after death penalty for offenses many of which involved no real or but slight moral turpitude. Thousands and thousands of small offenders were thus brutally penalized. Men could be thrown into prison for killing a rabbit or even hanged for trespassing upon the sacred domain of some titled tyrant and stealing a deer or sheep. But the judges who pronounced sentence and the officers who dragged the victims to the gibbet were as certainly murderers as they would have been had there been no form of law observed. The "it is hereby decreed" of a despot who in his own person exercises authority and the "be it enacted" of a few men gathered together in a legislative assembly are alike powerless to make wrong right or rob cruelty of its criminality.

Let no man say because I have thus spoken that I am declaring we should defy the prohibition law. I do not so say. We have the power of remedy in our own hands. We know full well that general hatred and defiance of the law will undermine the very structure of our Government. It is therefore our business to proceed by constitutional methods to remedy existing wrongs. The right way is to repeal bad laws and to change bad constitutions.

I have been speaking upon the theory that this is a bad law, that it is a destructive law. I now urge that it has introduced corrupting agencies and debased morals into the political life of our country.

If I were to undertake to marshal all the facts at my command, we would be here until the cock would crow in the morning. I shall call attention to just a few. I have already said that this law was enacted at the demand of an organization. At the head of that organization was Mr. Wayne B. Wheeler. I hold in my hand the biography of Wayne B. Wheeler written by Justin Steuart who was formerly publicity secretary to Mr. Wheeler. It was written within the shadows of his tomb and I presume has that touch of charity which a work written under the circumstances should exemplify. Here is the opening sentence:

> Wayne B. Wheeler controlled six Congresses, dictated to two Presidents of the United States, directed legislation in most of the States of the Union, picked the candidates for the more important elective State and Federal offices, held the balance of power in both Republican and Democratic Parties, distributed more patronage than any dozen other men, supervised a Federal bureau from outside without official authority—> and was recognized by friend and foe alike as the most masterful and powerful single individual in the United States. He achieved this position by sheer force of personality. The story of his rise to power, his use of that power, and his sudden death, just when the foundations seemed crumbling under him, is without parallel.

We know that bureau was the Prohibition Bureau—

> Where Wheeler sat was always the head of the table. He had an instinct for preeminence. A tireless opportunist, he dramatized himself as the champion of prohibition until the general public pictured him as a mighty St. George fighting single-handed against a swarm of dragons.
> He loved the limelight. Attacks pleased him nearly as much as praise. He collected the personal newspaper notices, which became voluminous in the last five years of his life. He circulated widely typed, mimeographed, or printed copies of these collections, with such titles as "Knocks and Boosts." * * * He urged the need of loyalty upon others, but frequently disregarded the orders of superior officers and ignored resolutions passed by the boards of the Anti-Saloon League, which were responsible for its political or legislative policy. He did not cut the cables like Dewey, but waited until boards or committees had adjourned and their members returned to widely separated parts of the Nation, and then forgot them.
> He loved power. If power could not be won, he loved the semblance of power. He never attacked the administration. Such attack might be construed as evidence that he lacked influence with the administration. His favorite text was: "The powers that be are ordained of God." This did not present his own insubordination. Because of the influence over the policy of the Prohibition Department that would be his under the Haynes régime, he supported Roy A. Haynes for Commissioner of Prohibition under the reorganization bill in the face of the objections of many of the sanest men in the league. By a political maneuver he prevented the election of the ablest man in the league to its national superintendency while he persuaded or dragooned delegates to support his own candidate.
> He was the exponent of force. From his first days as superintendent of a district in Ohio, when he assailed the courts for leniency, to the end of his life he preferred threats to persuasion. He made difficult the development of the league's policy of education on prohibition. He desired the most severe penalties, the most aggressive policies, even to calling out the Army and Navy, the most relentless prosecution. A favorite phrase was: "We'll make them believe in punishment after death." This, with "red-blooded" and "intestinal fortitude," crept into many a speech, regardless of its theme—

And so forth, and so on, ad nauseam.

That is the picture presented by the eulogist and former secretary to this man. He "preferred force." "He would make the people believe in hell fire." That obscene spirit has permeated our country to an extent astounding and horrible and sad beyond the expression of words. It has usurped the kindly persuasion and gentle ministrations of the temperance folks of a few years ago. Then many women with tender hands and sweet faces and noble hearts entered the saloons there to appeal to the saloonkeeper and to the lowly and fallen to lead better lives. Now the doctrine of force espoused by Wayne B. Wheeler has supplanted the spirit of charity and love taught by Jesus Christ. Formerly we sought to persuade. We now seek to compel. But, sirs, you can not compel a free people. Hence, it is solemnly admitted by prohibition Senators that eight years of pretended enforcement has been but a prolonged farce.

Returning to the Anti-Saloon League, it raised and spent over $30,000,000. In the spirit of Mr. Wheeler, it entered into the various State campaigns. It adopted his philosophy, which was that he did not care how a man drank, or what his habits were, or what his opinions were, or how he would vote on any other question; if he would only cast his vote as Mr. Wheeler dictated. That, according to Wheeler, was the sole test of a man's fitness for office.

Think of that degrading and despicable philosophy! Here is the great United States, with all its multitudinous interests, its foreign relations, its difficult problems of government. The rights and interests of millions are constantly to be guarded and conserved. Disregarding all these, a man posing as a moral leader insisted that the sole qualification for office was a pledge to him that the legislator vote on one particular question as he dictated. Moreover, he asserted his right to go into a Republican convention and nominate any scoundrel he could if that scoundrel would only vote as he demanded upon that one question; to then go into a Democratic convention and nominate any scoundrel he could if that man would vote as he demanded; to change from one party to the other, being bound neither in morals nor by the ethics of politics to support the candidate nominated by the convention into which he had voluntarily entered, and in the proceedings of which he had participated! Wheeler is dead but his mantle has fallen upon the shoulders and his soul has entered the body of the Right Rev. Bishop Cannon. The philosophy of hate survives. There is not a slum district in a city of the United States where the slum boss does not have a higher code of political morals than that. And so I say the doctrines and practices of the Anti-Saloon League have been a debasing influence in our politics.

But Mr. Wheeler was not the only protagonist of these nefarious doctrines. Another distinguished leader gives us a photograph of his own soul in his own words. I refer to that peerless knight and accomplished gentleman, "Pussyfoot" Johnson. [Laughter.] It was disclosed in hearings before a Senate committee that "Pussyfoot" Johnson had been regularly in the pay of the Anti-Saloon League from 1917 to 1922, and that he had drawn from it various sums of money. It was also shown that Mr. "Pussyfoot" Johnson had given utterance to the following exalted expressions:

> Did I ever kill anybody? It has been often said that I did. Stories of slaughter have been repeated and printed. I let them pass, for in the wild days they served a useful purpose.

It served a useful purpose to have people think he was a killer engaged in a great moral movement!

> They helped spread terror among the lawless, and that aided my work. Most of the stories of sudden death date back to a fight that I had in a pool hall in Chelsea, Indian Territory. I was cornered one night by an angry mob, but fought my way out with the butt end of a broken billiard cue. I got out with a black eye and some bruises, but three of my assailants were carried out unconscious. The newspaper dispatches carried the valuable information that I had then and there put three men to sleep. Under the reputation that Chelsea then had this was interpreted generally that I had killed the three men, which was not true. They were put to sleep all right. However, they finally woke up. I never killed anybody.

Did I ever lie?

Now, he denies the killing. Follow on:

Did I ever lie to promote prohibition? Decidedly, yes. I have told enough lies for the cause to make Ananias ashamed of himself. The lies that I have told would fill a big book; but I have never lied to my associates. I have never lied to the public. I have told to sinners a thousand lies for the purpose of decoying them into telling the truth. I am not seeking to defend this, only to state the fact that my conscience does not annoy me for it and to insist that I would do it again if the occasion arose.

Did I ever bribe anybody? Yes. In 1913 I bribed some Russian officials to give me a lot of secret information concerning Section X of their Government administration. I bribed Eurasian railway officials all over India, because that is the accepted way of getting favors in that country. In my law-enforcement work for the Government I bribed many bad men to give me information about their associates, but outside of that I have never bribed anybody.

That is the man who helped fix the moral standards of the people of the United States. From that foul and polluted fountain you draw the waters of your purity!

How did they raise this $30,000,000. In part it was subscribed by very wealthy men. One of those wealthy men has a moral record that would not look well if it were presented here on the floor of the Senate. Even now in his 10-cent stores the public regularly is supplied with glasses, corks, bottles, corkscrews, and other paraphernalia to make the preservation and consumption of booze easy, and all at cut prices.

Another distinguished contributor amassed his immense fortune by the creation of the greatest and most oppressive monopoly that ever cursed this people. By the way, I am not sure but that his son, just now riding in the chariot of another reform, is about to gain control of the single branch of the Standard Oil Co. that is not at present completely dominated by the old crowd; but that is another tale.

One way in which they raised the money was to have preachers take up collections in their churches on Sundays, and in a great many instances they divided with the preachers. I do not make that as any wholesale charge; I simply quote such evidence as we had before us. But they got the money, and they used a very large part of it in politics. For many years they violated the law by failing to report their political collections and disbursements.

They had several Congressmen and two or three Senators in their pay. Consider the situation of a Member of Congress with the money of the Anti-Saloon League in his pocket when that organization demanded his vote for one of its pet measures. To all intents and purposes his vote was bought in advance. But the moralists of the league saw nothing wrong in thus indirectly bribing Members of Congress.

I do not challenge the right of the organization to stand for its policies, but I do dispute the right of that or any organization to put money in the purses of the men who are to vote for laws to force those policies upon the country. No man ever did that who was not utterly depraved, who had not lost all sense of honor, all respect for law, all the qualities of decency.

Then, sir, this law has to be enforced by a class of men who are mostly under-cover men. What is an under-cover man? A spy. What is a spy? He is unquestionably the lowest order of animal life. Save the man who, in a great war, may bravely imperil his life to discover the position of an enemy in order that he may give information to his own army, the spy is a creature who has abandoned in advance every principle of honor.

What is it that keeps men decent in this world except a sense of honor? Destroy that, and man becomes a beast, devoid of respect for law, for decency, or for the rights of others. The man who will engage in a business knowing in advance that he must peep through keyholes, that he must draw aside the curtains of windows, that he must lurk in the shadows and creep like some vile beast upon an unwary victim; who knows that he must be prepared, like "Pussyfoot" Johnson, to lie and to deceive, to gain friendships only to betray—a man of that kind, sirs, will do anything that cowardice does not prevent. He will commit perjury, he will accept bribes, he will levy graft, he will tempt the weak, he will seduce the honest boy into crime in order that he may gain the credit and profit of a conviction.

What wonder, then, that the cold written record of the Prohibition Unit directors discloses an alarming story of rascality. Bear in mind that the record probably does not show one-tenth of the whole truth, because it deals only with dismissals for misconduct absolutely proven. It necessarily fails to show the resignations that were tendered for causes that were substantially known, but of which complete evidence was not produced.

Prohibition Director Andrews gave the list of dismissals for cause for a period of about nine months beginning February 1, 1926:

[1] This covers such cases as conspiracy to violate the national prohibition act, to extort bribes from violators, to defraud the United States Government, etc.

[2] This classification includes failure to report violations of the national prohibition act; leaving guard duty without permission, etc.

[3] Misconduct covers such matters as immorality, assault, arrest for speeding, gambling, fighting, creating disturbance, etc.

What does that table spell? It spells this: You can not get decent men to do such abominable work, hence it goes into the hands of the offscourings of humanity, largely into the hands of men who are criminals or near criminals.

I notice that two men were discharged for having had previous criminal records. They are not so particular now. Men with known criminal records are now employed. And how do they work? The gorge rises in the stomach of decency when we contemplate the fact that prostitutes have been employed to decoy men. Agents have set their traps in hotels and by the expenditure of a lot of Federal money finally induced some poor bell boy or some waiter to bring in a little liquor to a party which he supposed was composed of decent men and women when it was in reality an assembly of official blacklegs and prostitutes. All this is done beneath the white cloak of purity; all this is sanctified by the glory of the cause.

What saloon was ever baser than that? What divekeeper was more depraved? Where can you find a blacker picture in the old days of the old saloon?

What right has an officer of the law to commit a crime in order to entrap a victim? What right has he to become the procurer of a crime, the inducing cause of a breach of the law?

Mr. President, I turn now to another picture, and, as I try to paint with my poor brush, please compare the kindly expression that transfigured the countenance of the old-time temperance worker with the passion that distorts the face of the advocates of force. The old temperance forces appealed to our moral and spiritual attributes. They sought by gentle persuasion to rescue the perishing.

Then it was a glorious thing if one man who was addicted to drink could be induced to quit. They brought him to the temperance hall, they had him tell how the prayers of good women and the saving grace of God had taken away his thirst, clothed him once more in his right mind, and made him a good citizen. As they passed their pledges around they said, "This man was standing at the gates of hell, and we have pulled him back. He was lost, and has been found. A gracious God, through us, as His humble servants, has saved this soul from destruction."

It was a beautiful and glorious work. I have nothing but flowers and crowns for all the people who did that work. No word of mine would ever speak harshly of them. They were engaged in a great labor of charity—the saving of men. Each time they could snatch a single brand from the burning their souls lightened up with a holy zeal. Properly they felt that they had accomplished much for they were rescuing men.

Now, behold their successors. Their proudest boast is the number of convictions secured. Gleefully they count the human being they have taken from their families, from public life, from their duties as citizens, and have locked up in penitentiaries.

Let me read the figures. I have them by the courtesy of my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who recently recited them in a speech eulogizing prohibition. The Senator declared that in the year 1928 the following admirable results were obtained:

"Seventy-eight thousand arrests in the Federal courts"—78,000 human beings upon which shoulders the law laid its heavy hand and placed an ineradicable stain.

"Fifty-eight thousand prison sentences"—58,000 men imprisoned. This we are told is the glory of prohibition.

"Aggregate of all sentences, 5,631 years." If Adam had been put in jail when he was a boy he would have just about served out that period of time.

"Fines, $7,031,709," and in addition "652 persons convicted and placed on probation for five years." "Suspended and pardoned sentences totaled 4,627; probated sentences 2,265 years."

Stop a little and think, you rescuers of the perishing. If you could have indicated the old saloon and shown by good and true evidence that in a single year it had sent 58,000 human beings to jail and that it had caused the arrest of 78,000 human beings, you would have had a stronger case than was ever proved against the old saloon, bad as it was.

Observe that, in the opinion of the distinguished Senator, the number of prison sentences imposed is the proper yardstick by which to measure the success of prohibition. The more men sent to prison, the more beneficent is the law. Accordingly he introduced the figures for 1927. In that year the arrests totaled 51,945; convictions, 36,546; sentenced to prison, 11,818; aggregate of sentences, 4,477 years.

As the sentences for 1928 were much greater than for 1927, the Senator insists that prohibition is becoming progressively successful. That is to say, we are arresting more people every year, sending more people to prison every year, ruining more men and women every year, taking more fathers and sons and brothers from their families and from life, destroying them utterly, body and soul, branding them so that as they go down the path of time their names will be anathema upon the lips of all people—we are doing more of that every year; hence prohibition is a glorious success.

Oh, how the spirit of Christ has been killed! Whence comes this malevolent and monstrous thing to usurp his place in the temple where once we bowed at the shrine of charity?

Concluding his eulogy of prohibition, its penalties, and prisons, my good brother burst into ecstatic song. I will reproduce the verse, but beg to be permitted to adorn it with a single original line, being something of a poet myself. [Laughter.] Said my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], eyes lifted heavenward and face illumined with a divine radiance:

"O beautiful! for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountains majesties
Above the fruited plain—
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown Thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!"
As an hundred thousand prisoners look through the bars at me.
Oh, happy day!

[Laughter.]

You will observe I am almost overcome with emotion by the beauty of the sentiment and the rhythm of the words. [Laughter.]

In two short years 125,000 to 130,000 have been jailed, an army as great as has conquered kingdoms; a mighty host of human beings, with hearts that beat, with nerves that feel, with souls to be exalted or destroyed. Into prison cells in contact with vice, with every form of horrid crime, these men were thrust, and thereby you think you serve the good and merciful God.

Turn your eyes to that picture and answer whether a law that does a thing like that to men who have only responded to an appetite, ingrained in man from the first, is not what I denounce it to be, a crime within itself.

Look again at the picture. Poor boys and impoverished mothers are sentenced to hard labor until death shall break their prison bars. And for what, pray? Because on the testimony of a sneak and informer they were convicted of having for the second or third time been caught with a little liquor in their possession, or of selling a drink to somebody who desired to buy it. Look closely at the picture. It is a shifting panorama—a tragedy running through the years—the victims are dressed in ignominious stripes. They hear the click of the lock that shuts them in forever. They are thrust into foul cells. They are forced into the parade of the lock step. They eat loathsome prison food. They speak in whispers. They are slaves toiling beneath the muzzle of rifles at hard and unrequited tasks. They are compelled to associate with the vilest of criminals. The light of hope has faded from their eyes. Despair has settled upon their souls and left its shadow upon their faces. They long for the fresh fields. Their nostrils beg for the breath of flowers. Their hearts ache for the loved ones left at home. And these victims, sirs, in the great majority of cases are not bad people. There lie within prison walls many boys who heroically sprang from the trenches and bravely faced the fire of the machine guns in France. There lie rotting within those cells many men who were useful citizens and who beyond all doubt were never guilty of a real crime.

Look once more! One hundred and thirty thousand human beings in prison stripes are marching in the lock step. The procession extends for miles. It winds in and out like the folds of a gigantic striped serpent. Leering at it from the sidelines are the hard eyes of Bishop Cannon. Truly, the dream of Wayne B. Wheeler is realized. He has made "them believe in hell." And, merciful God, this occurs beneath the American flag. But still the fanatics demand punishment and yet more punishment. The cry is that of the degenerate Roman of Rome's degenerate days, "A man for the tiger and a man for the lion this morning, O good Quirites!" To this sad estate has the Congress of the United States and the American Government come.

I have already told you that General Andrews testified to the immense number of stills in operation. Let me call another witness. Mr. Buckner, then district attorney of New York, after a careful estimate, arrived at the conclusion that every year approximately 60,000,000 gallons of denatured alcohol were diverted from industry and redistilled for beverage purposes. The Government had loaded most of this denatured alcohol with poison. Doctor Doran, the present prohibition director, has testified that in most cases where denatured alcohols are redistilled, the poisons can not be altogether removed.

It follows that these poisons are eating away the vitals of millions of people. Malt extracts that will make more beer than ever was manufactured in the United States are now sold and made use of in the homes. Anybody can buy a can of it and make 5 gallons of beer in about five days. It is advertised on billboards throughout the country. Have you not all seen the billboard pictures of the amiable-looking old German lady holding a can in her hand and saying, "This is what Louie uses, and Louie knows." [Laughter.] The alcoholic content of that kind of beer is greater than that of the old-time brewery product and the beer is more injurious. Millions of homes are thus turned into little breweries and the beer is made in the presence and frequently with the aid of the children. If there is any danger to come from it and if the children should be guarded, the home is a mighty poor place for a brewery.

According to their own estimates, the authorities seized not more than 5 to 10 per cent of the liquor being smuggled into the country. And General Andrews declared that as importations decreased, moonshining increased. We have now progressed to the point that the "moon shines on the moonshine everywhere." [Laughter.]

When prohibition was enacted we all thought the vineyards were thereby destroyed. But the price of California wine grapes has risen from $20 a ton to about $175. The reason is that people are making wines in vast quantities.

Cider? They have now worked out a plan where one can let his cider get hard, freeze it in a refrigerator, bore a hole in the center where the alcohol is, and be drunk in five minutes. Compared with that stuff old bourbon whisky was a mild tonic. [Laughter.]

Even from the silos, where nature makes the stuff, the farm boy is drawing a supply.

All about the country everywhere—there is no exception—stills are running, in the mountain dells, along the banks of creeks, in cellars, in garrets, in garages, and, upon occasion, in the jails.

The seizures are merely farcical. A few days ago, within a short distance of the Capitol, the police finally discovered a still that had evidently been in operation for a very long time. It had a capacity of 1,800 gallons per day. When the raid was finally made, the officers found the still in full operation, but they could not find anybody who would admit he owned it. So they virtuously smashed the still. Thus was the majesty of the law vindicated. The whole apparatus probably was not worth more than a few hundred dollars. It had doubtless turned out hundreds of thousands of gallons of liquor. This seizure was widely advertised throughout the country. There was a great beating of tom-toms over it. The Nation was informed that the prohibition officers had dried Washington up. Such is the ridiculous farce being enacted and reenacted all over the country.

This is the age of progress and discovery. Some enterprising genius discovered an excellent variety of whisky could be made from corn sugar; that, in fact, it had some advantages over sour mash. For whereas sour mash gives off an offensive odor liable to arouse the neighborhood gossips, whisky can be made out of corn sugar and the occupant of the next room not know whether they are running a still or doing the family washing.

Behold the march of the corn-sugar business. In 1914 sales were 175,000,000 pounds; in 1928 the sales were 968,000,000 pounds.

Everywhere in shop windows you can see whisky flasks exposed for sale. Since prohibition there have been sold more flasks, more corks, more bottle stoppers, more corkscrews than were carried or used by all the tribes of men who through all the ages have marched across this bank and shoal of time.

The supply of charred kegs is inexhaustible. Here is an advertisement in the Washington Star of February 16—just a little ad. It only mentions six things. The first three of them I will read:

> Big cut-price specials at Peoples Hardware Chain Stores.
> Bottle caps, 3 gross, 50 cents; 3-gallon charred keg, $1.59; Peoples malt sirup, 45 cents.

Six or seven places are indicated where these articles can be bought in the Capital from this one chain of stores. [Laughter.]

We may laugh or we may rave; the cold, hard fact remains that the prohibition law is not regarded and enforced and will not be regarded and enforced as are laws against real crimes.

If a Washington hardware store were to advertise "machine guns for gangsters at a reduced rate" the police would be looking after that place within the next 15 minutes.

But what avails argument and proof. Indeed, both are unnecessary in view of the high authority available. The National United Committee for Law Enforcement on February 18, 1929, put out a statement. I read excerpts, but I shall be glad to insert the entire article in the RECORD. One heading is:

> THE TRUTH ABOUT WASHINGTON
> The Capital City is seething in lawlessness and saturated with poison liquor, dispensed by bootleggers under various aliases, operating openly and sold in hundreds of places as sugar is sold in groceries.
> One does not need a card of introduction or speak the shibboleth of the underworld to obtain admission or accommodation; all that is required is a thirst and the price. Anybody's money is good for rotten rum in Death Valleys.
> Washington is a Sodom of Suds, sold openly behind false fronts and fictitious names, containing from 4 to 60 per cent of alcoholic poison and in some cases so labeled.
> We make no loose charges. We are not hiding behind "estimates" previously made, or charges now headlining the press, or being uncorked in fluid eloquence on the floors of Congress, but after personal investigation by trained operatives.
> Hundreds of such places, scattered all over the city, and in some cases in solid blocks, and not far removed from the Capitol itself, are found to be operating in violation of the law.
> DEATH VALLEYS IN WASHINGTON
> For the past month the united committee has been making an undercover investigation into conditions in this Capital City. For this work we brought experienced and trained men from outside the city, and unknown in Washington. They report to us the places visited, the hour, the date, observations, character of premises, and purchases seen and made.
> The places include hotels, back-room bars, restaurants, lunch rooms, barber shops, tailor shops, cigar, delicatessen, and candy stores, and private houses with "rooms to let."
> SPECIMEN REPORT
> No. 247. Entered; E Street NW.; cigar store; 12.15 p. m.; purchased five drinks of gin, 25 cents per drink; sold in back room with sign "No admittance" on door. Time, 20 minutes.

Then there is given a list of places visited and dates, following which the statement continues:

> Here are 342 places in which the law is flagrantly and openly violated and in which wine, gin, red liquor, corn, or whisky was being sold, and purchased, by the drink and bottle. In addition, there are numerous places all over the city where bottled "bay rum" is sold to all comers, containing 60 per cent of alcohol, according to the label, and not marked for external purposes or number of Government permit given. Over 300 of these emptied bottles were left or taken from the down-and-out men in one week at the Gospel Mission.

Then the statement charges, in substance and effect, that there is graft among the police.

Here is an article from the Buffalo Courier-Express. It was sent to me by a former Senator. It is entitled "So this is Volsteadism":

> As an indication of the need of definite information from presidential candidates to what they mean when they pledge themselves to prohibition enforcement, Detroit's bootlegging industry may be cited. Doubtless, comparable figures could be obtained in any city situated as Detroit is, in a border or coast district, where rum runners ply their trade.
> Detroit's liquor business, including smuggling, manufacturing, and distribution, is estimated to employ 50,000 persons, with an output valued at $215,000,000. It is second, according to a story printed yesterday morning in this newspaper, only to the automobile industry. The chemical industry is a big business in Detroit, but it is a "poor third" when compared with the bootlegging trade. Its annual production is valued at only $87,000,000, or considerably less than one-half of the estimated value of the illicit liquor business.

But, Mr. President, why should we produce figures or evidence when Prohibition Director Doran states:

> It is a matter of policy whether Congress wants to embark in the police business. If Congress wants to embark in the police business, it will take $300,000,000 and a system of United States courts covering the land.

"If the Government wants to indulge in the police business," Volsteadism is from beginning to end nothing but police business. The suppressing of the manufacture, the transportation, and the sale of liquor comes within the category, "police business." So long as millions want to buy and other millions want to sell, you can not suppress that business, even if you were to do as Wheeler suggested: To call out the Army, the Navy, and the National Guard. Even if you were to do that, you would have to organize a force to watch the officers and privates to keep them sober while they were standing guard. That is the cold truth about the matter.

But, lest the evidence and authorities I have cited should be challenged, I call attention to certain admissions made during this debate by distinguished dry Senators. First, I quote the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], who in seeking to avoid the terrific effect of Doctor Doran's statement, could think of nothing better to say than this:

> I understand it to be his idea that better results could be accomplished if the Federal Government concentrated its efforts on suppressing the supply of industrial alcohol at its source.

Mr. President, alcohol does not have a source; it has 10,000 sources. It is not produced in one place where it can be watched and held down. According to the information I receive—and I state it only on information and belief—industrial alcohol is not to-day as popular as "good old moonshine" made by the boys around the town, who are getting rich at the business.

Second, I quote the Senator from Washington, who stands sponsor for this barbaric amendment. However, I do not believe he wrote it. I think it was sent here by the Department of Justice. I will ask the Senator if that is not correct?

Mr. JONES. As I understood, the bill was prepared in the Department of Justice.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The Senator from Washington recently declared:

> The greatest trouble we have had, I think I may say, has been from the intelligence unit of the Government seeking to discredit and to have removed men who are standing by the enforcement of the law. In one or two instances I was compelled to go to the President of the United States in order to protect men who were enforcing the law and standing by its enforcement from the machinations of the intelligence unit. I am glad to say that the President of the United States stood by me on that proposition.

Lord God of Hosts!—and I say it reverently—has it come to pass that the officials of one department of the Government are working with law violators against the officials of another department who are engaged in the enforcement of the law? If so, then the contamination of this law is even worse than I have pictured it; for I did not presume that officers sworn in one department of the Government would dare to undo the work of other officers sworn to enforce this law. Here we have another illustration of the fact that when you declare that a crime which the majority of human beings do not believe is a crime, everywhere people protest, everywhere the arm of the law is paralyzed.

I do not know what their business—

That is, the business of the intelligence unit—has been in other States. I do know that the principal work of the intelligence unit in the State of Washington has been to discredit the prohibition enforcement officers.

The Senator nods his head, and says that is the fact. While I differ from the Senator on many, many things, I know that he is a man whose word is good everywhere.

But, sir, the story can all be epitomized in a very brief statement by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], who is the author of the proposal to increase the prohibition-enforcement appropriation by $25,000,000. We all know that if there are four sincere prohibitionists in all this world, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is one, the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is another, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is the other two. [Laughter.] Standing here at the end of 10 years of this thing, looking back through those years and surveying the scene, the Senator from Georgia declares:

Every Senator, whether he is in favor of this law or not, knows that its enforcement is a farce. * * * Not only is this law violated, * * * but it is causing the people of this country to lose respect not only for this law but for all laws; and I do not know of any greater harm that is being done than for our people to lose respect for law of any kind.

To that I say, "Amen." General disrespect for all laws is the greatest harm that can befall our Nation or can curse our race, and it is the direct product of this law. It is its legitimate child. It springs from it as naturally as plant life springs from the fertile earth.

Said the Senator from Georgia:

It has been a farce from the first—

He then added by way of apology—because they have not had the money with which to enforce it.

How much money? How much money? We are spending this year, directly and indirectly, $59,000,000. Those are the figures given to me by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is in charge of the appropriation bills. That is the amount spent by the Federal Government alone. That undoubtedly can not include many incidental expenses. How can you estimate the increased cost of courts and separate that cost from the usual expenses of litigation?

It would, it seems to me, be very difficult to do that. How much more does it cost if 100,000 men are locked up in jail and taken from useful employments? The economic loss and expense is not less than $200,000,000. How much more does it cost? The figures given, of course, do not embrace the expenses of enforcement in the 48 States. Neither do the figures I have given include imprisonments made by State officers. I do not know what may be the situation in other States, but I am sure the convictions by the State courts of Missouri far outnumber those secured by the Federal officers within that State. First and last, it seems to me it would be wholly within the limits of conservative statement if we were to say that this law costs the State and local governments at least $100,000,000 per annum. And that the economic loss is at least $200,000,000 more.

How much does it cost? The revenue which the Government might derive mounts to stupendous sums. If this business were taken over and properly managed, if the Government obtained a revenue upon the liquor that is to-day being sold, I am sure the annual interest upon the national debt could be paid, and I think the entire debt could be wiped out in 20 years of time.

How much does it cost? No man can measure its cost. No man can give an accurate estimate. This much we may be sure the amount is appalling.

You say, "Ah, but we abolished the saloon. We eliminated the distillery."

You did not abolish the saloon. You split the saloon into a hundred parts and scattered the parts into every hamlet and village. You have made peripatetic that which was a fixture. Instead of being located in one spot, the saloon perambulates around the country in automobiles. The bar is condensed into a gripsack. The sales are by the case instead of by the glass. The saloon is still here, and more people are engaged in the business than in pre-Volstead days. You did not exterminate the brewery. You made millions of little breweries and installed them in the homes of the people.

Ah, but why need I argue the failure of prohibition when it is solemnly admitted on the floor of the Senate by distinguished dry Senators that the whole enforcement has been a farce? If the admissions do not cover the case, then no logic or assertion of mine will avail.

But, Mr. President, there is a phase of this question graver than any I have touched upon. In preliminary, let me repeat that there never has been a race of men that has not had some form of stimulant—not one. You may dig in the catacombs, you may explore the sepulchers of vanished races of men, and you find there the evidence that always, in some form, man has used stimulants. That fact betokens a natural appetite, a natural demand. The great races have been the ones most addicted to alcoholic beverages.

A condition of that kind must be dealt with in a practical way. If the appetite or desire generally exists, the fact should be recognized and so dealt with as to produce the best possible results. I will go as far as any other man will go in appeals to people to restrain themselves, in pointing out the evils of over-indulgence, in doing everything that can be done by moral suasion and sensible regulation to limit the use of these stimulants. I am, however, convinced you make a tragic mistake when for the persuasions of argument you substitute legislative command, "Thou shalt not drink." By saying that you create an entirely different psychology. Like it or not, the average man says, "I don't care a snap of my fingers for that law." Like it or not, we must face the fact that men are just men, and women are just women, and that when you tell them they "shall not" do a thing which they believe they have the right to do, you plant in their minds the impulse to immediately proceed to do it. That is exactly what has occurred.

Another phase of this psychology is that liquor, once a common thing that anyone could obtain at any place has now been lifted, notwithstanding the enormous quantities of it still available, to a point where it is regarded as in the nature of a luxury. There is not a living American who does not regard almost every luxury as a prime necessity of his life.

Accordingly, at parties, at balls, at dinners, and at dances this "luxury" is dealt out. The lad who once was told that strong drink was the potion of death, that in the cup lurked the coiled serpent of destruction, now regards drinking as a good-natured escapade and a pint of whisky on the hip as the equipment of all good fellows.

Ah, this is no dream, this is no occasional thing; it exists almost everywhere among almost all classes of society. The cocktail is dispensed as a luxury and the highball follows on. Men and women who in the old days would not have served a drink in their homes now regard it as a necessary act of courtesy. Mothers, who a few years ago would have warned their daughters not to associate with boys who drank, now, all too often, will hand their daughters the liquor served at parties.

That is true. Deny it? Yes; stand up and deny it, and try a little longer to mislead the world. The fact is here, and if a man could consistently with decency do so, he could read a list of names as long as my friend SHEPPARD's list of jailbirds.

Girls guzzle it with boys. It is served in clubs, not by the clubs, oh, no; not by the proprietors of hotels and eating houses, oh, no. All they furnish are the glass, and the ginger ale, and all the boy does is to furnish the moonshine. Thus we are corrupting the youth of the land. I say to you prohibition friends, and I say it as solemnly as I have ever uttered anything in my life, we are corrupting a class that rarely was endangered or tainted in the past, and upon your souls and consciences the weight of the burden must rest.

There follows a tale more horrible. Whereas once people could get good beer, and a little stimulant from it, they now resort to home-brew which while it is made in the homes in vast quantities, is rather vile stuff. Or they consume gin and rum and whisky. These strong liquors are now used by millions who before prohibition never touched anything but light wines and mild beer.

Ah, if the story but ended there, it would not be as black as that which I am about to relate. Bootleggers of whisky are likely to become bootleggers of drugs. When men can not get a stimulant in the form of the kind of liquor they want, they go to something stronger than that. According to the best authorities, there are in the United States to-day more than a million drug addicts.

We never at any time had that number of habitual drunkards.

Mrs. Bonfils, a distinguished writer and a lady of great ability and unquestioned honesty, and to whom I am indebted for much of the information I am about to give, says that dope is peddled to schoolgirls. They are told: "Here is a little breath of happiness that makes you forget." In the short space of 10 days the iron grip of the drug is fastened upon their souls and bodies; they are manacled slaves the rest of their lives. Dope is also distributed and used in alarming quantities by the worst criminal classes. From it they get the inspiration of a false courage that enables them to commit crime. All too often the lady of fashion in the seclusion of her boudoir resorts to drugs to soothe her tired nerves; likewise dope is frequently the bracer of the professional gentleman who for the hour needs extra enthusiasm.

Is the dope habit growing? Oh, you people who have turned all the batteries of your wrath against a glass of beer, what say you to the fact that, running parallel with your prohibition movement, has come this horrible advance in the use of narcotics?

The secretary of the opium conference of the League of Nations declares that 786 tons of opium and 12 tons of coca leaves are more than sufficient to supply all the medical uses throughout the world.

Hon. STEPHEN PORTER author of the Porter bill, estimates the need of legitimate narcotics for the medical practice of the world to be 125 tons or less. John Palmer Gavit, former managing editor of the New York Evening Post, and one time chief of the Washington bureau of the Associated Press, discloses in his new book, Opium, that the world is producing between eight and ten thousand tons of raw opium every year and doing it legitimately.

United States Attorney Charles H. Tuttle, a very high-class man, states his belief that the value of drugs smuggled into the United States last year was between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000.

What happened to the cases of ships bringing that in? The first case I cite is that of the ship President Taft, which came into the harbor of San Francisco on July 14, 1927, with a cargo of 830 tins of narcotics, valued at $29,300. A fine of $146,650 was levied against the company. The company appealed to Washington and the fine actually paid was $3,000.

July 1, 1926, the President Lincoln came into San Francisco Harbor carrying 197 tins of contraband opium; the fine levied was $32,825; the company appealed to Washington and got off with a payment of $1,000.

May 1, 1925, 388 tins of narcotics were seized on the Korean ship Maru. There were levied fines of $31,050; the fine actually paid was $100.

The Rochambeau brought $5,000,000 worth of dope into New York Harbor in December, 1928. The case against that company is still pending.

The President Harrison brought into New York Harbor on October 2, 1928, $1,000,000 worth of dope. These doubtless are but a few of the great number of importations and miscarriages of justice.

Notice this: The price of narcotics has fallen from $50 an ounce to $25 an ounce in the city of San Francisco. In Chicago it has fallen from $50 to $20 an ounce. In New York narcotics can be bought for $12 an ounce. That shows that the market is flooded. Besides, new varieties of dope are being created.

It is further stated that in 1922, 24 per cent of the prisoners in the Leavenworth prison were drug addicts, and that to-day 60 per cent are drug addicts.

What has that to do with prohibition? Everything. If people have a natural desire for some kind of a stimulant, and if they are set on satisfying that desire, then, in the name of high heaven, let us permit them to have that kind of a stimulant which does not utterly destroy them. Let us not drive them to these baser expedients.

We can not make people over. All that we can do is to restrain and help and guide and counsel. We should bear in mind that the personal habits of the individual are the business of the individual. So long as those habits do not impinge upon the rights of other people, we have no right to interfere except by persuasion. There is the line, and when we overleap it we bring disaster.

Senators, did you ever stop to think of the absurdity of this prohibition law? If the subject were not serious, its contemplation would provoke laughter. Consider this: A man approaches a bar and asks for a glass of beer. The bartender sells it to him. The transaction thus far is voluntary and perfectly amicable. Then the bartender concludes to rob the customer, and murders him in cold blood and takes his purse.

A United States marshal witnesses the sale of the beer and the murder. Under the law this ridiculous situation exists! The marshal can arrest the culprit and take him before the United States court for selling a glass of beer, but he can not take him there to be tried for the cold-blooded murder and robbery. We trust the States to try every kind of crime except violations of the prohibitory law. We trust them to protect us by the apprehension of burglars, of highwaymen, of fraud mongers, of fiends, and of thieves, criminals of every kind, no matter how desperate or vile; but we do not trust the States to regulate the sale of that which a large percentage of the people want to buy. What an absurdity! The purpose of the eighteenth amendment was to force prohibition upon unwilling States. So we have the spectacle of great States with millions of people, the majority of whom protest against prohibition.

There is no man of good common sense who does not know that there can be no effective enforcement of any law among any free people where the majority of the people are opposed to it. It can not be done and it ought not to be done, for freedom consists in the right to live under laws enacted by the consent of the people.

All the while that we have proceeded along this line of unreasonable restriction of mild stimulants the deadliest serpents that ever have been loosed, the serpents of opium and of narcotics, are destroying the people of the land. Drugs are not like whisky, which can be smelled on the breath, and thus bring exposure. They do not give any evidence at first. The poison is distilled gradually. It steals through the veins. The habit grows through the years, until at last from the pallid lips of the victim comes the cry of maniacal despair. Ah, what an army is this army of drug addicts, a million men and women. An army of the living dead marching through the golden fields of earth, but their dull eyes see only the distorted pictures drugs have painted in disordered brains.

We, sir, have been all along pursuing the wrong philosophy. We have relied on law and abandoned reason. We have come to believe in the logic of the lash, the persuasive power of force, and we have substituted handcuffs for moral precepts and chains for prayers. No longer do we hear the old appeal to reason and to right. No longer are there kindly words, gentle handclasps, and appeals to reason and to conscience. Rather the prison cell, the sound of shackles, the rattling of gyves, the death rattle in dungeons. Thus we seek to make men good. I affirm it to be true that in all the tides of time no law made by man ever made a good man or a good woman—not one. Law may have restrained the murderer's arm, but it did not remove the impulse of murder from his heart. It may have restrained the hand of the thief but it did not remove from his soul the desire to steal. It may have restrained the highwayman, but he still at heart was a robber. Law never made a man good. It may have protected the innocent from the wrongs of the wicked, it may have restrained the criminal, but it did not purge his heart or make white the blackness of his soul.

What is it then that we must look to? Ah, my friends, there are two realms of the law. First is the law passed by legislative bodies, the civil law. Its business is to protect life and property and restrain aggression and wrong. That is its realm. It is protective.

But there is another realm of law—the realm of the moral law. Its principles were written by Almighty God upon the hearts of men. They have been taught by the mother's gentle voice as in the ear of her daughter she whispered of rectitude and virtue, and by the father as he pointed his son the way of honor. This is the great law. It controls us in nearly all the acts of our lives.

What law of man has ever planted a noble impulse in the heart? Men will leap into the flood of rivers to rescue a stranger. They then obey not any man-made law; they answer the call of nature, the voice of conscience; they obey the impulse of nobility. Men will yield their lives to save a child. But no law of man commands the sacrifice. They respond to the mandate of the moral law.

On the great moral law we must at last rely. It alone makes men fit to live upon the earth. It alone will make them temperate, just, honest, and decent.

We have attempted to substitute for the persuasion of the moral law the force of the statute law. Senators, I warn you, the American people can not be forced to do anything. Nevertheless, "a man for the lion and a man for the tiger" is the cry of the day.

Mr. President, Montaigne has well said:

> It would be better for us to have no laws at all than to have them in so prodigious numbers as we have.

And Thomas Jefferson:

> The nation that is least governed is best governed.

I could quote the words of others of our mighty dead whose hands did "shape the anchors of our hope," but it would be useless to proceed further.

If you ask me, Mr. President, what remedy I would suggest, I answer, let us go back to the original principles upon which our Government was founded. Let us once more say that the States are capable of self-government. Let us repeal this obnoxious, this hideous amendment. Then let us say to the State of my friend from Utah [Mr. KING], who is honoring me by his presence, "Let Utah handle this question as befits her people and as suits her purpose." To the State of my friend from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], let us give the same message, and so without going through the list of names, to all of the States let us say, "This is your business. It is a matter falling generally within police regulations. We trust you to apprehend the murderers, to put down crime, to suppress vice, to protect life and liberty and property, and we will trust you in this matter."

Then, sir, I am willing that the States shall be protected in the exercise of that right by the Federal Government providing, as it did provide under an amendment which years ago I offered to a bill of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], that when a State prohibits the manufacture and sale of liquor within its borders, liquor can not be sent into that State in interstate commerce without becoming immediately subject to those State laws. Let us then repeal this law. Let us then discharge the snoopers and the spies, the sneaks and the criminals who have been employed with our money to haunt our doors, to break open the windows of our habitations, and to murder our people upon the streets. Let us discharge them, and as they go let us say that in this country under this flag a system of spies and espionage is a foreign and an abominable thing, and that it shall be utterly wiped out in this Republic. Let us bring this business, wherever it is conducted or how it is conducted, into the open, where it can be carried on either by officers of the law or by men who are not criminals the moment they embark in it. Let us put it in the sunlight where it may be seen. Let us fix it so that the man who buys it buys it in the open and takes the responsibility before his neighbors and his friends. Let us go back to the old principles and old doctrines of the sovereignty of the States and the right of the American citizen to regulate his own life and control his own walk down the pathway of the years.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I desire to present and to have read an amendment which I intend to propose at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN in the chair). The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me in order that I may offer an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to present an amendment to the pending bill. I propose the amendment now and shall formally offer it at the proper time. I send it to the clerk's desk and ask that it may be read. I offer the amendment at this time, Mr. President, so that it may be before the Senate at the same time that the amendment just proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] may be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "offense," in line 9, the following:

When the offense embraces illegal manufacture for sale, sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, or exportation for sale.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, when I asked on Saturday last that the unanimous-consent agreement might be vacated I did so not only because of my desire to hear the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in the full presentation of his views upon this important question, not only because I am always interested in any presentation he may choose to make upon a subject, but for the further reason that I think it well to have full discussion of this subject from time to time. Indeed, I think the most unfortunate thing that could possibly happen to the present program of dealing with the liquor problem would be that of indifference or failure to call to the attention of the country the different phases which it from time to time presents for our consideration.

Mr. President, before I enter upon a discussion of this subject I take this occasion to say how sincerely our regret deepens as the time approaches when the Senator from Missouri is voluntarily to retire to private life. Those of us who have served with him during these long years—some of them tragic years—and have come to know of his great qualities, regard his retirement as not only a loss to this body but a loss to the country. It is the retirement of no ordinary man; it is the retirement of an extraordinary man; a man whose industry and courage and genius have placed him among the foremost men of his day. I regret that he is voluntarily to retire. I trust, however, Mr. President, that he will find time from the engagements of his profession, of which he is a distinct ornament, to consider and discuss public questions; that we may have the benefit, at least in that way, of those attributes of mind and qualities of character with which he is so richly and so rarely endowed. As these are the closing days of the session I felt I could not say less, and if I should entirely consult my feelings I would say much more.

Mr. President, with very many things which the Senator from Missouri has said I am in full accord. I think upon the fundamental question which is involved in this controversy I am in accord with the Senator. The Senator from Missouri referred to the fact that there are those who insist upon enacting such laws as this but who, nevertheless, live in violation of the law. He said that in his opinion such individuals were deserving of the severest condemnation. I am bound to say with that statement I believe all right-thinking men and women will heartily agree. It ought to be an axiom of decent citizenship. If those who make the law live in violation of the law the ax has already been laid at the root of the tree of representative government. There is a peculiar and a heavier obligation resting upon those who make the law than upon those for whom the law is made, although, of course, it binds all. But, upon reflection, Mr. President, how are we to distinguish between those who make the law and those whose duty it is to execute the law. If there be included the latter with the former, then let the Senator from Missouri unleash his fine irony and his scathing invective; he has a subject worthy of his talents. I think one of the most serious conditions with which we have to deal not only with regard to this but with regard to other laws is that those of us who make the laws and those who execute the laws standing in places of trust and tremendous responsibility do not often enough think of the fact that, perhaps, more important than are laws is the example which we ourselves set to the citizen. I think that is a matter about which the entire country can well reflect; and the Senator has stated it in his own inimitable way.

The Senator said that prohibition was the crime of crimes which had been committed in the matter of legislation in the United States. With that I can not agree. It may have been a mistake, Mr. President; the people of the United States may have erred in their judgment; time and experience alone will demonstrate that fact; but it was not a crime. The people of the United States were in sincerity wrestling with that which was deemed to be one of the great evils of modern civilization. Everyone had been brought to realize that in some way, and in a more effective way, it was the duty of the people of this country to deal with this problem. The object was an exalted one; the purpose embodied something of the ideal, though possibly in the end it may prove impracticable. That time, as I have said, will determine. But that which they would have accomplished was void of all intent to do injury to the people of the United States; it was to serve them. No; it was not a crime to undertake to control and bring under the direction of law and under the domination of civilization that which would undermine and destroy civilization. It was and is a great evil, and to struggle for its control or to be rid of it can in no way be regarded as a crime. We may not have found as yet the right remedy; I do not know. The fight against the liquor traffic is not for 10 days or 10 years; it is an eternal fight, and only from step to step and from progressive acts can we finally determine how we shall ultimately deal with it. But the question is whether or not it was an error, whether or not it was a mistake.

I am not committed, Mr. President, to all opposition against the modification or even the repeal of the eighteenth amendment; I am not committed against the modification or even the repeal of the Volstead Act; I am only committed against the change, the repeal either of the amendment or of the law, so long as nothing better and more effective has been or can be presented.

If there be a better way to control the evil of drink, a more effective way, more thorough, and with better results to those whom we would serve, let us have it. The object is to secure the best possible remedy that experience and the human mind can give us upon this subject; and, while at the present time, in my judgment, no better plan has been proposed, no better scheme devised, and I stand for the program as it is, let it be understood at all times that we are open, as I presume all advocates of better regulation or better control or a better deal are open, to consider any plan which may be presented and which will stand the test of reason. But it must be a better plan. It must give assurance that we are making progress. There is to be no retreat. Revolutions do not go backward.

I do not find fault with those who advocate the repeal of the eighteenth amendment. I may differ with them as to the arguments which they put forth, and as to the reasons with which they undertake to sustain their position; but the right to advocate the repeal is a sacred right—just as sacred as the right to put an amendment in the Constitution in the first place. The test of free government is the right of the people to write and unwrite laws, the test of good citizenship is obedience to the law when written. We are not quarreling with our friends about their right to urge a repeal; and, far from quarreling about a better scheme, we invite them to present it, to present it with all their power and ability, and let the American people ultimately pass upon it.

But this much I venture to say in the beginning of my remarks: That the eighteenth amendment will stand in the Constitution of the United States until the moral forces of the United States decide that something better is presented to control the liquor problem. There will be no going backward upon the effort of the human family to control this evil which has been torturing and tormenting them for 3,000 years and more.

No one need argue with me, Mr. President, as to his right to urge the repeal; but, while not committed against a change, as I have stated, I am committed to the enforcement of the present provision in every reasonable, practical way so long as it is a part of the Constitution of the United States. That presents a question far superior, to my mind, to the question of "wet" or "dry," of liquor or no liquor, important and vital as it is. The question of enforcing prohibition while it stands, of massing and crystallizing and organizing the moral sentiment of the country and the legal forces of the country to maintain our Constitution, presents a question infinitely more important to me than the question of liquor or no liquor. That involves the existence of our Government, the preservation of the principles upon which we build, the hope of the future. The only things we can expect of the future are the liberties and the rights which a regard for the Constitution as the people have written it will give to us. When we are fighting for that principle we are fighting for free government—for the right of the people to rule. That transcends all other issues. That is the issue which holds me to this contest against all adversity, against all criticism, upon that issue I stand.

The Constitution says:

> The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

There it is, the fundamental law of the land, adopted according to the method provided by the fathers; just as much a part of the law of the land as the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; just as much a part of the law of the land as that which gives a man the right of trial by jury; just as much a part of the law of the land as that which protects his right under habeas corpus; just as much as that which protects the freedom of the press, or the right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience; just as much as any other provision of the Constitution of the United States; and the obligation is upon us here, and elsewhere in the country, to support it, maintain it, and to enforce it so long as it is a part of the Constitution.

The Supreme Court has said that—

> The first section of the amendment—
> The one embodying prohibition—
> is operative throughout the entire territorial limits of the United States, binds all legislative bodies, courts, public officers, and individuals within those limits, and of its own force invalidates every legislative act—whether by Congress, by a State legislature, or by Territorial assembly—which authorizes or sanctions what the section prohibits.

This was not only writing into the Constitution a specific provision of law; it was the adoption of a great national policy. The people had struggled with the liquor question in one way and another for many years. They had tried the license system, local option, State control, and different methods by which to control the saloon. They finally came to the conclusion that as a matter of national policy they would adopt the prohibition policy and write it into the Constitution of the United States. That presents to me the only problem that there is before us at the present time, and that is, "The Constitution being there, how shall we maintain our system of government?"

Upon that question the able Senator from Missouri and I are not in disagreement, as I understand. I understand that he takes the position which he has always taken: While he would repeal the eighteenth amendment, for reasons to which I shall refer later, while it is there, as I understand, and, knowing him as a great lawyer and a patriot, as I would expect him to be, he is for the enforcement of the Constitution of the United States.

Upon another occasion he said:

> When the Constitution was amended it became the paramount, the supreme law of the land. When the Volstead Act was passed it became the statute law, and Constitution and law became binding upon all citizens and all public officials.

An axiomatic proposition, yet too often forgotten in these days; a simple proposition upon which all free government rests, yet too often forgotten in these days. Written into the Constitution, the law adopted, they bind all citizens, and all citizens ought to recognize that fact.

Mr. President, the trouble in this situation lies deeper than the prohibition law itself, as I shall undertake to show later. I fear sometimes—although I am not a pessimist, I trust—that we have come to forget in this country just what a constitutional government means. It means, this, and practically nothing more: That unless the people have that reverence for the Constitution which commands of them obedience and respect there is no such thing left as constitutional government. There may be many individuals who will violate the law or violate the Constitution; but the great mass of the American people must come again to realize—if they do not now realize—that when they themselves write the law, as they do when they adopt a constitution, they must be bound by and respect that law until they themselves rewrite it.

Again the Senator said:

> The Constitution and the statutes must stand and be obeyed unless they are changed or repealed in the manner and form laid down by the Constitution. There should be no evasion; there should be no attempt to accomplish their destruction by indirection. In my opinion, the eighteenth amendment will stand until and unless the moral forces of the Nation become convinced that there is some better way to deal with the liquor problem.

Yes, until the moral forces conclude there is a better way. As I understand the Senator's position and mine, they are identical upon this great, fundamental question that the Constitution is there, adopted by the people; the law is there, enacted by Congress; they should not be evaded; they should not be circumvented; all good citizens and all right-minded people should assist in maintaining them and enforcing them. With that question settled, Mr. President, we have nothing before us until we come to the consideration of some new scheme which involves a repeal or an entire change of the law. Let us have the new plan. Let us have the next forward step in the settlement of the liquor problem.

I shall not, of course, take issue with the Senator upon the question that there are violations of the law. I know that. I certainly shall not take issue with him upon the question that the law has led to corruption. I know that. I call his attention to the fact, however, that there never has been a law with reference to liquor placed upon the statute books of any civilized nation on the earth that the liquor forces did not undertake to break it down, to violate it, to undermine it, and to corrupt the officials. It is the history of liquor legislation from the beginning until this hour. It is not within the ingenuity of the human mind to devise a liquor law that will be satisfactory to the liquor interests. They are seeking to do with this law what they sought to do with every law. I do not care where you go, when it was, or how you undertake to deal with it; we had the same condition of violation, of corruption, of deceit, of fraud that we have now in regard to this matter; and as I shall undertake to show in a few moments, every system of dealing with liquor at the present time is having to meet that exact problem.

Before I go on further, let me go back to early days of the Republic, when it was proposed to place a high tax upon the importation of liquor into the United States. If you will take up the debates which occurred upon that question, you will find just the same contention that is made now—that that kind of a law can not be enforced; that it will lead to smuggling, to bootlegging, to violations of the law. There must be no law. The evil wants a free rein.

> But suppose we yield to the reasoning of my opponent and lay a high duty and check the importation of rum. What will happen? We shall defeat our purpose. The country will be just as immoral and much poorer than at present. Not a hogshead of the liquor will be seen on our wharves, not a shilling of revenue will be collected from it by our customhouse officers. Yet at all the inns and taverns in the land rum will be as plentiful and as cheap as ever. Does any man suppose for a moment that the thousands of artisans, and the mechanics, the tradesmen, and the fishermen, to whom liquor is as much a necessity of life—as meat and bread, will upon a sudden cease to drink it because it is taxed with a great tax? Will they not rather set on foot 10,000 schemes to evade the duty? And is there any ingenuity so marvelous as the ingenuity of men who seek to circumvent an unwise law? Lay such a tax and in a few months every creek, every secluded bay, every swamp along the whole coast from Maine to Georgia will be a nest of smugglers. There, in the dark of each moon and in the blackness of each stormy night, hogsheads of the forbidden liquor will be run ashore and buried in the marsh, or hidden in the cellar of some fisherman's hut, to be reshipped to the great seaports of the country. Then will spring up a mode of tax gathering odious to all. On the land, an army of customhouse officers, tide waiters, and gaugers. On the sea, a navy of ships, hailing every schooner, boarding every packet, giving chase to every shallop that comes in sight. And when the money collected with so much pains has been counted, the cost of ships and officers paid, and the books balanced, it will indeed be astonishing if a single shilling remains over in the Treasury.

The same tender regard for the Treasury of the United States, the appetities of the workmen, the possibility of evading the law, the application of smuggling and spying and treachery upon the part of the officers, all advanced from time to time, and every time that the United States has proposed in any way to deal with the liquor question. No new arguments under the sun.

I repeat, there is violation now, there is corruption now, there has always been violation, there will always be corruption whenever a liquor law is advanced and put upon the statute books and undertaken to be enforced. What the liquor interests crave is the right, uncontrolled and unhampered, to prey upon the human race to its full insatiable appetite.

Just a word, Mr. President, before I pass on to the different systems. I wish that violation of law and corruption of officials were confined to the liquor problem. What a fortunate country this would be. I wish, as we survey the situation, that we could feel that only with regard to prohibition or enforcement is there violation or crime. Unfortunately it is not so. What are the violations of the liquor law compared to the corruption—the saturnalia of corruption in this country in 1921, 1922, and 1923 of the highest officials, men most responsible in Government—with corruption permeating out through the entire country; apparently more money involved and more taken in one transaction than these pilfering thieves in the Department of Prohibition would take in a hundred years.

Perhaps this arises to some extent out of a condition that followed the war. Let us hope so. We find it in other countries. We find it remarkably strong in other countries. Let us hope that it is a condition which followed the war.

Yet, when we make that allowance, we must refer to one thing more, that is, unfortunate as it is and humiliating as it is to admit it, the United States has not yet learned the science of enforcing its criminal laws. That is to-day the greatest and most profound domestic problem, in my opinion, in this country, the application and the enforcement of the criminal law, not alone with reference to prohibition—that is but one department—but with reference to the entire scope of human activity undertaken to be covered by the law.

We have had in this country, on an average for the last 15 years, 8,700 murders a year. In 1918 there were 18 murders in the city of London. Fifteen of the murderers were apprehended and punished. In the same year there were 230 murders in the largest city in the United States. I have not the exact figures, but I am informed that only a small percentage were punished.

In the year 1922 there were 17 murders in London. In 1922 in the largest city in the United States there were 260 murders, and in the next largest city there were 137 murders.

In 1921 there were 121 robberies in all England and Wales combined. There were 1,445 robberies in one city in the United States and 2,400 in another.

Underlying this entire question is the fact that the American people must gird themselves for the supreme task in civilization, and the crucial test of a self-governing people; that is, whether or not they can enforce the laws which they themselves write. That is the test of a self-governing people, whether the people can enforce the rules which they lay down for themselves.

We have been so busy in conquering a continent, in clearing the forests and reclaiming the deserts, and getting ourselves ahead in the great struggle for dominancy of our natural wealth that perhaps we have not given to this other problem the consideration which older communities have given to it. But it is here; it confronts us. Let us not be misled by reference to prohibition alone. It is an underlying proposition with which the American people must deal; and just such speeches as that made by the able Senator from Missouri will, although devoted largely to one question, emphasize and call to the attention of the people the fact that they are facing the proposition of preserving the first principles of representative government.

In one sense I am not surprised that there should be this disregard of law throughout the United States. We have a class of individuals—fortunately there are none of them in the Senate, the people are too careful about that—we have a class of individuals in this country, learned gentlemen, who seem to regret that their ancestors ever came to this country, who are engaged constantly in attacking the first principles of free government, and now they would lay down the rule in this country that if an individual does not like the law he has a right to violate it, to disregard it, to join with others and nullify it. They have laid down the rule that, "If I do not like a particular provision of the Constitution I need not appeal to my fellow countrymen to repeal it, but I may violate it and disregard it."

In one of the leading magazines of the United States, an old magazine of high standing, I read an article in which I find this—

He who obeys a law which is wrong contributes by that to the final debacle, the intensity of which is increased because delayed by that obedience.

"The man who obeys a law which he does not think is right." Who determines whether or not it is right? Who determines in this country whether a law is right or wrong, and how is it determined? Do individuals determine that question? Are there 117,000,000 individuals passing 117,000,000 judgments on a provision of the Constitution?

The fathers were too wise for that. They provided that the Constitution could be amended in a certain way, and when it is amended, that is a determination that what is contained in the amendment is right under our form of government, until the people in the same way revise their judgment and determine another course; and a man who teaches that an individual has the right to determine for himself is a traitor to the institutions framed by our fathers and maintained by our forebears. I do not care what his standing may be—lawyer or professor—or for whom he may presume to speak, he is disloyal to American institutions.

If a large number of citizens are convinced that an act compels them to live lives of hypocrisy, cowardice, and servility, they will feel no moral obligation to observe the law. On the contrary, they will develop an esprit and morale in the breaking of it in the name of patriotism.

Are you surprised that the ordinary bootlegger, looking up to those of learning, perhaps able to read the literature of the day, finds that he is pursuing a course marked out by those who assume to speak with authority? Are you surprised that the young men or the young women, inclined, perhaps, to disregard the precedents of their father and mother, find here in the literature of our country a statement that they may go counter to and disregard the laws of the land?

Ah, Mr. President, the able Senator spoke of the moral law. Let us appeal to it here. Let us invoke it here. The highest evidence of morality in a republic or a democracy is to observe the law which the majority have written. There is no morality that can be governed by political principles if that is not true.

Then this author says, in concluding his atrocious article:

The nullification of the fugitive slave law developed men like Abraham Lincoln.

What a miserable slander, what a cowardly implication, telling the young people of this country that Abraham Lincoln built his character and his career upon disregard for the Constitution of the United States.

Lincoln said upon one occasion—I quote from memory—"I hate slavery"—using a word which seldom fell from the sacred lips of the martyr. I never saw it except with reference to slavery.

I hate slavery; but it is in the Constitution of the United States. It is protected by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. So long as it is, it must be protected. Therefore—

Said he, and I quote, I believe, almost his exact words—

we are in duty bound to preserve that Constitution in letter and in spirit.

When he came to be inaugurated President of the United States out here in front of the Capitol, his last plea before the dread carnage of the Civil War broke, and brother was arrayed against brother, hero against hero—the last plea of the martyred Lincoln was that the northern people respect the Constitution of the United States, give the southern people their fugitive slave law, and enforce it, as the Constitution of the United States obligated them to do. Yet there is circulated here as a part of the literature of the day the statement that the then President of the United States was an advocate of lawlessness, an advocate of the violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Let me read another statement. A lawyer of Connecticut—I understand him to be a member of the Connecticut bar in good standing—has written a book upon constitutional government and the duty of the citizen, particularly around the Volstead Act and the Constitution of the United States, particularly the eighteenth amendment. Let me read from this book, which is being circulated now by an organization which is engaged in trying to convince the people of the United States that the eighteenth amendment can not be enforced. This is what I find in that book:

> The eighteenth amendment is void in so far as it purports to give the United States authority over intrastate business. The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which purport to authorize the transfer of police power from the States to the United States under the eighteenth amendment are not binding upon the State or its people.

Mr. President, if I were going to reach out and get a man who ought to have this $10,000 fine and five years' imprisonment applied to him, he is the first gentleman I would hunt for. I would punish, if I could, the man who teaches violence rather than the poor creature who listens to and practices such teachings. I believe in free speech, but I believe when a man preaches a doctrine that is disloyal to his government, he ought to take the responsibility for having abused free speech. He may urge repeal, he may urge change, but defiance to law ought to bring shame if there be no way to punish.

Mr. President, we are not the only people in the world who are struggling with the prohibition question or with the liquor problem. They have it, for instance, now in Italy. Not many Americans agree with Mussolini as to his political philosophy or his methods, but we have to admit that he is getting results. Perhaps the particular environment amid which he works necessitates some methods and some principles with which we would not be in accord.

In surveying the situation in Italy, in trying to rehabilitate and reinvigorate the Italian people and to restore them to something of their ancient prestige, this marvelous man came up against the liquor problem and realized at once and without hesitation that it is one of the things with which Italy had to contend.

Upon a certain occasion in a public address he gave a number of figures and facts as to the deplorable condition in Italy, and stated unmistakably that the problem would have to be dealt with in a drastic way. He referred to the fact that the death rate through alcoholism was excessively high. He further referred to the fact that mortality and insanity and suicides due to the use of liquor were progressing at such a rate that the Italian people could no longer disregard the problem. Then he said:

> From these figures you will perceive that the picture is black and tragic and merits our deep attention.

The first thing he did, which is a more simple process in Italy, was to close 25,000 saloons overnight by an imperial decree, if I may be permitted to use the word "imperial" in connection with Mussolini. He closed 25,000 saloons and gave assurance that that was the first step in ridding his country of this evil which was at war with the moral and economic life of the Italian people.

We are not the only people who are struggling with it. It is a world-wide problem working its devastation and its ruin in all countries, and the problem is, What are we to do with it? In England it is now one of the vital issues or problems. They discovered some time ago that in 1927 the liquor bill of England was $1,506,000,000, and that the profits made out of those who drank it was $120,000,000. England, with 1,500,000 unemployed, with her superhuman burden of taxation, struggling for her economic life, found that she was expending $1,500,000,000 for liquor and paying somebody a profit of $120,000,000.

England has tried in every way to deal with this problem except that of absolute prohibition, which is now being discussed. They undertook in the first place to close the saloons earlier in the day. They found that the saloons or the liquor traffic paid no attention practically to the regulation. They then undertook to reduce the amount of alcoholic content. They found that that did not have the desired effect.

Then they went into a town of considerable size and purchased the entire liquor interests, purchased all the means and methods that they had of supplying it, and undertook to demonstrate in that way what they could do by Government ownership. What was the result? As usual, invariably the liquor traffic began to break down the little experiment in that town alone. They bootlegged liquor in every possible way, and that experiment, of course, has failed to demonstrate, therefore, what Government ownership could do under proper circumstances.

But it is the same old law, the same old rule. It does not make any difference what you do or how you try or how small your efforts may be, wherever the liquor traffic can fasten its fangs upon progress, progress dies.

Let us take one more illustration. Over in Canada they had prohibition in a number of Provinces; I have forgotten just how many. Then along came the moderates, those who said that "man has to have some liquor. Get rid of the bootlegger. Get rid of corruption. Get rid of destroying our young men and our young women. Therefore let us adopt Government control."

The argument in Canada was that by this method they would be rid of those things which my able friend thinks we can be rid of in this country, by going back to State rights. We will examine that in a few moments.

What happened under the Canadian liquor law? Let us go first to the official record. I have referred to this elsewhere. I have been accused of being misinformed. Mr. President, I am not misinformed. I was over in Canada last summer and the summer before. I am not misinformed.

The British Columbia Liquor Board reports:

> Since the opening of the beer parlors the sale of "hard liquors" has increased 50 per cent. As much liquor is sold by bootleggers as is sold in the Government stores.

That is the way Canada got rid of the bootlegger. It does not make any difference, I repeat, what we do; the lawbreaker is there.

The Quebec Liquor Commission said:

> Sale of hard spirits increased 32,275 gallons in one year. Drunkenness among women has increased 53 per cent.

These are official reports and not denied, except outside of Canada. The Saskatchewan Liquor Board said:

> The sale of hard liquor increased 33 per cent in the last two years. Bootlegging increased in this Province 111 per cent in the first year.

The Alberta Liquor Board said that 60,000 permits were issued the first year; two years later, 144,000 permits. The greatest problem is moonshine bootlegging. Four million gallons of liquor were sold in the second year without control.

During the first four months of Government control the Ontario board said that 220,440 permits were issued and people were buying liquor at the rate of $1,000,000 a week.

Mr. President, let us turn to a different source than the official record, and that is to the representatives of the church. I am not going to take members of some organization which has for its particular purposes the advocacy of prohibition or the liquor law, but call upon those who are interested from the standpoint of Christian ministers. Father Lavergne, speaking of government ownership in his paper said:

> With due respect to those at the head of our Government I must say that since they have become the advocates of beer and booze and have set the seal of the Government approval upon drinking, they have almost annihilated the work of the church through years of preaching temperance and sobriety.

An effort at true temperance!

Cardinal Begin said:

> You know what a vigorous battle we have fought for the virtue of temperance in our diocese, our beloved coadjutor and the group of ecclesiastical and lay apostles who have aided him in his efforts. After about 15 years' work they had almost conquered the enemy, and we were overjoyed in foreseeing the end of the destruction caused by the excesses of alcohol. But alas, there is now spreading everywhere the intolerable abuse which we denounce, and in particular the surreptitious fabrication of an alcohol more harmful than any other to the health of the body and the soul.

Let us turn to the newspapers. They are a source of information. The Vancouver Sun said:

> The people decided on a policy of restricting alcoholic consumption to the lowest possible degree. The government has made this piling up of revenue the chief purpose of the act. Moderation does not moderate. Government control does not control. The British Columbia liquor system has actually failed.

Sir Hugh Macdonald, son of the famous John A. Macdonald, said:

There is just as much unlawful drinking under the government control act as there ever was under prohibition. The present law was in the very nature of things difficult of enforcement. It was far less difficult to secure convictions under prohibition than under government control.

The World, published at Vancouver, said:

Rum runners, gunmen, thugs, and all the parasites which thrive on the miasma of the underworld of the Pacific coast are fostered by the policy now in force. Calculations show that bootleggers in this Province handle as much liquor as the government stores.

Hon. H. H. Stevens, a public official, said:

Never in the history of this country was bootlegging comparable in magnitude and murderous results to what it is to-day.

Now, Mr. President, let us take a description of the liquor depot in Canada.

The Montreal warehouse of the Quebec Liquor Commission contains 9 acres of floor space and is full of vats, tuns, and hogsheads of alcoholic drinks from its topmost floor to the cold basement underground, where wines are kept. Two large rooms of this building are used for storing the seized wet goods and stills that are constantly being taken from Montreal bootleggers, smugglers, and proprietors of blind pigs.

There is not a problem involved in the situation in the United States that is not involved under the system of government control of liquor in Canada. They have the same bootlegger to contend with, the blind pig, the poisoning of liquor, and all the corrupting influences that we have in the United States.

Let me quote from another source. In the Montreal Star I find the following headlines:

Innocent girls lured into dens.

And again:

Dens of iniquity flourishing here must go.

These are places, so the report shows, where liquor is sold either legally or illegally.

Attorney General Craig recently said:

Seventy-five per cent of the troubles of law enforcement are now due to the illicit sale of beer and most of that is due to the brewers that furnish the supplies and abuse the privileges granted to them under the government liquor control act.

Rev. Father Coyle, of St. Mary's Cathedral at Kingston is quoted as saying:

It is appalling the extent to which drinking is indulged in by young men, even boys of 'teen age. The drinking habit has reached an unbelievable stage.

There is no end to the story. They are having the same fight under government control that we are having under prohibition, and that is, to restrain those who never propose to be restrained by any law.

I said in the beginning that this is not a fight of 10 days or 10 years. Neither, in my judgment, are the evils which accompany our effort peculiar to the method which we have employed. It does not make any difference how we shall undertake to deal with it—we shall have the same evils to contend with.

The Senator from Missouri, with his usual candor, said that he was in favor of going back to State rights; that he was in favor of giving this question over to the control of the States. Of course, Mr. President, that means the saloon. I do not believe the Senator from Missouri believes in the saloon; I do not believe anybody any longer believes in the saloon.

Let me digress long enough to say that while we have for many years been disposed to jeer at the temperance reformers, at those who are advocating prohibition, I think they have accomplished one thing: They have gotten rid of the saloon. I do not think anyone wants to go back to the saloon. That is one monument to those who were spoken of so long as cranks, as fanatics. They have convinced the American people that the saloon is intolerable; that it is a cancer upon the body politic; that it can not be tolerated; and no one, I presume, wants to go back to it. However, Mr. President, would the temperance reformers have ever closed the saloon by moral suasion? Good as they were, and noble as were their purposes, effective as they were in their appeal for needed reform, how long would it have taken the temperance reformer to have closed one saloon by moral suasion, by appeal to the moral law?

We had to invoke the law somewhere in order to incorporate and crystallize the effect of the work of these people for 75 years. The moral influence and the moral suasion and the preaching had their place, and let them never be abandoned; but there must be something more, and that is the law and the authority of the Government back of the law. That finally resulted in the destruction of the saloon, and, in my opinion, if we go back to the States we shall inevitably go back to the saloon in some of the States; when we go back to the saloon in some of the States the result will be that we will go in all the States.

Mr. President, I live in a State which was bone dry according to law before the eighteenth amendment was adopted, but there was no way by which the people of Idaho could protect themselves from those States which were not dry. The people who are now urging their belief in State rights—I am not speaking now of individuals, but of the liquor interests—in no sense respected the right of Idaho to be dry. They shipped their wet goods into the State over the border, established their saloons within 5 feet of the border, and supplied the State in a way that the State was powerless to prevent. State rights was then not so sacred in the eyes of the liquor interests as it is to-day.

It is true that the able Senator from Missouri secured the adoption here of an amendment to a bill which provided that when liquor was shipped into a State it became subject to the control of the laws of the State. By a majority of the Supreme Court that provision of the law was upheld, but the court also held that while one could not ship liquor into the State there was no power to prevent one from shipping it across the State, and we discovered that when the liquor started it never got across. It was impossible to enforce the law with all the States whose people were engaged in the liquor business undertaking to break it down.

Suppose we should let it go back to the States, and suppose the State of Missouri adopted the old system, how should we protect the border States? We should have to have spies; we should have to have policemen; we should have to have the militia to protect the four borders of the States if we expected the law not to be violated by those who intended to have liquor cross the State line. There is no more reason to believe that they will respect the borders of the State of Idaho than that they will respect the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, do what we will and try as we may, we have these evils to contend with. They are a part of any effort to undertake to control or deal with the liquor problem, and I had rather undertake to deal with it by the Government of the United States having to protect only the borders of the United States than having 48 States undertake to control four times 48 boundary lines.

The Senator from Missouri referred to the awful condition with reference to the use of narcotics. He is quite right; it is one of the most alarming situations with which we have to deal; but has not the man who wants a narcotic the right to have it? If we have no right to deny a man the right to have liquor, what right have we to deny him the right to take narcotics? One may be more dangerous than the other, but the question of individual liberty, of individual right, to my mind, is precisely the same. But we do deny it, and we deny it upon the theory that when an individual indulges in a practice which is harmful to the community or to those who are dependent upon him, it becomes a subject for the consideration of the public, and the public has the right to determine what the rule shall be.

I noticed the other day that the Prince of Wales, almost on the point of becoming the ruler of his Kingdom, though fortunately the exigency passed, concluded to go out and visit the poor of England. He was astounded at the condition which he found among his people; he was moved to pathos when he found 11 and 12 people, men, women, and children, boys and girls, huddled in one common room, sleeping together like so many swine, with all the finer things of life driven out. It shocked the Prince. I read in a newspaper that while he was on his visit there came home a father with 17 cents in his pocket. When asked where the other part of the 50 cents was which he had earned for the day, he stated that he had left it at the grog shop. Do you tell me, Mr. President, that Government has no duty and no power to protect the hungry children who were waiting for the 50 cents to supply the food for which their pallid lips were pleading? In a republic whatever the community determines is essential to the public welfare binds you and binds me during that time. If we do not believe in that rule, we do not believe in a democracy.

The Senator from Missouri was of the opinion that the use of narcotics had increased since prohibition. I can not dispute that; I have not examined the figures. I only know that in England, where there is no control of the liquor traffic, the use of narcotics is sweeping forward the same as it is in this country. I only know that Canada has the same problem to deal with. I rather suspect that if the Senator will take into consideration population, the population of the United States of 120,000,000 and the population of England and the population of Canada, he will find that the increase in the use of narcotics in those countries has kept pace with that in the United States. At any rate, it is going forward in those countries at such a rapid pace that it is alarming to all the people who take concern of the public welfare.

What shall we do about the liquor traffic? Possibly we can not prevent it entirely; possibly we can not ever prevent the use of alcoholic drinks altogether, but shall we continue the effort or shall we surrender in the fight? So far as I am concerned, Mr. President, so long as it is written in the Constitution of the United States that the sale of intoxicating liquors is injurious to the public welfare, and that declaration embodies the policy of the people, I propose in every way that is reasonable and fair to undertake to maintain that Constitution. Let us all combine in that effort. The Senator from Missouri will never see the day, I will never see the day when the eighteenth amendment is out of the Constitution of the United States. In the meantime, using our influence, our moral leadership, and our public office as Senators and citizens, let us see to it that it is enforced in so far as it is possible for human ingenuity to enforce it. Let us maintain it and support it with the fervor and the devotion that we would support and maintain the sacred principles upon which all free governments rest.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senate has listened to perhaps the ablest presentation of the side opposed to prohibition that it has listened to in a long time; and it has listened to perhaps the ablest speech, or one of the ablest, that has been delivered in this body presenting the side of the prohibition forces.

I am astounded at the position taken by some upon this question in the face of the recent election. This issue was plainly presented. The whisky forces and rum-running element were completely routed. The people had a fine opportunity to decide just what they would do. There was a candidate running who proposed to sustain the Constitution, and there was one running who intended to repeal the eighteenth amendment if he could, and who had already stricken down the law-enforcement agencies of New York State. That State had a law that supported the eighteenth amendment, and Governor Smith had it repealed. The issue was clearly cut and presented in this country last November.

What a great evangelist the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]—one of the ablest Senators who has been in this body in a long time—would have made. When he was describing how they used to go and single out the boy who was given to strong drink and pray over him and get him to take the pledge, how he reminded me of a great evangelist. But before he had gone very far the Senator said, "We have abandoned the Bible in this fight." That can not be true, Mr. President, because the Bible says:

> Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging, and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

The Bible also says:

> No drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of God.

So the people of the United States, in putting the eighteenth amendment in the Constitution, are following out the teachings of the Bible.

Mr. President, I recall the days of the barroom. I recall when the barroom element was in power politically. I recall when no man running for local office or high office of any kind could be elected without a tremendous struggle unless he had the support of the barroom element. I wonder if the Senator from Missouri and those who sympathize with him would like to go back and lodge political power in the hands of that element that controlled elections in the days gone by rather than to have this power lodged in the moral forces of the country, led by Christian ministers and by Christian men and women, fathers and mothers, who would protect their children from the ruin that the barrooms wrought?

The Senator tells us about mothers giving their daughters whisky, supplying them with whisky to take to parties. I must say, Mr. President, that the Senator's experience is different from mine. I do not know a single mother in Alabama who would arm her daughter with a flask of whisky when she is going to a party. I do not know a mother in my State who would give her whisky to drink unless it was used as medicine. There may be some mothers in this country who will do that, but, if so, they are very, very few.

Who can take the position that a man, if he wants whisky, is entitled to drink it to his heart's content? No longer than six weeks ago in this city a man who had been drinking for two weeks locked the door of his home and killed his fine wife and children and then blew out his own brains. Did he have a right to do the thing that got him into that condition? Did he have a right to take whisky and drink it because he wanted to satisfy his thirst until he became crazed, so that he would murder his own companion and the mother of his children and then kill himself? That is personal liberty with a vengeance.

Mr. President, I recall an incident that Sam Jones used to tell about in the old barroom days. A man had rented some rooms above a barroom. He had a wife and two children, a boy of 17 and a daughter of 19. He went back home and told his wife that he had rented these rooms above the barroom. She looked at him and said, "John, have you lost your mind?"

He said, "No. I am going to have the pool room in connection with the barroom, and I will make a bushel of money." She said, "John, would you take me into a place like that to live above a barroom and a pool room?" He said, "Well, what of it?" "Would you take our daughter Mary, a 19-year-old girl, and our son John, and put us up there to live over that barroom that you might make money out of a pool room, that you might catch the drunks who had come in there to spend their money in riotous living and get part of it by their indulgences in the pool room? You surely have forgotten that when you married me you promised to love, cherish, and protect me; and now you want to take me and our son and daughter into a place like that! John, I am astounded!"

He said, "I have made the deal, and you are going." She said, "I am not going. I would not take my daughter into such a dive as that, and I would not take our boy. I will not do it." He said, "But you will; and I am making arrangements to move to-day." He went off, and when he came back she was gone. He thought he knew where she was. He went down and found her at her father's home with her daughter and her son. He told the old man that he had come after his wife and children. The father said, "But she does not want to go. The children do not want to go. You ought not to want her to go, and I am not going to let her go. She can have a home here with me." He said, "Then that ends the matter; I will go myself"; and he went; and in about six weeks they brought the news to her one night that he was killed in a drunken row in the barroom right under the place where he had provided for her and her son and daughter to live.

Mr. President, I have witnessed the evil effects of the barroom in my State. I told the Senate one day about the conditions in Birmingham—how the laboring men used to come in on Saturday night with their pay checks in their pockets, and how the barrooms got them, and how they got in the lockups, and how their wives and children waited and watched all night for father and husband to return with something to buy food for them. I told you about a parade in the city of Birmingham, where the wives and children of the laboring men paraded in a drive against the barrooms of that city, and how the people voted out the barroom, and how since that time stores have been built where the barrooms stood, and these men are providing well for their families. They are sober men; their wives and children are happy; they are owning their homes; they are educating their children. These are some of the fruits of prohibition. But we have a foreign element in this country, and more of it coming and being smuggled in every year, violating our law, mocking our statutes, and defying our courts; and they have determined to repeal the eighteenth amendment. The question is, Will the American idea prevail or will this European idea be set up in its stead?

Oh, it is a glorious thing for them to talk about returning to the "good old days." I remember a story I read about a great parade. The wholesale whisky dealers were up in front, driving six big iron-gray horses. The dealers had on their stovepipe hats and diamonds were flashing in their bosoms, and the horses were prancing down the street as their banners were flying. Following after them were the retail liquor dealers, the barroom men, driving four horses to each vehicle; and those men had their banners flying, and their high hats on, and back of them were a few on horseback—the whisky drummers—and they were prosperous-looking fellows. Then back of them were a miserable, motley herd, woe-begone, ill-kept human beings, called the consumers, without God and without hope in the world. And such as they were the products of the barroom in every community in those so-called "good old barroom days."

Go into the towns where the barrooms flourished and find what happened there. The barroom man owned more dwellings in that town than anybody else in it. How did he come to own them? The men who had fed their substance into these hell holes had spent their money and mortgaged their homes, and the barroom man had gotten them; and then where was the wife, that bright, vivacious, charming girl who, in his better and brighter days, stood beside the man at the altar place when he promised her in the presence of God that he would love, cherish, and protect her? Where were the children with whom God had blessed their home? Gone—they all were gone. And out yonder under a little mound of earth in the cemetery the head of the family slept in a drunkard's grave; and she and her children struggling along as best they could, living on the charity of the community. This is the fruit of the damnable barroom business that some would have brought back to our country.

I do not know but that this is part of a well-laid plan and program to start a new drive for control of the Government in 1932. I think it is. I think we will have to meet these bold and brazen liquor forces again in 1932. They are not going to give up. They are making their millions. Of course no law can be enforced entirely. I have never admitted, Mr. President—and I do not admit now—that prohibition law enforcement is a farce. It is not. The law is fairly well enforced in my State. Of course it is not absolutely enforced. That is almost impossible anywhere.

We all know that it is difficult to strictly enforce any law. We do not enforce to the letter any law that is on the statute books, not one. They are being violated all the time. But because they are violated by a few people who set themselves up as persons who defy the law, that is no reason why the law should be repealed. We are not going back to the old barroom days. The American people are determined upon that question.

It is said that we deprive people of their drink. This Federal law does not deprive a man of whisky except for beverage purposes. The eighteenth amendment does not prevent one from getting a doctor's prescription. Liquor can be used as medicine. People can obtain it now where the States permit it. But they say because a few fellows go out and insist on guzzling up this "blind-tiger" stuff, fermented juice of some kind, the law must be repealed.

What is the difference? If a man wants to go to hell in a hurry, we may not be able to keep him from doing it. But we can at least remove the temptation from him. In my State I know men who used to drink whisky and thought they had to have it, and when the barrooms were put out they quit drinking it, and they have not touched it to this day. They said they were astounded that they could get along so well without it. They did not think they could and they were glad the barrooms were put out of their way.

So there are those who do like the prohibition law. As a result of it hundreds of thousands of boys are growing to manhood who never touch a drop. Hundreds of thousands of girls are growing to womanhood who never touch a drop. Unfortunately there are some who do; but the difference in that phase of the problem is this: In the old days, when they drank it and it destroyed them, they said, "You are responsible, because you licensed it. You permitted it to exist." Now if they destroy themselves they must say, "I am violating the law to do this hurtful thing and the thorns that I reap are of the tree that I have planted. They have torn me, and I bleed. I did it myself."

O Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri told us about how many distilleries were operating. A good many of them are no doubt operating, and they will be operating perhaps as long as time lasts; as long as some fellow yearns for fermented juice in his "innards" there will be somebody to make it.

Oh, yes; there was an old negro in my State who was being tried for running a still. The judge said, "Come around." Old Uncle Joshua walked around. The judge said, "What is your name?" He said, "My name is Joshua." "Ah," said the judge, "you are the man that made the sun stand still." The old negro said, "No, sah; I am the man that made the moonshine." [Laughter.]

They are doing that. Of course they will make the moonshine. They will resort to all sorts of things to get liquor, and some of them have been right smooth in their tactics. When whisky went out of New Orleans, one of the smoothest schemes I ever heard about was that of a bright Mississippian who went to New Orleans and got a truck load of liquor. He started back to Mississippi. The officers of the law were on the lookout for those who were transporting whisky into the State, so just before the truck got to the Mississippi line the men guarding it put a negro boy they had with them in handcuffs, they just handcuffed him; and one of them drove the truck and the other sat up by the negro with a pistol in his hand. When they drove up into the first town with all that load of liquor there were the officers of the law. They said, "Hello! What's this?" They said, "We've got him all right. We are taking him in." The negro said, "I ain't done nothing." One of them said, "Well, you can tell that to the judge," and the officers let them pass on. When they got to where they were going they slipped the handcuffs off the negro boy and he helped put the whisky in the cellar, and these gentlemen went their way. They did that but once. The officers got on to it, and they caught the others who tried to do it.

Of course, there are ways of evading the law, and many of those opposed to it will get around the law. But conditions have improved vastly amongst the masses of the people all over this Nation. There are places where violation is very open and notorious. We probably will never be able to enforce the law there as it should be enforced.

Go follow the trail of this serpent. Back in the old days when the barrooms were in vogue, any man who decried the barroom traffic, who threatened to put it down, was marked by the barroom men for political slaughter. They went after him. That is not all. They controlled the police force, or a large portion of it, in every town where they existed. And that is not all. A policeman would not go into a barroom and interfere unless they sent for him. That shows what complete control they had in politics. A man could not be elected mayor of a town in many places unless the barroom interests were back of him.

What happened? Men and women fell down on their knees at night and prayed to God to give them strength to drive this evil out which was dragging to ruin their sons and the men who had married their daughters. God answered their prayers, and they drove this evil out. The people of the Union drove it out, and every now and then this rum-running interest springs up and demands a repeal of the eighteenth amendment and a repeal of the Volstead Act.

I say, as the Senator from Idaho said, that I do not know what is the best solution of this problem. I know that the situation has improved under the present plan; I do not care who says to the contrary. It has blessed people who needed to be blessed by it. The people who had their substance taken from them, and fed into these hell holes, the barrooms, are now getting that substance in their homes, and it is spreading itself out in fine, robust children, and in happy homes, and in peaceful, prosperous communities.

A sober people we have. Now the question is, Are we going to abandon a great moral position that has blessed and will continue to bless 115,000,000 people out of a hundred and twenty million people because about five million want it repealed?

Mr. President, I for one am not in favor of yielding to that sort of argument. I wish all of you could have heard a sermon that Billy Sunday preached about a man who passed up the road in his wagon. He was hauling logs. Billy said to him, "What are you doing there?" He said, "I am hauling logs to the sawmill." He said, "Good for you. That is fine. You are going to saw those logs into planks and scantlings, you are going to use those planks and scantlings to build homes for the people. Good for you. Pass on."

Another man came along who was hauling brick. He said, "What are you going to do with those brick?" He answered, "Build chimneys in the homes to be built with that lumber." Billy said, "Fine for you."

Another one was coming along hauling shingles. He said, "What are you going to do with those shingles?" He said, "Cover the homes of the people where the children of the Republic are to be reared." "Good for you."

Another one came along hauling hops and stuff to be made into liquor. He said, "What are you doing?" He said, "I am taking this over to a still where I am going to have it made into whisky." Then Billy Sunday said, "You miserable wretch. You are preparing to make the stuff that will destroy the happiness of the homes of this community. Pray God to forgive you and go feed it to the swine."

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has given a long array of figures here. He told about what had been done, what could be done, how whisky could be made, and I saw several old fellows up in the gallery whose mouths were watering when he was telling about how you could take a little bran and a little fermented stuff of various kinds and a kettle and make whisky. One old fellow back there in the gallery was listening with his pencil and book in hand, and another one tried to talk to him, and he said, "Do not talk to me; I want to get that recipe." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, we can not afford to legislate to satisfy the thirst of anybody. I thought, as the Senator from Missouri was describing that situation, of an old man in my State who went out to hear a prohibition sermon. He heard it, but he did not know he was going to hear it. The preacher happened to be preaching a prohibition sermon that day. Prohibition had just gone into effect a little while before. The preacher took this text:

A dryness descended upon the earth and abode there.

He repeated it:

A dryness descended upon the earth and abode there.

Two or three old fellows groaned mournfully. Then the preacher said, "I recall, my brethren, when you used to be able to get it at the crossroads; you could get it in the villages and towns, and get it in the cities. I remember when they used to go by in droves after the vile stuff. They used to bring it back in jugs and kegs and bottles. I have known them," he said, "to get their neighbors up after midnight to swig that evil stuff. Wicked days of the liquor traffic. But those days have gone. There is dryness at the crossroads. There is dryness in the villages and towns and dryness in the cities." He said, "Oh, my brethren, what would you do in this blessed day of prohibition if some vile wretch should intrude himself in upon your veranda after midnight and knock on your door and you say, 'Who comes there?' and he should say, 'A friend with a bottle.' What would you say to the vile wretch now?" Old Uncle Johnnie sat back there until his mouth was watering and said, "By golly, I would tell him to advance with the cork out." [Laughter.] That is the way the Senator from Missouri had these old fellows sitting in the galleries feeling. They were ready for them to advance with the cork out.

Mr. President, it is better for our country to teach the boys who are coming on, who are to be the men who will control this country after a while, to be sober, to hate that stuff, to be afraid to drink moonshine whisky, to refuse to patronize the blind tiger and the bootlegger, preaching a crusade against it, rather than stand in the Senate and appeal to people who represent the moral forces of America to go back and surrender because a foreign element creeping into our country and undermining it as far as they can want rum sold again and the old barroom system restored. We are not going to do it. We are going to protect the homes of America, protect the young men and the young women of our country, remove from them every temptation we possibly can. That is the duty of the Senate, and that is the duty of American citizens to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Under the unanimous-consent agreement after this hour, the hour of 4 o'clock, debate upon the bill is limited to 10 minutes, and debate is limited to 10 minutes upon any amendment proposed thereto.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may I ask what is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is the amendment offered by the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to the first committee amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought that was so. I desire to withdraw the amendment. It is not proposed to be inserted at the appropriate place in the bill if it should be inserted at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment will be withdrawn. The question now is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, in the course of this debate prohibition has been pronounced a crime. Let us observe the practical effect of this so-called crime upon the United States. Roger W. Babson, one of the country's most prominent statisticians, one of its foremost students of economic affairs, says in a recent review of conditions in this Nation, a review which appeared in the Washington Post of December 30, 1928, that prohibition saves our country $2,000,000,000 a year; that the great growth of business coming through the installment plan and other innovations has largely been caused by the improved credit of wage earners due to prohibition; that our people are unquestionably living longer and possessing better health because of it; that juvenile delinquency has decreased; that drug addiction is less; that real estate values have increased; that saving-banks deposits are greater in number; that insurance policies have multiplied; that these are only a few of the benefits of prohibition which impress themselves on the economist and student of business conditions. Another economic authority, Dr. Irving Fisher, has estimated the saving to the country through prohibition to be six billions a year.

Mr. President, when national prohibition came in 1920 there were about 10,000,000 savings accounts in the United States. Now there are a little more than 53,000,000.

When national prohibition came in 1920 the amount of savings in the banks was a little more than eleven and a half billion dollars. Now it is almost twenty-eight and a half billion.

In 1917, the last unrestricted wet year, a little more than $213,000,000 in life insurance was issued.

Now the amount of new life insurance is more than seven times that much every month.

The total resources of building and loan associations in 1917 amounted to a little more than one and three-quarters of a billion dollars. Now they are in excess of seven billion.

If drinking were as universal as has been pictured in this debate and the earnings of the masses were being diverted as extensively as has been claimed this vast economic improvement would be impossible.

Let us examine the contention that enforcement is ineffective.

In the early years of national prohibition large amounts of whisky were obtained from Government warehouses by thefts, forged permits, and permits secured through various forms of fraud. This condition has virtually ceased.

In the first year of national prohibition probably 9,000,000 gallons of intoxicating liquor were withdrawn on account of the misuse of prescriptions. This amount has been reduced to a small portion of the total mentioned.

Proprietary medicines easily drinkable, alcoholic tonics, and other preparations, intended to serve as substitutes for intoxicating liquors prohibited by law, have been practically eliminated by a compulsory change of formulas or by refusal of permits for the alcohol necessary in the formation of these substitutes.

Large volumes of liquor were once diverted from shipments from British possessions through the United States to fictitious consignees. This has been stopped by a Supreme Court decision that such shipments could not be made.

Smuggling of liquor from nations across the seas has largely ceased. Vessels composing the ill-famed rum row have been dispersed and rum row is a thing of the past.

By virtue of new treaties with foreign nations our officers now have power to search suspected foreign vessels an hour's travel from our coasts. With this extended authority and an increased personnel the rum runners have been scattered and defeated. Their operations are more difficult, perilous, and on a smaller scale now than ever.

Smuggling across our northern and southern boundaries has been reduced through treaties with Canada and Mexico.

When warehouse supplies in this country and from other countries became unavailable, so far as the bulk of the illicit traffic was concerned, the bootleggers turned to industrial alcohol.

At one time they succeeded in securing 6,000,000 gallons in a single year—enough to make about 200,000,000 half pints of bootleg whisky. The Government chemists worked out new formulas for denaturants, making it far more difficult to redistill industrial alcohol into whisky. The control of industrial alcohol was transferred from the Internal Revenue Bureau to prohibition officials, who had better facilities for the investigation of applicants for alcohol permits. As a result the diversion of industrial alcohol into bootleg channels has been substantially lessened, and better results are steadily being secured by our enforcement officers.

It is true that the number of captured stills seems huge. But an outfit is called a still whether it produces 1 gallon, 5 gallons, 10 gallons, or a thousand gallons. I doubt whether the total annual output of these captured stills would equal the regular product of any one of a number of the larger distilleries operating before national prohibition went into effect.

The illicit stills of to-day are as a rule of small size, and are hidden in attics, cellars, caves, and woods. Many, probably most, of those seized either had not gotten into operation or had been in operation but a short while.

Recently I placed in the RECORD a statement showing that our enforcement officials are making creditable records, handicapped as they are by inadequate penalties for the larger offenses and offenders.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] complained in one breath of the number of arrests and convictions and of the number of people who have been placed in jails and penitentiaries under the prohibition laws and in another asserted that prohibition was not being enforced. He tells us at one time that intoxicating liquor is practically everywhere obtainable, and then states that on account of the shortage in supply of such liquor the consumption of narcotics is rapidly increasing. These statements can not be harmonized.

Evidently, Mr. President, when more stringent penalties are added and larger appropriations are accorded for the various phases of enforcement prohibition laws will make greater progress than ever before toward complete and satisfactory administration.

The American people will not permit a lawless minority or a piratical traffic permanently to defy the Consititution and to evade the law.

near Carrollton, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed to the bill by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] whether or not the bill proposes to abolish the punishment prescribed in the original act for first and second offenses? It seems to me, I may say to the Senator, that the bill is confusing as it stands.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator also refer to section 2?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes. I see that section 2 merely provides that—

This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty now provided by the said national prohibition act.

Mr. JONES. That is a committee amendment, and I ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] to explain it to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. The national prohibition act provides, for instance, the penalty for a first offense. It reads:

Any person who manufactures or sells liquor in violation of this title shall for a first offense be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding six months, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200 nor more than $2,000 and be imprisoned not less than one month nor more than five years.

This bill simply provides:

That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, * * * the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

That is the maximum penalty, of course. Then section 2 provides:

SEC. 2. This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty now provided by the said national prohibition act.

The minimum penalty is undoubtedly fixed for the first offense, but this language possibly might be construed to refer also to the minimum penalty for the second offense. That is not strictly a minimum penalty, because the minimum penalty is the penalty for the first offense. Therefore the courts would have great difficulty in construing this proposed act if it should pass as it stands.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield, because I am trying to find out what the bill means.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None the less, the Senator from Georgia was recognized under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. GEORGE. For 10 minutes?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. For 10 minutes on the amendment and 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Chair will be so kind as to call my attention to the expiration of my first 10 minutes, I shall yield to the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will do so.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I am slightly embarrassed because there was some confusion in the Chamber when the Senator from Georgia first began speaking, and I did not hear all that he said. I understand, however, that he was inquiring as to the purpose of the committee amendment to be found in section 2 on page 2 of the bill. That section provides:

This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty now provided by the said national prohibition act.

Mr. GEORGE. My question, Mr. President, I will state again for the benefit of the Senator from Oregon, is, Would not this proposed act repeal the penalty prescribed for a second offense?

Mr. STEIWER. I think if this bill should become a law it would repeal the additional penalties for the second offense, unless some saving language were incorporated in its provisions. The phrase "minimum penalty" might have been unwisely employed, but the committee meant by "minimum penalty" the minimum penalty provided in the case of subsequent offenses. It was thought by some that whatever the maximum penalty might be, in case of subsequent convictions there would be some value in preserving the present minimum penalties which are provided in the law.

I know of no authority that would justify the Senator from Georgia in the conclusion that the minimum penalty would be construed as meaning the penalty for a first offense merely because that penalty is less than that prescribed for a second offense. The minimum penalty in those cases where a range of penalties is provided is the penalty below which a judge can not go. It was upon that theory at least that the committee added the proposed amendment to section 2. Does that answer the question of the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator if his idea is that the penalties for first and second offenses are preserved in this bill? I understand that to be the case.

Mr. STEIWER. Yes; so far as the imposition of the minimum penalty is concerned; otherwise not.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that it seems to me the courts can not give this act any other construction than that the distinction between first and second offenses is wiped out; that the minimum penalty is the penalty fixed for the first offense, and that the penalties may go up as high as $10,000 fine or imprisonment for as long as five years, or both, in the discretion of the court. The court would not be able to enforce the punishment prescribed in the original act for the second offense. Of course, the court would have the power to fix the penalty anywhere between the minimum and the maximum provided by law, as amended, for any offender, but I think this bill would wipe out the penalty for the second offense. If it is the purpose to retain that distinction in the law it seems to me that section 2 ought to be amended so as to provide:

This act shall not repeal nor eliminate the minimum penalty now provided by said national prohibition act, nor effect or change the minimum penalty for second offenses.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator speak a little louder. We could not hear his last remark.

Mr. GEORGE. I was suggesting to the Senator from Washington that if it was desired by the proponents of the bill to retain the minimum fixed for a second offense, which penalty, of course, is greater than the minimum penalty for the first offense, it seems to me that section 2 of the act ought to be amended.

Mr. NORRIS. In what way?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know that the Senator had in mind to make any distinction between first and second offenses.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the Senator that the second amendment is an amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee of which I am not a member, and so I am leaving it to members of that committee to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand. Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss the pending measure. What I wanted was to ascertain what the authors of the bill had in mind; that is, whether they meant to retain the minimum punishment for a second offense and whether they also wished to distinguish between first and second offenses under the law as it is proposed to be amended.

Mr. JONES. I did not expect to distinguish between them.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator—and I could not hear all he said—he fears that the adoption by the Senate of the amendment to section 2 would in effect wipe out the minimum penalty now provided by law in the case of second offenses.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir. I think the section would do that as it stands. That is the thought I am bringing to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has suggested that the section ought to be amended. I do not think that was the idea in reporting the amendment, and I myself do not see why it would do what the Senator suggests. It seems to me perfectly plain that section 2 does not eliminate the minimum penalty provided for a second offense in the law as it stands. I do not think that heretofore it occurred to anybody that it would do so. If it would do that, then it certainly does need amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. By reference to the first section of the bill it will be found that it provides—

That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense—

"For each offense"—not two different penalties for the same offense merely because one happens to be a first offense and the other a second offense.

Mr. NORRIS. But they are distinguished in the law as it stands now. For instance, section 29 provides:

SEC. 29. Any person who manufactures or sells liquor in violation of this title shall for a first offense be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not exceeding six months, and for a second or subsequent offense shall be fined not less than $200.

It was not the idea, I think, in proposing this amendment that that $200 fine, for instance, should be eliminated. If it is eliminated, of course section 2 ought to be amended; there is no doubt about that; I think the Senator from Georgia suggested an amendment. Will he state what it was?

Mr. GEORGE. I want the Senator from Nebraska to understand that what I asked was whether it was the purpose to eliminate the minimum penalty for a second offense?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. At least I do not think that was the purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I believe that the bill should be amended if it is the purpose to retain it.

Mr. NORRIS. We can either amend the committee amendment or disagree to it. My idea is that a first offense and a second offense each has a minimum penalty, and that by the addition of section 2 we will not interfere with it.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be made clearer if we bear in mind the fact that section 2 completely obliterates all distinction between first and second offenses, and, of course, any amendment that follows must be harmonized with that fact.

Mr. NORRIS. I myself do not see any conflict between the two. Other Senators seem to think there is..

Mr. BRUCE. As I read the amendment of the committee, its effect is to wipe out all distinctions between first and second offenses; and therefore there is nothing but first offenses for the amendment to apply to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think that undoubtedly would be the construction given to the act by the court if we should pass it as it stands; and I therefore suggest this amendment in section 2, after the word "penalty," in line 2:

for the first or any subsequent offense—

So that that section would read:

This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty for the first or any subsequent offense now provided by the said national prohibition act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Georgia whether he does not think the situation is entirely taken care of by the use of the word "minimum"?

This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty now provided by the said national prohibition act.

That is to say, the act provides a certain penalty, giving a minimum and a maximum penalty for a second offense. The maximum penalty in that provision may be affected by this amendment. There may be a heavier maximum penalty, but the minimum penalty provided for a second offense is not disturbed; so that the court would not be at liberty to fix a penalty of $5 here if the penalty for a second offense is $100. The minimum penalty for a second offense is left, but the maximum is increased. That was the idea the committee had in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, while I do not agree with the several Senators who have expressed the opinion that this amendment would obliterate all subsequent penalties for subsequent offenses, there is certainly no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Georgia, and that undoubtedly will clarify it. Therefore I shall be glad, so far as I am concerned, to see that amendment agreed to. There seems to be a disagreement, and that will relieve the matter of any doubt.

Mr. GEORGE and Mr. STEIWER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I want to make just one brief statement, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. STEIWER. Will the Senator yield for just one observation?

Mr. NORRIS. I have already yielded to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I think the whole matter is clear when we consider that the bill as originally drawn did not have in mind any distinction between first and second offenses. It undertook to do one thing, and one thing only, to wit, increase the maximum punishment for offenses under the national prohibition act. The preservation of minimum punishment was the thought of the committee. It came in as a committee amendment, and in my judgment that committee amendment does not preserve anything more than the minimum penalty fixed for a particular offense—that is, a particular crime. That is what is meant by the word "offense" here in the prohibition act.

Had this bill been passed as it went to the committee originally, it would have wiped out all minimum punishment—that is, the enumeration of a minimum punishment—and it would have simply increased the maximum punishment up to $10,000 or imprisonment for five years.

Mr. NORRIS. I suggest that the Senator from Georgia offer his amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I did offer it.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, that is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment proposed by the committee found on page 1, in lines 3 and 4.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator from Georgia offers an amendment to that.

Mr. GEORGE. I move to amend that amendment by inserting in line 2, after the word——

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, I am mistaken.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, let me make a suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the situation correctly. The amendment which the Senator from Georgia has in mind should be offered when we come to the amendment on page 2.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Chair is right, without any doubt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee on page 1, in lines 3 and 4.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask that the clerk read a short article in my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina being recognized, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WHY ENFORCEMENT FAILS

By Horace C. Carlisle

Prohibition is a failure—
  Its enforcement is a joke—
Just because its own supporters
  Will not wear its galling yoke;
And since Congress fears the issue,
  Which is easier shunned than met,
In both Houses, they continue
  "Voting dry and drinking wet."

How we need a Patrick Henry
  With the nerve to introduce,
Unreserved, a resolution—
  With no loopholes for excuse—
Forcing every drinking Member
  To explain, on oath, the fact
Of his every violation
  Of the famous Volstead Act!

With one hand upon the Bible,
  And the other lifted toward
God for mercy, whom his actions
  Have apparently ignored,
He should publicly be questioned,
  And compelled to show just cause
For his criminal evasion
  Of the prohibition laws.

Prohibition can't prohibit 'Till the House and Senate both
Rid themselves of every Member
  That now violates his oath
For the sake of drinking liquor,
  Or to gratify his friends,
On whom his return to Congress
  Most distressingly depends.

Congress can't enforce enforcement
  When she sees with her own eyes
That this Volstead prohibition
  Is an evil in disguise;
For she knows that if enforcement
  Should, impartially, prevail
There are "drys" in both the Houses
  Who'd be serving time in jail.

If it only had been Volstead,
  And not Jesus, the Divine,
Those six jars of water never
  Would have been made into wine
When the wedding guests at Cana
  Had exhausted their supply—
Unless he had sneaked off somewhere
  And distilled it on the sly.

If the antiliquor leaguers—
  By their arid Volstead stirred—
Rather than the inspired writers,
  Had devised the Sacred Word,
There would be no admonition
  For a man, infirm, to take
Just a little wine at bedtime
  For his craving stomach's sake.

Prohibition—as it's practiced—
  Ought to fully satisfy
Every man in either faction,
  Be he wet or be he dry;
For the drys have prohibition—
  Heaven's answer to their prayer—
And the wets still have their liquor
  In abundance everywhere.

If the Congress of the country
  Is afraid to draw the line
'Twixt her weak-kneed dry teetotalers
  And her "drys" who drink their wine,
Then the dry eighteenth amendment,
  Weakened by the Volstead Act—
Folly's most expensive failure—
  Is a joke and not a fact.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Was that piece of cheap doggerel intended to pass as poetry?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer the inquiry.

Mr. BLEASE. I do not know whether it is poetry or not, but I know it is God Almighty's truth. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee on page 1, lines 3 and 4.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I think there is no controversy concerning this matter; but possibly I should observe, for the benefit of those who may be interested, that the committee thought it well to put in the proposed amendment in lines 3 and 4 by reason of the fact that in the law now there are certain similar quasi-civil penalties based chiefly upon violations of injunctions and matters growing out of the nuisance features prescribed by the act. I think no one on the committee was desirous of disturbing those penalties; and the language found in lines 3 and 4 was inserted merely for the purpose of excluding those penalties from the operation of the present bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, the hour is late, and I hope the Senate will adjourn without any further discussion. It is nearly 5 o'clock now.

Mr. JONES. I hope that we may finish the bill to-night.

Mr. BRUCE. It will be impossible.

Mr. JONES. It ought not to be. It ought not to take very long. I shall ask the Senate to stay in session until half past 5, anyway.

Mr. BRUCE. It will be impossible to finish the bill to-night, because there are a great many amendments to it; and of course, each Senator has a right to 10 minutes on the bill and 10 minutes on any amendment.

Mr. President, I was indeed astonished to hear the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] contrast, as he did, the drink conditions which existed in the State of Idaho before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment with the drink conditions which now prevail in that State. A year or so ago I had occasion to call attention to the extent to which drunkenness and violations of the Volstead Act obtained in the State of Idaho.

The facts which I then mentioned were derived from an editorial in the New York Times. I said:

That, in proportion to population, prohibition agents had seized eight times as many distilleries in the State of Idaho as in the State of New York; twenty-seven times as many stills, one hundred times as many still worms, and eight times as many fermenters, and five times as much mash; had, strange to say, seized twice as many boats in Idaho as in New York; and had arrested more than twice as many offenders for violations of the Volstead Act; and that, in proportion to population, arrests for drunkenness in Pocatello, Idaho, had been ten times as numerous as in the city of New York, and in Twin Falls, Idaho, nearly five times as numerous. It was not until I read these figures that I fully understood why "nullification" sits so heavily upon the indignant breast of the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Surely the West can not be such a land of Arcadian purity and temperance as it is fondly imagined to be when Pocatello is tortured with a thirst ten times as exacting as that which distresses such a scarlet woman as the city of New York; and the Snake River and similar insignificant streams in the State of Idaho are the scenes of more nautical confiscations than the waters of the Atlantic Ocean which lave the mighty docks and piers of the city of New York.

In other words, it was the same old story; whenever any Member of this body has flourished in my face a brief in behalf of prohibition I have never had the slightest difficulty in showing, by incontestable facts, that the same scandals and abuses arising out of the practical workings of prohibition which existed in other States existed in his State, too.

The trouble about the Senator from Idaho, if I may say so without disrespect, is that he has not lived up to what he said in the beginning of his speech to-day. He declared that he would be willing to give his assent to the repeal or the modification of the eighteenth amendment, or the Volstead Act, at any time when evidence was brought to his attention that there was a better method of dealing with the drink problem than prohibition. The fact is that I have been a Member of the Senate for some six years, and in all that time the senior Senator from Idaho has been saying substantially that same thing. Yet, notwithstanding the fact that propositions have been repeatedly brought forward in this body looking to some salutary modification of the eighteenth amendment, or the Volstead Act, never once has the Senator from Idaho been induced to cast even a glance of passing condescension at any one of them.

The suggestion has been made that the Volstead Act might be modified so as to provide the people of the United States with the use of a mild nonintoxicating beer, a suggestion which met with the unqualified approval of no less a person than Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, who was, in my opinion, most justly termed yesterday by the Senator from Missouri the best man who has ever headed the Prohibition Department of the Government. General Andrews thought that such a beverage would be of decided aid to prohibition enforcement, but, so far as I know, the Senator from Idaho never even gave a thought to this belief.

Two or three years ago I introduced a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution into the Senate which was in harmony in every respect with what is the prevailing trend of drink reform throughout the world, but, so far as I know, neither did that amendment receive any serious notice from the Senator.

I might enlarge upon what I have just said by further stating that my proposition looking to the modification of the eighteenth amendment was based upon conclusions to which almost every country in the world that has ever tried the experiment of prohibition and abandoned it has been brought by the remorseless necessities of its experience.

My proposed amendment provided for the adoption by the Congress of the United States of what is known as the Quebec system of liquor control—and right here I take issue with the Senator from Idaho when he states that Government supervision of the liquor traffic in the Dominion of Canada has proved a failure. I am not surprised, when such conditions have prevailed in his own State as those that I depicted a few moments ago, that the Senator should have gone up to Canada, a land of comparative temperance, last summer and the summer before. I must say that the Senator would gratify my curiosity, as well as the curiosity of other Members of the Senate, if he would tell us what motive took him to Canada. [Laughter.] His reputation for sobriety is so well established that I am loath to think that his motive was quite the same as that which might have prompted some wicked, reprobate Member of the Senate like myself to go to Canada during the dog days, when a mild, refreshing glass of wine or beer proves so acceptable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The time of the Senator on the amendment has expired. He now has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. The facts with regard to Quebec—and I speak by the book, because for a good many years now I have read most of the annual reports that have emanated from the Quebec Liquor Commission—are that during the first four years, to say nothing of later years, during which the Quebec system of liquor control was in force, arrests for drunkenness in the city of Montreal were reduced about one-half. What is a far more important thing, there was evidence besides of a steady substitution of the use of wine and malt liquors for the use of spirituous liquors.

Very recently testimony to this last social change has been borne by the Montreal Gazette. I am referring now to the Montreal Gazette of Saturday, February 2. In an editorial the newspaper, speaking of a report of the Quebec Liquor Commission which had just been given to the public, said:

No moderate-minded individual would contest the conclusions which are to be drawn from the annual report of the operations of the Quebec Liquor Commission.

I call the attention of the Senate specifically to this:

A retrospect of the past four years shows that whilst sales of wines have increased in that period 100 per cent, the sales of ardent liquors have advanced by only 25 per cent.

What more complete answer could be made than this to the excessive use of hard liquor which the Senator from Idaho sought to bring home to the Dominion of Canada?

So far as the increased output of liquor in that Dominion is concerned, that might readily be attributed to the fact that, in addition to the domestic demand for liquor in Canada itself, there is an enormous foreign demand on the part of the people of the United States. In a recent report Mrs. Willebrandt, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, tells us that in the last three years clearances of liquor from Canada to this country have increased 75 per cent, to say nothing of clandestine exports. It is calculated that every year now 200,000 tourists leave the United States for Canada, and there is every reason to believe that the great majority of these tourists go there for the purpose of gratifying a perfectly natural and legitimate human instinct, which we would all be free to gratify in this country to-day without any impediment but for the madness which produced the adoption of the eighteenth amendment.

Nothing could be more inconsistent than the facts which the Senator from Idaho brought forward with reference to England. First of all, he called attention to the fact that criminality in England is far below the level of criminality in this country, yet in the same breath he spoke of the terrible abuses in the matter of drink which exist in England.

All I have to say is that if English liquor has that sort of repressive effect upon crime, we might very well entertain the feeling about it that Abraham Lincoln entertained about the kind of liquor that Ulysses S. Grant drank. It will be recollected that when somebody complained that General Grant drank too much whisky Lincoln expressed the hope that some of his other less fortunate generals might quaff some of the same kind of whisky. So I say that if this excessive drinking in England to which the Senator referred has the effect of bringing murders in London, for instance, down to only a few murders a year, compared with the frightful prevalence of murder in this country, the sooner we abandon prohibition and begin to drink a little English stuff the better, decidedly, it will be for us.

Some one inquired about the authorship of the pending bill and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] said that he understood that it was drafted by the Department of Justice. No matter by whom it was drafted it was sponsored by the Anti-Saloon League, and that fact, of course, is shown by the communication which has in the last two or three days been addressed to us by Bishop Cannon, Mrs. Boole, and others, asking us to pass it. I hold that paper in my hand. Here we have the signature of Bishop Cannon, the papal head of the southern hillbilly hierarchy. Here, too, is the signature of Mrs. Ella Boole, the head of that organization the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which did such noble work in behalf of temperance until it turned its back upon temperance and gave its support to what is the mortal antithesis of temperance; that is to say, prohibition.

And here, too, is the signature of Bishop Clarence True Wilson, who so far forgot the example of charity set him by our Lord when He said to the erring woman, "Go and sin no more," as to express his approval of the barbarous Michigan court, which said to that poor creature guilty of four petty violations of the Volstead Act, "Enter the dark portals of the penitentiary and never issue from them except as a lifeless corpse."

So here they are, these leaders of the Anti-Saloon League, not hectoring and bullying us as they sought to hector and bully the President of the United States two years ago and to hector and bully the Secretary of the Treasury only a few weeks ago, but asking us, in language of conventional politeness, to give our support to the pending bill. They use that sort of language with us because they know from experience how docile and subservient we are, and are confident that no matter to what extreme measures they may be driven in dealing with the President of the United States or with the Secretary of the Treasury, the Senate bull is always ready to hold out its nose submissively to the Anti-Saloon League ring.

So the real sponsor of the bill is not the Senator from Washington or the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or any other Senator here, but the Anti-Saloon League.

In my remarks last Saturday I addressed my attention particularly to the special features of the pending bill rather than to the general merits and demerits of prohibition. I am the only Member of the Senate so far, with the exception of the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] who has done that. I pointed out that first of all——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BRUCE. I shall reserve what I have to say until the next amendment is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "prescribed," insert the words "in a criminal prosecution," so as to read:

That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. JONES. The amendment may be pending then.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will not the Senator permit me to offer an amendment at this time?

Mr. JONES. The amendment proposed by me will not affect the other committee amendments. When I have it read it may be considered as the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the proposed amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of section 1 add the following proviso:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, under the rational rules governing this body I will continue my speech.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator that we may have an executive session now, and the Senate can proceed to-morrow.

Mr. BRUCE. I thank the Senator. That will be agreeable to me.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE EDWARD J. KING, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. DENEEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions and ask unanimous consent for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions (S. Res. 331), which were considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. EDWARD J. KING, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

RECESS

Under the last resolution the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 19, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONCILIATION WITH HUNGARY

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of conciliation between the United States and Hungary, signed at Washington on January 26, 1929.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1929.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of conciliation between the United States and Hungary, signed at Washington on January 26, 1929.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
Washington, January 29, 1929.

The President of the United States of America and His Serene Highness the Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary, being desirous to strengthen the bonds of amity that bind them together and also to advance the cause of general peace, have resolved to enter into a treaty for that purpose, and to that end have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America: Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

His Serene Highness the Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary: Count László Széchényi, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States of America:

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

Any disputes arising between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Hungary, of whatever nature they may be, shall, when ordinary diplomatic proceedings have failed and the High Contracting Parties do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, be submitted for investigation and report to a permanent International Commission constituted in the manner prescribed in the next succeeding Article; and they agree not to declare war or begin hostilities during such investigation and before the report is submitted.

ARTICLE II

The International Commission shall be composed of five members, to be appointed as follows: One member shall be chosen from each country, by the Government thereof; one member shall be chosen by each Government from some third country; the fifth member shall be chosen by common agreement between the two Governments, it being understood that he shall not be a citizen of either country. The expenses of the Commission shall be paid by the two Governments in equal proportions.

The International Commission shall be appointed within six months after the exchange of ratifications of this treaty; and vacancies shall be filled according to the manner of the original appointment.

ARTICLE III

In case the High Contracting Parties shall have failed to adjust a dispute by diplomatic methods, and they do not have recourse to adjudication by a competent tribunal, they shall at once refer it to the International Commission for investigation and report. The International Commission may, however, spontaneously by unanimous agreement offer its services to that effect, and in such case it shall notify both Governments and request their cooperation in the investigation.

The High Contracting Parties agree to furnish the Permanent International Commission with all the means and facilities required for its investigation and report.

The report of the Commission shall be completed within one year after the date on which it shall declare its investigation to have begun, unless the High Contracting Parties shall limit or extend the time by mutual agreement. The report shall be prepared in triplicate; one copy shall be presented to each Government, and the third retained by the Commission for its files.

The High Contracting Parties reserve the right to act independently on the subject matter of the dispute after the report of the Commission shall have been submitted.

ARTICLE IV

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by Hungary in accordance with its constitutional laws.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of the ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith thereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English and Hungarian languages, both texts having equal force, and hereunto affix their seals.

Done at Washington the 26th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-nine.

ARBITRATION WITH HUNGARY

In executive session this day the following treaty was ratified and, on motion of Mr. BORAH, the injunction of secrecy was removed therefrom:

To the Senate:

To the end that I may receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, I transmit herewith a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Hungary, signed at Washington on January 26, 1929.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 29, 1929.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Hungary, signed at Washington on January 26, 1929.

Respectfully submitted.

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 29, 1929.

The President of the United States of America and His Serene Highness the Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary

Determined to prevent so far as in their power lies any interruption in the peaceful relations now happily existing between the two nations;

Desirous of reaffirming their adherence to the policy of submitting to impartial decision all justiciable controversies that may arise between them; and

Eager by their example not only to demonstrate their condemnation of war as an instrument of national policy in their mutual relations, but also to hasten the time when the perfection of international arrangements for the pacific settlement of international disputes shall have eliminated forever the possibility of war among any of the Powers of the world;

Have decided to conclude a new treaty of arbitration enlarging the scope and obligations of the arbitration convention which was signed at Washington, January 15, 1909, but is not now in force, and for that purpose they have appointed as their respective Plenipotentiaries;

The President of the United States of America: Mr. Frank B. Kellogg, Secretary of State of the United States of America; and

His Serene Highness the Regent of the Kingdom of Hungary: Count László Széchényi, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Hungary to the United States of America;

Who, having communicated to each other their full powers found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

All differences relating to international matters in which the High Contracting Parties are concerned by virtue of a claim of right made by one against the other under treaty or otherwise, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy, which have not been adjusted as a result of reference to an appropriate commission of conciliation, and which are justiciable in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law or equity, shall be submitted to the Permanent Court of Arbitration established at The Hague by the Convention of October 18, 1907, or to some other competent tribunal, as shall be decided in each case by special agreement, which special agreement shall provide for the organization of such tribunal if necessary, define its powers, state the question or questions at issue, and settle the terms of reference.

The special agreement in each case shall be made on the part of the United States of America by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and on the part of Hungary in accordance with its constitutional laws.

ARTICLE II

The provisions of this treaty shall not be invoked in respect of any dispute the subject matter of which

(a) is within the domestic jurisdiction of either of the High Contracting Parties,

(b) involves the interests of third Parties,

(c) depends upon or involves the maintenance of the traditional attitude of the United States concerning American questions, commonly described as the Monroe Doctrine,

(d) depends upon or involves the observance of the obligations of Hungary in accordance with the Covenant of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE III

The present treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by Hungary in accordance with its constitutional laws.

The ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible, and the treaty shall take effect on the date of the exchange of the ratifications. It shall thereafter remain in force continuously unless and until terminated by one year's written notice given by either High Contracting Party to the other.

In faith whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed this treaty in duplicate in the English and Hungarian languages, both texts having equal force, and hereunto affixed their seals.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, February 18, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of mercies, give wisdom this day to our assembly of public servants, with its full significance and magnitude. We now wait in silence because of the strickened colleague, who was faithful to the ideals of public and private life. Be Thou in yonder chamber; press the cup of consolation to the anguishing lips that can not tell their sorrow. From the shadows of death let come the morning's glow of hope and promise. Tenderly bestow Thy grace to bear, Thy Spirit to bless, and Thy power to heal. Oh, what we learn in suffering may we teach in song. We thank Thee that we have our immortality chastened in the heavenly purity and beauty of Him who is the Lord of life and death. Merciful Father, for us stay the tide of years a little longer, and then at sunset let our frail barks sink to a sea of endless day. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, February 16, 1929, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3269) entitled "An act providing for the advancement on the retired list of the Army of Hunter Liggett and Robert L. Bullard, major generals, United States Army, retired," with amendments; insist on its amendments to the amendments of the House to said bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. REED of Pennsylvania, Mr. GREENE, and Mr. FLETCHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 675. An act to establish the Ouachita national park in the State of Arkansas; and

S. 5664. An act to extend the times for the commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Education I call up the bill H. R. 13251, with Senate amendments, and move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 13251, with a Senate amendment and concur in the Senate amendment. The Clerk will report the bill with the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13251) to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of disabled residents of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has this bill reference to the District of Columbia?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes. The States have passed similar legislation. This is to correct the injustice.

Mr. EDWARDS. I do not think it is good policy to leave the District of Columbia out of the general bill. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

EQUALIZATION OF THE RANK OF OFFICERS IN THE ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 9961, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report was read.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9961) to equalize the rank of officers in positions of great responsibility in the Army and Navy having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Instead of the language of the amendment of the Senate insert the following: "appointment as such and shall both take rank above all other officers on the active list of the Army and Navy: Provided, That nothing in this act shall have the effect of changing the relative rank of the present Chief of Staff and the present Chief of Naval Operations," and agree to the same.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.
DAVID A. REED,
FRANK L. GREENE,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The amendment as agreed to by the conferees provides that relative rank of the Chief of Staff and the Chief of Naval Operations shall be determined by the dates of their commission in their higher temporary grades rather than by the dates of their appointments as Chief of Staff or Chief of Naval Operations as was provided in the bill as it passed the House. It also provides that the Chief of Staff and the Chief of Naval Operations shall both be senior to any other officers on the active list of the Army or Navy. The final proviso merely preserves the existing relationship between the present Chief of Staff and the present Chief of Naval Operations.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. MCSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

STATEMENT

This bill (H. R. 13825) passed the House unanimously on May 28, 1928. In the Senate, the bill was amended by striking out everything after the enacting clause, rearranging items as they originally appeared in H. R. 13825, and making some additions. All the items contained originally in H. R. 13825 are included in this conference report with the exception of those for Crissy Field and Fort Douglas, Utah. The items for Crissy Field were stricken out at the request of the Secretary of War, and the items for Fort Douglas were stricken out because they have been included in an act which has already become a law.

The Senate amendment also includes the items contained in H. R. 14154, which passed the House on January 7, 1929; the item contained in H. R. 14152, which passed the House December 17, 1928; the item contained in H. R. 13853, the item contained in H. R. 14154, which passed the House on January 24, 1929; the items contained in H. R. 16503, which was reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 25, 1929; the items contained in H. R. 16502, which was reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 25, 1929; the items contained in H. R. 16355, which was favorably reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 25, 1929; the item contained in H. R. 13931, which was reported unanimously by the House Military Affairs Committee on January 18, 1929; the item contained in H. R. 14151, which passed the House on January 7, 1929; the item contained in H. R. 13693, which passed the House on February 4, 1929.

The new matter contained in the Senate amendment, which has not heretofore been introduced in the House, but which your conferees feel should be included and have agreed to are: $90,000 for an observation, tuberculosis, and infectious ward, and a laboratory and morgue, and the reconstruction of the third floor of the main building into an operation room at the Walter Reed Hospital; also $12,000 to complete a nonsectarian chapel at the Walter Reed Hospital. The items for Fort D. A. Russell contained in the Senate amendment and agreed to by your conferees were not included in any House bill, but the necessity for the construction at Fort D. A. Russell is recognized as necessary. The item for an air corps operations building at Yuma, Ariz., was also contained in the Senate amendment and has not heretofore appeared in a House bill. The necessity for this building is recognized, and therefore your conferees agree to its inclusion in the bill.

For a complete explanation of the changes made in H. R. 13825 by the Senate, the attention of the Members of the House is invited to the extension of remarks of Hon. W. FRANK JAMES, of Michigan, on page 3243 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 11, 1929.

JOHN M. MORIN,
W. FRANK JAMES,
JOHN J. McSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

HERMAN C. DAVIS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9737, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 9737, with Senate amendments, and concur in the same. The Clerk will report the bill by title and the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9737) for the relief of Herman C. Davis.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

NORTHWESTERN BANDS OF SHOSHONE INDIANS

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 710, and further insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the further conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 710 and further insist on the amendments of the House, and agree to the further conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 710) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment in claims which the northwestern band of Shoshone Indians may have against the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. LEAVITT, Mr. SPROUL of Kansas, and Mr. EVANS of Montana.

Mr. SEARS of Florida rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on flood control.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it good practice on consent day to recognize gentlemen to address the House out of order.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. But, Mr. Speaker, I yielded the other day.

The SPEAKER. To-day is consent day, and the Chair does not recognize gentlemen to ask consent to speak on consent day.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Banking and Currency from the further consideration of House Resolution 313, and that the resolution do now pass.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to make a point of order, I would like to have the resolution reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 313

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board be, and is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interest, of the following facts:

1. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with Mr. Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England, during the month of February, 1929?

2. Were such conferences, if any, solicited by Montagu Norman or by the Federal Reserve Board?

3. What was the subject matter of such conferences and what agreement, if any, was entered into by the Federal Reserve Board and Montagu Norman, and what was said at such conferences?

4. Were notes made of such conferences, and, if so, what were they?

5. Did the Federal Reserve Board confer with any individuals other than Montagu Norman prior to and concerning the public statement issued by the Federal Reserve Board on February 7, 1929, and what was said at such conferences, if any?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a privileged resolution and can not be brought up at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from New York is not privileged. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Reserve Board is an executive department of Government required by law to make an annual report to the Congress. This is the usual resolution of inquiry directed to an executive department of Government, not asking for opinions but asking for facts of their functioning, and to my mind it is perfectly within the rules of the House and is a privileged resolution. There is no use in reciting the various precedents on this matter. I simply ask for facts, the resolution is addressed to an executive department, and the necessary time has elapsed.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] in his own statement has proved that his resolution does not come within the scope of privileged resolutions when he said it was addressed to a board instead of a head of a department. Section 5 of Rule XXII provides:

All resolutions of inquiry addressed to the heads of executive departments—

It does not say addressed to executive departments, but to heads of executive departments—shall be reported to the House within one week after presentation.

Section 1 of Rule XXXIII definitely defines who are considered heads of departments—

"Heads of departments" means members of the President's Cabinet and not subordinate executives.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the resolution which the gentleman from New York has presented from his own admission is not directed to the head of a department as defined by the rules of the House, and is not privileged and is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the resolution is directed to the board itself and is certainly addressed to the head of a department. This is a Federal board. It happens to have a chairman, but that does not necessarily make the chairman the head of an executive department. This is an executive department of Government which under the law is required not to make a report to the Secretary of the Treasury but to make a report directly to the Congress.

Mr. SNELL. But the rule provides that it must be directed to the head of a department in order to make it privileged.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The law provides that the Federal Reserve Board shall annually make a full report of its operations to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of the Congress, and under that language the only one who could properly receive this resolution of inquiry is the Federal Reserve Board itself, a board required under the law to make a report to Congress.

The board is not required to make its report through a spokesman, either through the Treasury Department or anybody else, but it is required by the law to make its report directly to the Congress. This is an executive board, and it is not a department of the Government, in one sense of the word.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is bringing this question up as a privileged matter, and the only thing I am discussing here is whether it is privileged under the rules of the House; and the rules of the House definitely define what is a privileged resolution, a resolution directed to the head of a department, and in another rule there is definitely defined who are heads of departments; and the conditions surrounding this resolution conform to neither of these requirements, and it is therefore not a privileged resolution and can not be called up at this time.

Mr. BLACK of New York. The answer I make to the gentleman is that I am living up to the rules and addressing the resolution to the board itself. If you want to find out who the head of the department is for the purpose of congressional contact you have to consult the Federal reserve law, and the Federal reserve law provides specifically, not that the chairman shall make the report, not that the Secretary of the Treasury shall make the report, or the President of the United States, but that the Federal Reserve Board itself shall make the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The question presented is, Is the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] to discharge the Committee on Banking and Currency from consideration of a resolution addressed to the Federal Reserve Board in compliance with clause 5 of Rule XXII privileged as addressed to the head of a department?

The Chair thinks there is no question whatever about the rule. There are a number of precedents. The first one that the Chair recalls is found in volume III, section 1863, of Hinds' Precedents:

On February 4, 1904, Mr. Edgar D. Crumpacker, of Indiana, from the Committee on the Census, reported as privileged the following resolution:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the Director of the Census be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House," and so forth. * * *

"The resolution having been read, the Speaker said:

"The Chair desires to say that the Chair is of opinion that this is not a matter of privilege. It is not in the language of the rule addressed to the head of an executive department. The Chair merely wants to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact."

Then the resolution was considered by unanimous consent.

In Hinds' Precedents, volume 5 section 7283, occurs the following sentence:

The words "heads of departments" is construed to mean the members of the President's Cabinet as is evident from the fact that in 1886 the House did not agree to a proposition to add such offices as the Commissioners of Patents, Internal Revenue, Pensions, etc.

The rule with regard to the privilege of the House floor is also very clear. It provides that among those entitled to the privilege of the House floor are heads of departments, and this has been repeatedly held to refer only to members of the Cabinet.

Under the circumstances, the rule being so absolutely clear and the precedents undeviating, the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. On last Saturday, in response to an inquiry made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. REECE], the Chair held that where members of a committee which had regular meeting days published in the directory, and so forth, met on that day and held a meeting and voted to report out a bill, that such bill should go on the calendar provided a majority of the members of the committee were present, even though the meeting had not been called by the chairman.

On behalf of the members, and at the request of members, of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, I desire to propound this inquiry to the Chair: In the case of a committee that does not have regular meeting days, but is scheduled to meet only at the call of the chairman, I desire to know if there is any way by which that committee would be authorized to meet without the meeting being called by the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman has said, the Chair limited his ruling to cases of committees which had fixed days for meeting and had had for many years so it was known by the House that that was its regular custom, a quorum always being present to transact business. Where there is no meeting day fixed the Chair thinks the committee could only meet by the call of the chairman unless the committee should decide upon some other form of procedure.

Mr. RANKIN. Would not the chairman have to call the meeting for them to get together to decide on some other form of procedure?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather think that if a majority of the committee desired to have a meeting for the purpose of determining its mode of procedure, the chairman would call the committee together.

Mr. RANKIN. I thank the Chair.

GEORGE ROGERS CLARK SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 14, 1929.

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission.

Respectfully yours,

RALPH GILBERT.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted, and the Chair appoints to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. GILBERT the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. GREENWOOD.

There was no objection.

BOISE RECLAMATION PROJECT

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11360) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to convey or transfer certain water rights in connection with the Boise reclamation project, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have the impression that the amendment permits a different disposition of these proceeds than the House bill anticipated.

Mr. SMITH. The House bill provided specifically that the proceeds of the sale should be credited to the charges, but the general law takes care of all that, and anything that comes in from the sale of water, under the general law, would have to be applied to the credit of charges for construction purposes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I wonder if the gentleman would mind withholding this for the present. I think I have a memorandum on it.

Mr. SMITH. It only involves a very small amount of land.

Mr. CRAMTON. How much does it involve?

Mr. SMITH. It involves the water rights to about 400 acres, which the Government owns and which it wants to relinquish to the district.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the department approve of the action that is now proposed by the Senate?

Mr. SMITH. It has not been submitted to the department.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will ask that the gentleman withhold it until I can see just what it is.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request, at the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan, who wishes to examine the amendments to the bill.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have three legislative days to file minority views on the bill known as the Muscle Shoals bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that he may have three legislative days to file minority views on the so-called Muscle Shoals bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, how is a Member going to file minority views on a bill when he did not participate in the action of the committee in reporting it and was not present?

The SPEAKER. He may have the assistance of the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.] Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR BATON ROUGE

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 2449) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and a point opposite thereto in the parish of West Baton Rouge, State of Louisiana.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following committee amendment:

"That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Louisiana Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of Baton Rouge, in the parish of East Baton Rouge, and a point opposite thereto in the parish of West Baton Rouge, both in the State of Louisiana, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

"SEC. 2. If tolls are charged for the use of such bridge, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of the bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the costs of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

"SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Louisiana Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La."

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word in order to obtain some information from the committee which reported this bill. Section 2 states that the tolls which are charged for use of the bridge shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay the cost of building, maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge, and so forth, under "reasonable charges." I would like to ask some member of the committee reporting the bill who is to determine whether the rates of toll are reasonable or not; who is to supervise the details of this proposition?

Mr. MAPES. I did not report the bill, but the general bridge act gives the power to the Secretary of War through the Board of Engineers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Where you have an agency controlling the bridge consisting of two States, the gentleman need not have any misgivings about it. The trouble is where you have a private corporation given all this power; they have all the control.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

AMENDING THE ACTS RESPECTING COPYRIGHT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13452) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, as amended, in respect of mechanical reproduction of musical compositions, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I object.

COMPACTS BETWEEN THE STATES OF COLORADO AND WYOMING

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7026) granting the consent of Congress to compacts or agreements between the States of Colorado and Wyoming with respect to the division and apportionment of the North Platte River and other streams in which such States are jointly interested.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill and the next one be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that this bill and the next one on the calendar be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This bill has been at the head of the calendar for some time, and the last time the gentleman assured us that it could be disposed of at the next calendar day.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; the gentleman is mistaken, he is going to assure the gentleman this time. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, I may have leave to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

CLASSIFICATION OF THE CHIPPEWA INDIANS OF MINNESOTA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12414) authorizing the classification of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. I object.

CREATION OF INDIAN TRUST ESTATES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7204) to authorize the creation of Indian trust estates, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a very important bill and would require extended discussion. It ought not to come up on this calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, this is the Indian trust bill. There is a great deal of controversy over it and it has very highly important provisions in it. I ask unanimous consent that it go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

YUMA AND YUMA MESA AUXILIARY IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15918) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize credit upon the construction charges of certain water-right applicants and purchasers on the Yuma and Yuma Mesa auxiliary projects, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING] on last Consent Calendar day, had some objections to this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I do not think so. It was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] who asked that it go over without prejudice in order that he might have time to investigate it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is not the Imperial Valley project then?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. No.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have not had the opportunity to make the study that I wanted to make. The Yuma irrigation district situation is very complicated. However, I have been advised that all this bill does is to make possible certain adjustments cared for in the last proviso.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. For those who have paid up in full?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. It does not make any change for any one else?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. None whatever.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It is not connected in any way, remotely or otherwise, with the big proposition that we have in mind.

Mr. DOUGLAS or Arizona. No. I shall explain the situation to the gentleman if he desires.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman assures me that it is not connected with that in any way, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. It has nothing to do with any water rights of the Imperial irrigation district, or any payments which the Imperial irrigation district is under obligation to make to the United States.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And has no connection directly or indirectly with the Boulder Dam proposition?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Absolutely none.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I accept the gentleman's assurance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to authorize credit upon the construction charges of certain water-right applicants and purchasers on the Yuma and Yuma Mesa auxiliary projects, and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1926, be amended so as to read as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the individual water-right applicants on the Yuma reclamation project and the purchasers of water rights on the Yuma Mesa auxiliary project, on the construction charges due under their contracts with the United States under the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, with their proportionate part of all payments heretofore made or hereinafter to be made by the imperial irrigation district of California under contract entered into under date of October 23, 1918, between the said district and the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That lands in the Yuma Indian Reservation for which water rights have been purchased shall share pro rata in the credits so to be applied: Provided further, That where construction charges are paid in full said payments shall be credited on operation and maintenance charges assessed against the lands to which said payments would otherwise apply."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RADIO CENTER, BOLLING FIELD, D. C.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I held this bill up on last consent day to obtain information from the War Department and the Navy Department. I have obtained that information, and without burdening the House with it at this time, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a letter I received from the Secretary of War, and withdraw my objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert a letter at this point in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 12, 1929.

Hon. FIORELLO H. LAGUARDIA,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR MR. LAGUARDIA: I am pleased to reply to your letter of February 4, 1929, concerning the possibility of utilizing the Navy Department radio station at Arlington for all Government services in connection with consideration of H. R. 13931, a bill to authorize an appropriation for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field.

This radio and communication center as now existing transmits during the dull season approximately 500 to 600 messages daily and during the rush times over 1,000 messages daily for 49 bureaus, branches, or departments of the Government, including the Navy Department.

This transmission effected a net saving of $263,000 during the last year, which would have been the cost of transmittal by commercial facilities at Government rate.

Information received from the Navy Department indicates that they would be unable to handle Army businss in addition to their own without the installation of additional equipment, which in turn would require the enlargement of their present buildings and grounds costing more than that involved in erecting an Army radio building at an Army station.

The War Department hook-up controls 212 land stations similar to the control which the Navy exerts over its stations and the consolidation of this control is not believed to be desirable.

Another vital consideration is the fact that the Army net handles all messages and broadcasts in connection with the air activities of the War Department, it being possible to give them first priority in transmission.

If all this should be placed at Arlington, the Navy could not give such priority as they must give similar priority to their broadcasts in the interests of their flying activities, weather information, and ships at sea, and for issuing orders to their fleets at stated hours.

I still feel it to be essential that the Army be provided with a suitable building to house its radio transmitters and that it is not desirable or practicable to utilize the naval radio station at Arlington, Va., for the purpose of housing all Army radio transmitters located or to be located in the vicinity of Washington, D. C., for the following reasons:

At the present time radio transmitters under War Department control are located at Fort Myer (3), Annapolis (1), navy yard (1), Bolling Field (1).

It will be necessary in the near future to make available nine radio transmitters for use by the War Department radio net due to the steady and rapid increase of traffic for all Government branches, bureaus, and departments being handled by this net. Sufficient space at Arlington is not available for installing the War Department radio transmitters now in operation. High-powered, high-frequency amplifiers are essential for use with the present transmitters, and this equipment requires much space in order to insure efficient operation and safety of personnel.

It is essential that the Signal Corps train personnel in the handling of high-powered radio transmitters and amplification equipment. This valuable purpose would be lost in the event that War Department equipment of this magnitude and importance was turned over to the Navy. There would be divided responsibility which would result in loss of efficiency.

At the present time the War Department has one high-frequency transmitter located at the navy yard under similar conditions to those outlined in your letter. The operation of this transmitter is far from being efficient, and has required during the last two months more care than three transmitters located at Fort Myer under direct control of the War Department.

It would not be proper to group all Government transmitters in one location. Any operating difficulty, such as loss of power, storms, etc., would throw the Army and Navy nets out of operation. The Navy Department has appreciated this and at the present time has transmitters located at Annapolis, navy yard, and Arlington.

It would not be economical, as any saving which would be effected by initial construction would be lost in alterations at Arlington and rental of long control and signal lines from the Munitions Building to Radio, Va.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $30,000, to be expended for the construction of a building for a radio and communication center at Bolling Field, D. C.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, after the word "Columbia," insert "or at a point on a military reservation in the vicinity of the District of Columbia to be selected by the Secretary of War."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15211) to amend section 7 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and in industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditures," approved February 23, 1917, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

COTTON STATISTICS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4206) authorizing the Director of the Census to collect and publish certain additional cotton statistics.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT OMAHA, NEBR.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15011) authorizing Charles B. Morearty, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Omaha, Nebr.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT SOUTH OMAHA, NEBR.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15012) authorizing Charles B. Morearty, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I call attention to the report of the Department of Agriculture recommending against favorable action on this bill, and I therefore object.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word in regard to these bridge bills. It seems to me a bridge bill is either good or bad, and surely the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] will get together with the official objectors and agree as to what bridge bills are good and what bridge bills are bad and pass them collectively in order to save the time of the House in considering private bills. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will do that and let us pass them collectively.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I think the observation made by the gentleman is entirely correct. There are some of these bills to which there is no objection and some of these bills to which there is objection, and I agree entirely with the gentleman, and I hope that the gentleman from Illinois will report an omnibus bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have all of my bills marked, and I can tell instantly which to object to or not.

Mr. DENISON. I think I can assure the gentleman that we will figure out some way in reference to these bills.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I have one or two marked, and I will agree to pass them over.

BRIDGE ACROSS GARNIERS BAYOU, FLA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15525) authorizing Thomas E. Brooks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Garniers Bayou at or near the point where State Road No. 10 crosses the said Garniers Bayou, in the State of Florida.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Roads, reports against the passage of this bill, and I am therefore constrained to object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER AT NEW MARTINSVILLE, W. VA.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15570) authorizing S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near New Martinsville, W. Va.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Roads, recommended against the proposed action on this bill, and I therefore object.

Mr. BACHMANN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BACHMANN. I want to say for the information of the gentleman that at the last session of Congress this bill was passed for building this bridge at New Martinsville, W. Va. The town council entered into an agreement with the bridge company to construct the bridge, and the bridge company which obtained the franchise wanted the town of New Martinsville to pay the sum of $5,000 before it would turn the franchise over to them.

At this session of Congress I introduced a bill repealing that act and introduced this bill asking for the consent of Congress to authorize S. R. Cox, who is the town recorder of the town of New Martinsville, to construct this bridge, so that the town itself, in so far as its financial condition was concerned, could go ahead with this project and build the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I wish the gentleman from West Virginia to understand that there is nothing personal in my attitude. I am simply trying to uphold and support the attitude of the Roads Bureau, which in turn is trying to do some excellent constructive work. The gentleman should take up the matter with the Roads Bureau. There is no feeling in this matter on my part. I must be consistent. I must object to all these bills and follow the recommendation of the Roads Bureau.

Mr. BACHMANN. What I am trying to clarify in the gentleman's mind is this, that only at the first session of this Congress we passed a bill to complete a bridge at that place, and the bridge would probably have been under construction by this time if the bridge company and the town council had been able to get together. This bill gives authority to S. R. Cox, the town recorder, to build the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The Department of Agriculture says concerning this bill:

Routes on the Ohio and West Virginia systems of Federal-aid highways parallel the Ohio River on both sides, passing through New Martinsville and points opposite in Ohio. A bridge across the Ohio River at this point, therefore, would constitute a connecting link between these routes on the system of Federal-aid highways. The department would, therefore, recommend against favorable action on the bill.

Mr. BACHMANN. At the last session I introduced a bill to construct a bridge at that particular place. I am trying to get authority for the council to go ahead and build the bridge. I have been in touch with the Department of Agriculture with respect to this, but they never changed their report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, we have nothing but the report of December 28, 1928, from which I read.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman in just a few words state what is the position of the Roads Department?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. The roads on both sides, both in West Virginia and Ohio, are a part of the Federal road system. This bridge would connect the two highways which are within the Federal road system. The attitude of the department is not to allow these bridges to be built by private concerns and charge tolls. The gentleman will realize that building a bridge across a Federal highway is of particular concern to the authorities in the Federal road system. The Government is appropriating very generously for the Federal road system.

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me it might be a useful adjunct to the roads on both sides of the river to have a bridge built there.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am merely trying to carry out one of the policies of the Federal road system.

Mr. TILSON. Unless there is a good reason for it we need not support it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MAUMEE RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15715) authorizing the construction of a high-level bridge across the Maumee River at or near its mouth.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a telegram from Hon. W. E. Jackson, mayor of Toledo, which reads as follows:

TOLEDO, OHIO, February 16, 1929.

JOHN C. SCHAFER,

House of Representatives:

Urge you use influence to kill H. R. 15715, granting toll bridge franchise to Rheinfrank. Sentiment in Toledo opposed to private toll bridge. Want time to determine feasibility of free bridge. Also opposed to bill granting municipal toll bridge franchise until study is made.

WILLIAM T. JACKSON, Mayor.

I rise at this time to ask for information. Is there any probability that in the near future a free bridge will be constructed at this point?

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will reserve it.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, when I first introduced this bill I said I would not urge its passage unless I was convinced that, in the first place, it did not interfere with our plans for the development of the Toledo port; and, second, I must be convinced that the city of Toledo wanted it. I am assured by the War Department that it will not in any way interfere with the port. This bridge is to be built under the jurisdiction and direction of the War Department. There is a clearance of 136 feet under the bridge.

Mr. SCHAFER. Is the city council in favor of this bill?

Mr. CHALMERS. They are in favor of it by a vote of 18 to 2. They passed a resolution favoring this toll bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What did the mayor of Toledo say?

Mr. SCHAFER. He is opposed to it.

Mr. CHALMERS. I want to see done what the city of Toledo wants. I have here a statement under oath that 18 of the 20 councilmen representing the different wards of the city of Toledo certifying to me to-day that they will carry this Toledo bridge resolution by a two-thirds vote over the mayor's veto at the first opportunity, which will be on the 26th day of this month. I will ask the chairman in charge of bridge legislation in the Senate to hold this bill up in the Senate until the Toledo council acts.

Mr. SCHAFER. How does the mayor feel about it?

Mr. CHALMERS. He feels that the resolution has no effect. After two months agitation, the city of Toledo decides that it wants it. I am in favor of letting them have what they want.

Mr. SCHAFER. I have the highest regard for the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS], who so ably and efficiently represents the people of Toledo in the Halls of Congress. In view of the fact that he favors this bill and in view of the statement he has made, I shall not object.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says the aldermen have expressed their desire to have this bridge. Have the people ever had an opportunity to vote on the question.

Mr. CHALMERS. The people voted bonds for a $3,000,000 bridge at the last November election.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. To be paid for by the people?

Mr. CHALMERS. By the people; yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A free bridge?

Mr. CHALMERS. Yes. We have five bridges, and if people do not want to pay toll they can go a mile farther and pass over a free bridge.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am prompted to ask this question because the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] a few days ago told the House of a toll bridge in Arkansas that cost between $300,000 and $400,000, and the tolls collected last year were more than $100,000. So that a toll bridge in these days of automobiles has gotten to be a pretty good proposition.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. And let me say to the gentleman that the hearings before the United States district engineers held last week developed the fact that the owners of that bridge are fighting a reduction in tolls.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. May I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that all the Bureau of Roads, in the Department of Agriculture, is seeking to do is to give the public the benefit of the Federal-aid system of public roads and we should stand by them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the gentleman's idea is that when the Government builds a road on each side of a river private individuals should not have an opportunity to build a bridge which will give them the benefit of tolls on the traffic which the Government has brought to the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is because it gives a monopoly at that point.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, when I was first requested by Mr. Eugene Rheinfrank on December 21, 1928, to introduce in Congress a bridge bill for the construction of a high-level toll bridge near the mouth of the Maumee River, I wrote Mr. Rheinfrank that before doing so I must be convinced, first, that the people of Toledo favored his project and, second, that it would not in any way interfere with our plans to make Toledo a world port.

At the same time I wrote to city and county officials and citizens of the district, calling for their judgment and advice on this important subject. My answers favoring the project have indicated a large majority. I would say the majority is more than 80 per cent, as an examination of my bridge file will show. I have had resolutions from 14 civic, social, and business organizations and clubs of the district indorsing the project. Only one organization has sent me resolutions condemning it.

As soon as I was assured by the War Department that the public interests and that of the port would be well guarded and cared for, I was satisfied on my second reservation, our port interests.

As to whether or not the city of Toledo wants the toll bridge built under proper safeguards, regulations, and restrictions, I decided early to leave to the Toledo City Council. When they indorsed the project by a vote of 18 to 2 one would think that this would be sufficient evidence of public opinion. But since the mayor has vetoed the resolution, and to be doubly sure of what the people want, I have decided to let the bill go through the House to-day and await in the Senate action on the mayor's veto. If the bill were passed over on the Consent Calendar to-day, it would be killed for the Seventieth Congress. I do not feel like assuming that responsibility.

If, after all this publicity and agitation, the council again passes the resolution by a two-thirds vote, we ought all to gracefully yield to the majority views.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Eugene Rheinfrank, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Maumee River, within the county of Lucas, State of Ohio, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at a point at or near its mouth, or entrance into Maumee Bay, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Ohio, any political subdivision thereof within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interest in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 3. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the State of Ohio, or by any municipality or other political subdivision or public agency thereof, under the provisions of section 2 of this act, and if tolls are charged for the use thereof, the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of tolls shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 4. Eugene Rheinfrank, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the Highway Department of the State of Ohio a sworn intemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion cost. The Secretary of War may and, at the request of the Highway Department of the State of Ohio, shall at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Eugene Rheinfrank, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 5. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to Eugene Rheinfrank, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the time for amortization under this bill has been reduced from 20 years to 5 years. BRIDGE ACROSS THE SUSQUEHANNA RIVER

Mr. BEERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1159, H. R. 15849, a bill authorizing Richard H. Klein, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Susquehanna River at or near the borough of Liverpool, Perry County, Pa.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1159, H. R. 15849, which was passed over without prejudice. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will accept an amendment which I shall offer to the committee amendment. The bill provides for recapture within 30 years. The committee's amendment provides for 20 years; the bureau recommends 15 years, and I shall offer such an amendment.

Mr. BEERS. I will accept that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment by striking out "twenty" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to one of the committee amendments, which the Clerk will report.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16345) authorizing Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Lawrence River, near Morristown, N. Y.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I understand the bureau is in error when it states that this connects two Federal-aid roads meeting each other at the stream.

Mr. SNELL. I think they are entirely wrong in their position because there is a Federal-aid road that runs south of the St. Lawrence River east and west. This bridge is for the road coming from Canada and will eventually join up and come into the Federal-aid road, but they will have to build a special road from half a mile to three-quarters of a mile long. It does not force anybody to go across this bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then it does not come within the category that we have just been discussing.

Mr. SNELL. Not as I understand it. If we can get somebody to put their money in there we would like to have them build the bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate international commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, Frank A. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing Frank A. Augsbury, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Lawrence River at or near Morristown, N. Y."

BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4451) to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing Roy Clippinger, Ulys Pyle, Edgar Leathers, Groves K. Flescher, Carmen Flescher, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Wabash River at or near McGregors Ferry in White County, Ill.," approved May 1, 1928.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] a question.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR BROWNVILLE, NEBR.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 4861) authorizing the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Brownville, Nebr.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Brownville, Nebr., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real etate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of Nebraska, the State of Missouri, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation, in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion costs, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof, or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The Brownville Bridge Co., it successors and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Nebraska and Missouri a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, shall make available all of its records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 4 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the Brownville Bridge Co., its successors and assigns; and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 8. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 3, line 11, strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "five" in lieu thereof.

Page 6, after line 3, insert the following as section 8:

"SEC. 8. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000 shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspapers of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE WABASH RIVER

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1163, the bill S. 4451.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he will reserve his objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, who objected to the consideration of the bill, that a bill was passed at the last session authorizing these people to construct a bridge across the Wabash River at McGregors Ferry, and became a law. This bill is an amendment to that bill authorizing a change of location from McGregors Ferry about 16 miles north at New Harmony.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I will say to the gentleman in all candor that, according to my information, after this first act was passed some citizens of my section went over there and expended considerable time and money in preparations for the construction of a bridge at the point now proposed by the amended bill, and in these circumstances, for the present, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Will the gentleman state whether or not a bill has been introduced for the people he mentions?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I have not introduced such a bill. That has been their intention, according to their statements to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I thought perhaps, in view of the statement I have just made, the gentleman might withdraw his objection.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. This matter might clarify itself later. I am just complying with the request of some citizens in my section.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

NAVAL RESERVE AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7930) to amend section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925, entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question? This apparently looks very innocent on its face, but the cost of inspecting and transporting these men for the purpose of inspection is estimated at $12.40 a man and amounts to $74,250 per year, and then this statement is made, which seems inconsistent:

This amount would be reduced each year by deaths, resignations, etc., among those members of the Fleet Naval Reserve transferred thereto prior to July 1, 1925.

It is not the intention of the bill to reduce the strength of the Naval Reserve; therefore, how do you expect this reduction owing to deaths and resignations?

Mr. HALE. These are men on the retired list, of course.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Are there not other men going on the retired list all of the time?

Mr. BRITTEN. If my colleague on the committee will yield, and answering the gentleman's question, as the Fleet Naval Reserve is now constituted, it is divided as far as regulations and rules of the department are concerned for examination for these men. The law of August, 1916, provides that certain reservists shall be subject to examination and inspection at least every four years. In 1925 legislation was enacted that inadvertently left out the reserves enrolled prior to 1925, so the reservists enrolled since then who went out with 16 to 20 years' service may be called once every four years, while everybody enrolled prior to that may not be called at all.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. So they are gradually reduced?

Mr. BRITTEN. The bill now before us will make the inspection law apply to all fleet reservists alike.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object—and I believe I shall object—on page 2, line 7, it provides:

Provided further, That transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve found not physically qualified on reporting for inspection in accordance with this section shall be transferred to the retired list of the regular Navy, with the pay they are then receiving, and upon the completion of 30 years' service, including naval service, time in the Fleet Naval Reserve, and time on the retired list of the Navy, they shall receive the allowances to which enlisted men of the regular Navy are entitled on retirement after 30 years' service.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is a copy of the present law as affecting those reserves who were enrolled after July 1, 1925.

Mr. SCHAFER. Are you going to have a number of men receiving compensation that they would not receive if it was not for this provision?

Mr. BRITTEN. No; this does not change their present compensation, but it does provide for examination of all fleet reservists who have come out of the regular service.

Mr. SCHAFER. If they call one of these men in for examination and find that he is disabled and place him on the retired list, will he receive any additional compensation?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not a penny; and for this reason: He gets the same pay in retirement that he now gets as a fleet reservist. He is simply taken off the reserve rolls and placed on the retirement list. The reserve rolls should not be incumbered with men physically unqualified for service in an emergency, and that really is the reason for this legislation.

Mr. SCHAFER. The committee report indicates that this bill will cost about $75,000 annually. Most of this amount will be expended for medical examinations and transportation to places where such examinations will be made. Would there not be a considerable saving if the Pension Bureau examiners, the United States Compensation Commission examiners, the Veterans' Bureau examiners, and other Government examiners could conduct the medical examinations? It would result in a great saving in transportation cost to the Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. Let me suggest that there are some 5,900 men affected by this legislation. If all of them were called in for inspection, it would cost about $12.50 each for transportation and examination and everything else, and the amount would reach $74,000.

Mr. SCHAFER. If you have a man living in the West, a good many miles from where one of these Navy medical officers is stationed, you are going to have a saving if the Pension Bureau examiner or the Veterans' Bureau examiner conducts the medical examination.

Mr. BRITTEN. I agree with the gentleman, and if it can be determined by the department that he is of good physical character, they may not require him to travel a great distance for inspection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why not amend the bill so that the Pension Bureau examiner, the Veterans' Bureau examiner, and other Government examiners can conduct the medical examinations?

Mr. BRITTEN. That could not well be done because the pension examiners do not now examine for the Army or the Navy or the Marine Corps or the Coast Guard.

Mr. SCHAFER. The administration that is coming in on the 4th of March is in favor of the consolidation of Government agencies. If this could be done, it would save the taxpayers many thousands of dollars.

Mr. BRITTEN. I hope there will be no objection to this bill.

Mr. SCHAFER. If in the future when we are considering legislation to consolidate the activities of the Government and find that we can save this money the gentleman would not object to it, would he?

Mr. BRITTEN. Certainly not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This does not appropriate. This must go before the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SNELL). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 24 of the act approved February 28, 1925 (43 Stat. 1087, U. S. C. title 34, sec. 785), entitled "An act to provide for the creation, organization, administration, and maintenance of a Naval Reserve and a Marine Corps Reserve," be, and the same is hereby, amended by changing the period at the end of said section to a colon and by adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided further, That any pay which may be due any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve, transferred thereto prior to July 1, 1925, shall be forfeited when so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy upon the failure, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, of such member to report for inspection: Provided further, That transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve found not physically qualified on reporting for inspection in accordance with this section, shall be transferred to the retired list of the regular Navy, with the pay they are then receiving, and upon the completion of 30 years' service, including naval service, time in the Fleet Naval Reserve, and time on the retired list of the Navy, they shall receive the allowances to which enlisted men of the regular Navy are entitled on retirement after 30 years' service," so that said section will read as follows:

"All enlisted men who heretofore have been transferred from the regular Navy to the Fleet Naval Reserve established by the act of August 29, 1916, and who by section 1 of this act are transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve herein created, shall receive the rate of pay they were legally entitled to receive in the Naval Reserve Force: Provided, That such enlisted men so transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve herein created shall, upon completing 30 years' service, including naval service and time in the Fleet Naval Reserve of the Naval Reserve Force and in the Fleet Naval Reserve herein created, be transferred to the retired list of the regular Navy with the pay they were then legally entitled to receive, plus the allowances to which enlisted men of the regular Navy are entitled on retirement after 30 years' naval service: Provided further, That any pay which may be due any member of the Fleet Naval Reserve, transferred thereto prior to July 1, 1925, shall be forfeited when so ordered by the Secretary of the Navy upon the failure, under such conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, of such member to report for inspection: Provided further, That transferred members of the Fleet Naval Reserve found not physically qualified on reporting for inspection in accordance with this section, shall be transferred to the retired list of the regular Navy, with the pay they are then receiving, and upon the completion of 30 years' service, including naval service, time in the Fleet Naval Reserve, and time on the retired list of the Navy, they shall receive the allowances to which enlisted men of the regular Navy are entitled on retirement after 30 years' service."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS MEMORIAL LIGHTHOUSE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 354) authorizing the appropriation of the sum of $871,655 as the contribution of the United States toward the Christopher Columbus Memorial Lighthouse at Santo Domingo.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this would seek to appropriate nearly a million dollars for construction outside of the United States, and I feel constrained to object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a brief explanation?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has the approval of the President, of the Secretary of State, and of the Director General of the Pan American Union. The matter arises in this way: At the Pan American conference held in Santiago, Chile, in 1923, in which our Government participated, the following resolution was agreed to:

To recommend that the Governments of the American Republics honor the memory of Christopher Columbus, discoverer of America, by the erection of a monumental lighthouse which will bear his name, on the coast at Santo Domingo, capital of the Dominican Republic, and which shall be built with the cooperation of the Governments and people of America and any others who may so desire.

Later on, on December 10, 1926, the Congress of the United States approved the project by the following resolution:

That it is the sense of the Congress that the United States approves the international project advocated at the Pan American conference, held at Santiago de Chile, April, 1924 (1923) to erect a memorial lighthouse at Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, to Christopher Columbus, and that the several States participating in that conference be notified through the usual diplomatic channels of the desire of the people of the United States to participate in this movement to honor the memory of the great navigator and discoverer.

Our contribution to the building fund is on the same basis as our contributions to the Pan American Union. It is based on population. The population of the United States is slightly in excess of the population of the other Americas combined. The project, it is estimated, will cost about $4,000,000, $1,500,000 to be contributed by the Republics of the Western Hemisphere. I am informed that Spain and Italy may also contribute. The balance of the two and a half million dollars is to be raised by public subscription in the respective countries.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I think there is no hurry about this project. Some gentlemen have spoken to me asking that at least it go over for further investigation. I shall not object at this time if the gentleman is willing to leave it on the calendar and pass it over without prejudice. If the gentleman desires, I shall make that request; otherwise I shall object.

Mr. PORTER. Delay would be embarrassing. The Dominican Republic has organized the commission. There is to be an exposition at Seville, Spain, in August next, where the plans are to be submitted and the awards made. Cuba has already indicated a willingness to contribute, also one other South American country. I would regret very much to see it go over.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The United States does honor the great discoverer and has honored him in numerous ways everywhere. There are some Members who question the propriety of appropriating a million dollars toward building a lighthouse to be located in the Dominican Republic. Unless the gentleman is willing that it go over without prejudice, I shall make objection.

Mr. PORTER. Does not the gentleman consider that this resolution of the Congress in which we urge the building of this lighthouse places our Government under a moral obligation to make our fair contribution toward the project?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. No. I do not think there is either a moral or a legal obligation. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I think this should be considered at this time, and I object to the postponement of the resolution.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON SANITARY AVIATION

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 384) to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the First International Congress on Sanitary Aviation, to be held at Paris, France.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution refers to a congress on sanitary aviation. Is not that a mistake? Is not this really a conference on noncombatant aviation? Some one I feel has perhaps translated literally. The phrase "sanitary aviation" conveys nothing, and has no meaning at all. From the meager information contained in the report, I gather that it is a conference on the use of aviation in war which it noncombatant. I may be wrong, I do not know.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has been misinformed; my information is from the State Department. The conference will consider sanitary aviation in the colonies, sanitary aviation, a means of evacuation in time of war, sanitary hydroaviation, Red Cross and sanitary aviation, and the possibility of neutralization of machines flying within the lines in time of war, medicine and aviation, aerial physiology, and sanitary aviation in time of peace as a help to civil population.

This bill is recommended by the President and Secretary of State, and there is involved an appropriation of only $1,000. The bill was introduced by our colleague, Mr. MAAS, who is ill in a hospital.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All I desire is the definition of what is sanitary aviation.

Mr. HUDSON. This is a bill introduced by Mr. MAAS, who is a great aviator himself.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I understand that, but I think the translation is poor.

Mr. HUDSON. The definition contained in the title is the work of France, not of this country. It is an invitation from France.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think what it really means is noncombatant aviation.

Mr. HUDSON. Perhaps it is.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. We could not make it out, quite.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Inasmuch as the information given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] is so enlightening, I do not desire to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 for the expenses of delegates of the United States to be appointed by the President to the First International Congress on Sanitary Aviation, to be held at Paris, France, in 1929, including compensation of employees, transportation, subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), printing of reports, contract stenographic reporting services, official cards, and such other expenses as the President may deem necessary.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING TRANSPORTATION ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 3723) to amend and reenact subdivision (a) section 209 of the transportation act, 1920.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

CODE OF LAWS OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 368) providing more economical and improved methods for the publication and distribution of the Code of Laws of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and supplements.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, unless some one really desires to hear it, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to avoid duplication and waste—

(a) Publication of Supplement I to the Code of Laws of the United States (Public, No. 621, 70th Cong.) as a part of the Statutes at Large is dispensed with;

SEC. 3. Section 4 of such act of May 29, 1928, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 4. In all courts, tribunals, and public offices of the United States, at home or abroad, of the District of Columbia, and of each State, Territory, or insular possession of the United States—

"(a) The matter set forth in the edition of the Code of Laws of the United States current at any time shall, together with the then correct supplement, if any, establish prima facie the laws of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, in force on the day preceding the commencement of the session following the last session the legislation of which is included.

"(b) The matter set forth in the edition of the Code of Laws relating to the District of Columbia current at any time shall, together with the then current supplement, if any, establish prima facie the laws, general and permanent in their nature, relating to or in force in the District

"(c) Supplements to the Code of Laws of the United States and to the Code of Laws, relating to the District of Columbia may be cited, respectively, as 'U. S. C., Sup. ,' and 'D. C. Code, Sup. ,' the blank in each case being filled with Roman figures denoting the number of the supplement.

"(d) New editions of each of such codes may be cited, respectively, as 'U. S. C., ed.' and 'D. C. Code, ed.,' the blank in each case being filled with figures denoting the last year the legislation of which is included in whole or in part."

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

MILITARY POSTS IN PORTO RICO

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16502) to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts in Porto Rico, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is a pretty big item for the Consent Calendar, which carries an item of several hundred thousand dollars of appropriation.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes the appropriation of nearly a million and a half dollars, and I think it too important to be considered at this time, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

ACCEPTANCE OF GIFT OF BRONZE TABLETS FROM WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15330) authorizing the acceptance by the United States Government, from the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, of proposed gift of bronze tablets to be placed in Andersonville National Cemetery in Georgia.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept from the Woman's Relief Corps, auxiliary to the Grand Army of the Republic, a gift of bronze tablets, containing Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, and Logan's Memorial Day Order No. 11, to be placed on the grounds of the Andersonville National Cemetery in the State of Georgia, all expenses incident to the erection to be paid by the Woman's Relief Corps.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IRRIGATION DAM ON THE GREYBULL RIVER, WYO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10308) to investigate and determine the feasibility of the construction of an irrigation dam on the Greybull River, Wyo.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER, Mr. BLACK of Texas, and Mr. LAGUARDIA objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three objections are heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

IRRIGATION DAM ON THE BEAR RIVER, WYO.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10309) to investigate and determine the feasibility of the construction of an irrigation dam on the Bear River, Wyo.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. SCHAFER, and Mr. BLACK of Texas objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen from Michigan, Wisconsin, and Texas object. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PROTECTION AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE UMATILLA RAPIDS, IN THE COLUMBIA RIVER

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 306) to provide for the protection and development of the Umatilla Rapids in the Columbia River.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. SCHAFER, and Mr. BLACK of Texas objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan, the gentleman from Wisconsin, and the gentleman from Texas object. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIEF OF THE STATE OF MAINE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10664) for the relief of the State of Maine.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we have a report here in which the Navy Department approves of this bill very heartily, but the Bureau of the Budget does not agree with the Navy Department. Can the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY] enlighten us on this or give us some information?

Mr. BEEDY. If the gentleman from New York will note the date of the letter from the Navy Department, February 20, 1928, he will see that Admiral Gregory, under whose jurisdiction this particular project came and who was familiar with it, approved it. Subsequent to that time it went to the Bureau of the Budget, and the Bureau of the Budget disapproved it; whereupon the Secretary of the Navy on March 17, 1928, felt obliged to fall in line with the Budget. When this proposed legislation came before the Committee on Naval Affairs the committee thought it was equitable and sound, since the original act provided that the Federal Government should "aid in the construction" of the bridge, and an appropriation of $500,000 for that purpose was made, all of which was not used because the bridge, at the solicitation of the Federal Government, was placed on the river for the accommodation of a navy yard at a point which narrowed the portion which the Federal Government was to build over the channel and left there an uncompleted bridge. At the same time the State of Maine and the State of New Hampshire were obliged to spend all and more than $500,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Six hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars had been expended by the Federal Government?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes; and the State of Maine and the State of New Hampshire had to go into their own pockets to complete the bridge. They thus expended in the neighborhood of $365,000 each, in addition to the original appropriation. It was thought that if the States of Maine and New Hampshire had come to the Congress when the bridge was half finished, and instead of permitting the cost of the bridge to rest wholly on the shoulders of the States of Maine and New Hampshire should have asked for Federal money to complete the bridge, they would have gotten it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have not had the opportunity to study the bill, but I notice the statement of the Secretary of the Navy that the bill had been referred to the Bureau of the Budget for information as to the cost of the bridge, with the statement that the Navy Department contemplated recommending the enactment of the proposed legislation, and that the Bureau of the Budget stated that it was in conflict with the policy of the Bureau of the Budget.

Now, that kind of a report submitted to the Congress by the Bureau of the Budget is merely a subterfuge; and if the Executive head of the Government wants to let the heads of departments send up that kind of subterfuge reports, you might as well quit referring to the Budget. That will break down the Budget system if the departments are allowed to resort to that kind of funny work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What assurance do we have that the States will not follow this up and ask for further appropriations?

Mr. HALE. The Government has already furnished money to build the New Hampshire approach to the bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No further money will be asked for unexpected expenditures either by the State of New Hampshire or the city of Portsmouth or the great State of Maine?

Mr. HALE. Not from the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. BEEDY. No; nor from the State of Maine.

Mr. BLANTON. The title to this bridge when finished will rest where? Will it be in the State of Maine?

Mr. BEEDY. It connects a Federal road on the one side of the river with a Federal road on the other side.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a free bridge?

Mr. BEEDY. Yes; it is a free bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. And the title to it is where?

Mr. BEEDY. I suppose it will be in the two States.

Mr. BLANTON. It will be in Maine and New Hampshire?

Mr. BEEDY. I suppose that is true.

Mr. BLANTON. Why should we depart from the usual rule with respect to building bridges when the Federal aid should come from our good-roads fund, not from Congress direct, as applies to all the other States of the Union? Why should we depart from that rule as to Maine and New Hampshire?

Mr. BEEDY. The only reason I can think of, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, is that the Federal Government wanted this bridge built to accommodate a United States navy yard.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a bridge between Washington and Texas—either in Tennessee or Arkansas; I have forgotten which; and over which I pass every year—that takes in annually from the people more than the bridge cost. There ought to be a Federal bridge built there. It ought to be built from good-roads funds; it should come from that appropriation; and there is no attempt to have the funds come directly from Congress to relieve that situation. I can not see how the gentleman from Maine is going to get away with this proposition of coming to Congress continually for this kind of an enterprise when it ought to be built through some other department. This is such a departure from the rule and custom we have had for a number of years that I do not see why such a precedent should be set.

Mr. BEEDY. Does the gentleman understand that I am not asking for an appropriation?

Mr. BLANTON. But the amount carried in the bill is $35,000.

Mr. BEEDY. Legislation has already been passed which appropriated this $35,000.

Mr. BLANTON. But you can not spend it without this bill?

Mr. BEEDY. No.

Mr. BLANTON. You need this bill in order to spend that $35,000?

Mr. BEEDY. It is appropriated, but it can not be put to any use, because Maine and New Hampshire finished the bridge, while the Federal Government has an unexpended balance of $35,000 which was originally to be used in the erection of the bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. After what the gentleman from Michigan, the watchdog of the Treasury, had to say about the subterfuge reports of the gentleman's departments, and if he is going to let this bill go by, I am not going to stand in the way of the gentleman from Maine. I am not going to block the bill. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] knows it is a subterfuge report, and he sits in his place and lets it pass, I will not stand in the way but will let the burden rest on his shoulders and on the shoulders of his Republican administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the principal function of the minority is to obstruct and object, and hence I refuse to accept the responsibility that the gentleman from Texas should accept himself.

Mr. BLANTON. No; the gentleman is now a confederate in spending the money of the people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State of Maine an amount equal to the unexpended balance of appropriations made by Congress to aid in the construction of a bridge between Kittery, Me., and Portsmouth, N. H., remaining unexpended upon final settlement of contracts made by the United States for the construction of such bridge; but the total payments under this act shall not exceed $35,000.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after the word "bridge," strike out the semicolon, insert a comma, and add the following: "one-half to the State of Maine and one-half to the city of Portsmouth, N. H."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The title was amended.

WAR MINERALS ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15861) to amend section 5 of an act approved March 2, 1919, known as the war minerals act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object; a similar Senate bill having been passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Has the same bill passed once before?

Mr. CRAMTON. A Senate bill has been passed.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, should not a motion be made to lay the House bill on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, House bill 15861 will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT TOWN SITES ON IRRIGATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16082) to authorize the disposition of unplatted portions of Government town sites on irrigation projects under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object to the bill but feel that the suggestion of the department should be complied with as to the form of section 2. If the gentleman will accept an amendment to that effect, I would have no objection to the bill.

Mr. LEAVITT. If the gentleman insists on that we would, of course, have to accept it, but I hope the gentleman will not insist. The fact of the matter is that town sites have been disposed of and the funds allotted, just as is provided in the bill as it now stands, as late as last December. The bill in the form in which it was passed through the committee is in the exact form in which it was prepared in the department after a conference with the water users.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman understands that under the Smith readjustment bill a large sum of Government cost was wiped off the slate, and at best the Government will never play even on this project. The department suggests that this should operate to recoup the Government, and although the matter has been presented to them again since the letter was written to the department on June 23 the department still maintains its position and seems to me to be justified in doing so. Accordingly I would be obliged to insist on the amendment.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, if the gentleman insists, in spite of the fact that in my judgment the act of December 5, 1924, requires the allotment in the manner provided in the bill as it now stands, and certainly, on the Huntley project from which this legislation originated, their contract of January 2, 1927, calls for the same thing, and credit for the sale of town-site land has been given on that project as late as December, 1928, for lots sold at a public sale held in November, 1928. This amendment is an afterthought on the part of the department and steps in on something without checking back on the law and the contract that exists and under which an allocation of these sales proceeds have previously been made.

It seems to me the bill should pass in the form in which it now stands, without question, in view of the law and in view of the contract. I hope the gentleman will not object, because this form of bill was agreed to by the department, and in fact was drawn in the department, and then when it was sent back to them for report somebody had this afterthought, surely, in my judgment, without considering the contract with the project or the law of 1924.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman would rather have it go over to-day without prejudice and present that aspect of it to the department that would be all right. I do not understand that there is a contract in existence that requires this, but I do know that a part of the expense of the Government in the construction of this project has been wiped off the slate and the charges adjusted to what was thought to be fair to the remaining landowners. Now, to take the proceeds of these town lots and further reduce their charges is not anything that they have a right to insist on in equity, and is something that the Government is entitled to receive as a matter of equity.

Mr. LEAVITT. Of course, if the gentleman insists in spite of the fact that in my judgment the contract on this project calls for the allocation, as this bill provides, and that payments of this kind have previously been made, I will have to accept the amendment, but entirely in the hope we can clear the matter up when it goes into conference, and that eventually we will be able to get the bill through in the present proper form.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have read the considerable correspondence about this with the department and there is no mention of any contract provision.

Mr. LEAVITT. I am presenting the position as it is understood by the commissioners of the irrigation district and as they have stated it, giving the names of the acts and the date of the contract, and so on. I will accept the amendment, under protest, in the hope meanwhile we can clear this matter up, and it will be easy to stop it later on.

Mr. CRAMTON. I think that is the best way. The Commissioner of Reclamation says that the amount involved will probably be comparatively insignificant, but some importance attaches to the principle involved. I think the course that the gentleman suggests would be quite desirable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to appraise, and sell, at public auction, to the highest bidder, from time to time, for cash, any or all of the unplatted portions of Government town sites created under the act of April 16, 1906 (34 Stat. p. 116), on any irrigation project constructed under the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. p. 388), or acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto: Provided, That any land so offered for sale and not disposed of may afterwards be sold, at not less than the appraised value, at private sale, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Patents made in pursuance of such sale shall convey all the right, title, and interest of the United States in or to the land so sold.

SEC. 2. The net proceeds of such sales after deducting all expenditures on account of such lands, and the project construction charge, for the irrigable area of the lands so sold where irrigation or drainage works have been constructed or are proposed to be constructed, shall be disposed of as provided in Subsection I of section 4 of the act of December 5, 1924 (43 Stat. p. 672). Where the project construction charge shall not have been fixed at the date of any such sale, same shall be estimated by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. Reclamation funds are authorized to be appropriated for use in defraying the necessary expenses of appraisement and sale of the lands herein authorized to be sold, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as, in his opinion, may be necessary and proper for carrying out the purposes of this act.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a substitute for section 2 of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON: On page 2, after line 6, strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. The net proceeds of such sales after deducting all expenditures on account of such lands, and the project construction charge, for the irrigable area of the land so sold, where irrigation or drainage works have been constructed or proposed to be constructed, shall be covered into the reclamation fund to recoup to that extent the losses sustained by reason of the charges remitted under the act of May 25, 1926 (54 Stat. 636). Where the project construction charge shall not have been fixed at the date of any such sale same shall be estimated by the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the resolution (H. J. Res. 392) to provide for the erection on Government land of a permanent building for the use of the American National Red Cross.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell me what is the question he has in mind?

Mr. SCHAFER. My objection is that it is appropriating $350,000 of the people's money as a contribution to the proposed new Red Cross bulilding, and I am absolutely opposed to that expenditure.

Mr. LUCE. Manifestly, Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on the Library can not meet that statement.

Mr. HUDSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the fact that this is a bill that permits the United States to receive a contribution of $350,000 from other people for a building which the United States will own and control.

Mr. SCHAFER. In answer to the gentleman's statement, I will say that in my judgment we are not justified in expending $350,000 out of the Federal Treasury to erect a building for the American Red Cross any more than we are for the Salvation Army, the Knights of Columbus, the Young Women's Christian Association, the American Legion, or any other similar organization.

Mr. HUDSON. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think the sphere of action of the Red Cross is quasi-governmental and has always been recognized as such.

Mr. HUDSON. And the building is to remain the property of the Government.

Mr. LUCE. Further reserving the right to object, I want to remind the gentleman that the president of the Red Cross is the President of the United States; that all the property occupied by the Red Cross is the property of the United States. The grounds and the buildings thereon belong to the United States. To the building now under construction the Nation has contributed just as is here again proposed. This is the people's money that is in question, but it is also the people's charity. It is the organized force to dispense the philanthropy of the United States. Through this medium the people gladfully and cheerfully take care of the needs brought by the great calamities that result from what we call the act of God. There is no quasi-public function that is more noble, that is more deserving the support of the Government than this right arm to dispense the aid of the people.

If the gentleman desires to delay the matter, that is his right. I regret that any Member of the House should find motives for objecting to this contribution that would even seem to be inconsistent with the high status of this agency of the people for the distribution of their bounty. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill going over without prejudice?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. And I object to the consideration of the bill.

SALE OF POWER ON GRAND VALLEY RECLAMATION PROJECTS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14674) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Grand Valley reclamation project, Colorado.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. I will withhold the objection, but I shall object, because I am not in favor of giving the Power Trust any more rights under unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman please, this is just the opposite. It permits the water users to manufacture and sell power for their own benefit. The Power Trust has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Under this bill will they be permitted to sell the right to develop the power to power companies?

Mr. SMITH. They may sell it to an individual or company for their own benefit.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I want to say that I looked into this matter with the same mind as the gentleman from Wisconsin seems to have, but I think the statement of the gentleman from Idaho can be relied on.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements of the gentleman from Idaho and the gentleman from New York, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MORROW. Reserving the right to object, what river is this?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This is the Grand Valley reclamation project. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill, a similar Senate bill being on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Senate bill.

The Clerk read S. 4710, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever a development of power is necessary for the irrigation of lands under the Grand Valley reclamation project, Colorado, or an opportunity is afforded for the development of power under said project, the Grand Valley Water Users' Association, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for a period of not exceeding 25 years for the sale or development of any surplus power or power privileges in said Grand Valley reclamation project, Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which was prepared by the Interior Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Colorado," at the end of the bill, add the following: "Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall determine the construction and operation of the power canal or canals or any other feature connected therewith will result in seepage or other damage to irrigated lands, he is authorized and directed to include in such contract or contracts provisions and conditions necessary for the prevention of such loss or damage, or to approve agreements between the parties in interest with respect thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The House bill was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DEFENSE ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 450) to amend section 5a of the national defense act, approved June 4, 1920, providing for placing educational orders for equipment, etc., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FOREIGN SERVICE BUILDINGS ACT

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15735) to amend the Foreign Service buildings act, 1926, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is not this the bill that was defeated under suspension of the rules on last consent day?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. What is this bill doing on the calendar?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In view of the fact that it was defeated by the House under suspension of rules, I object to its consideration.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, is this bill properly on the calendar? It was on the calendar last consent day. The Speaker recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PORTER] to suspend the rules and pass the bill. That motion was defeated. That being so, it is tantamount to an objection on the part of the House. Should it be on the Consent Calendar at this point?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As a matter of fact, when a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill is defeated, the bill keeps its place on the calendar just the same.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a letter from the Secretary of War in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object, and ask unanimous consent to insert this letter at this time.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the letter? The bill comes from our committee and I would like to know something about it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will show the letter to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNELL (after examining the letter). Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the letter being inserted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] to insert the letter at this point?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The following is a copy of section 1223 of the Revised Statutes:

Any officer of the Army who accepts or holds any appointment in the Diplomatic or Consular Service of the Government shall be considered as having resigned his place in the Army and it shall be filled as a vacancy.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1929.

HON. JOHN M. MORIN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MORIN: In compliance with your request of February 8, 1929, I am pleased to submit the following views on H. R. 15735, "To amend the Foreign Service buildings act, 1926, as amended."

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to authorize the President, at the request of the Foreign Service Buildings Commission, "to detail such officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Army and the Navy, as in his judgment may be necessary, to the Department of State for duty in connection with the exercise of functions under the provisions of this act, the number so detailed not to exceed 10 on any one project." Provision is then made under sections 10 and 11 of the bill insuring that any military personnel on such detail shall receive their usual pay and allowances and be entitled to compute the periods spent on such service for longevity and retirement in the customary manner. These sections of the bill, in the opinion of the War Department, are adequate to protect the pay, allowances, and longevity service of Army personnel, should they be assigned to duty by the President under the proposed act.

In regard to the probable effect of the proposed legislation, as a whole, very careful study shows that it could hardly fail to prove extremely embarrassing to the War Department in the execution of the duties now required by the national defense act of June 4, 1920, as amended.

It seems to me that the detail of personnel from the Military Establishment to the duty required by the proposed legislation must rest upon two assumptions:

First. That the Government must rely upon the services of military personnel to secure the satisfactory execution of its contracts or construction projects undertaken abroad by the Foreign Service buildings commission, and that by the passage of the act "expert technical personnel will be made immediately available for Government service at a minimum of expense."

Second. That the present strength of the Mililtary Establishment, as fixed by the last War Department appropriations act, and now engaged on duties required by the national defense act of 1920 may be reduced by appreciable quotas for considerable periods, without loss in the economical administration of the Military Establishment and without detriment to the national defense.

Regarding the first assumption I believe that the record of American civil enterprise abroad is such as to refute the idea that we must turn to our Army engineers to secure satisfactory supervision or execution of civil work the Government may undertake abroad. The economy of such expedient is moreover, doubtful, inasmuch as work already intrusted to Army engineers would have to be reduced or deferred in proportion to the number of officers remaining available, or else undertaken by civilian engineers employed at home to replace the engineer officers detailed abroad.

In regard to the second assumption it is my certain belief that the present limited number of Regular officers authorized by current appropriation acts can not be further reduced by the detail of officers to duty outside the Military Establishment without actual loss in administrative economy and without detriment to the activities which the Army is conducing in accord with the provisions of the national defense act of 1920, as amended. These activities include not only the readiness of the Regular Army for service and the training of the large civilian components but the great project of industrial mobilization and the rivers and harbors work of the Corps of Engineers.

The proposed legislation is especially embarrassing to the War Department since it proposes to utilize officers from the staff departments, which with present reduced strengths are endeavoring to serve the Army as a whole in their various specialties and to discharge the other duties required of them by the national defense act.

The Corps of Engineers, a combat as well as a technical branch will consist on June 30, 1929, of 539 officers including the lieutenants to be commissioned from the present class at the Military Academy. This number is less than the 546 officers authorized for the Engineer Corps and is barely sufficient to meet the requirements of the duties imposed by the national defense act, both military and civil, including the most important duties of the corps in connection with rivers and harbors work and industrial mobilization. The same situation, in their different fields, obtains with respect to the Quartermaster Corps and the Finance Department.

Especial mention should, I feel, be made of the proposed legislation in so far as it would permit officers of the Medical Corps of the Army to be detailed to the work of the Foreign Service Buildings Commission. In the report which accompanies H. R. 15735 it is explained that, in certain instances, it would be necessary to provide medical attention for the local personnel employed in construction undertaken abroad by the Foreign Service Buildings Commission. Such attention can be furnished by medical officers of the Army only by reducing the medical attention now furnished the Army, including the medical service, already too limited, now furnished our officers and enlisted men at isolated military posts both in the United States and in the overseas departments. I mention this fact to show the manner in which a project for the use of military officers outside the Military Establishment, however worth while in itself, may yet have most unfortunate consequences if all of its effects are not carefully considered.

For the reasons which have just been discussed, I am unable to favor the passage of the proposed legislation, in so far as the Army is concerned.

If any additional information from the War Department is desired, I shall be pleased to furnish it.

Sincerely yours,

DWIGHT F. DAVIS,
Secretary of War.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near New Martinsville, Wetzel County, W. Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and terminals as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. After the completion of such bridge, as determined by the Secretary of War, either the State of West Virginia, the State of Ohio, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States, within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation or expropriation in accordance with the laws of either of such States governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 20 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation, the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interest in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 5. If such bridge shall be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof or by either of them, as provided in section 4 of this act, and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, to pay an adequate return on the cost thereof, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient to pay the cost of acquiring the bridge and its approaches shall have been so provided such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper repair, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for operating, repairing, and maintaining the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 6. The said S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of West Virginia and Ohio a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and upon request of either of such highway departments shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge, investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge; for the purpose of such investigation the said S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all of the records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 2 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to

S. R. Cox, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute therefor the bill S. 5550, an identical bill, which has already passed the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to purchase a suitable site, provided a suitable site now owned by the Government is not available for the purpose, and to contract for the construction thereon of a building suitable for installation therein of apparatus for use as a constant frequency monitoring radio station, and for the construction of a suitable roadway, power, and communication facilities, at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RETIRED PAY, LIFE SAVING SERVICE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16656) providing for retired pay for certain members of the former Life Saving Service, equivalent to retired pay granted to members of the Coast Guard.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any individual who served in the former Life Saving Service of the United States as a keeper or surfman, and who on account of being so disabled by reason of a wound or injury received or disease contracted in such service in line of duty as to unfit him for the performance of duty was continued upon the rolls of the service for an aggregate period of one year or more under the provisions of section 7 of the act entitled "An act to promote the efficiency of the Life Saving Service and to encourage the saving of life from shipwreck," approved May 4, 1882, and who ceased to be a member of such service on account of such disability, which disability still continues at the time of the enactment of this act, shall, upon making due proof of such facts in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, be entitled, from the date of the enactment of this act, to retired pay at the rate of 75 per cent of the pay he was receiving at the time of his separation from such service. No such individual shall receive a pension under any law of the United States for the same period for which he receives retired pay under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. No agent, attorney, or other person engaged in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting any claim under the provisions of this act shall, directly or indirectly, contract for, demand, receive, or retain for such services in preparing, presenting, or prosecuting such claim a sum greater than $10, which sum shall be payable only on the order of the Secretary of the Treasury; and any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this section, or shall wrongfully withhold from the claimant the whole or any part of retired pay allowed or due such claimant under this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "entitled," strike out the comma and the words "from the date of enactment of this act."

TO IMPROVE EFFICIENCY OF LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16657) to improve the efficiency of the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no particular objection to the items contained in this bill, but I notice it is sort of an omnibus bill. I thought we had gotten away from that system of legislation several years ago.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, of course, as the gentleman states, there are several different items in this bill. While they are important to the Lighthouse Service, they are not of major importance in the general scheme of things, and the Lighthouse Service thought it would expedite matters to put them all in the same bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have no objection to any item, but I do not like the omnibus character of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the consideration of the bill (S. 5179) and that it be substituted in place of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, before that request is granted I would like to explain that the House bill contains two paragraphs which are not in the Senate bill, namely, sections 4 and 5. Section 4 of the House bill provides for the purchase of land for lighthouse depots at Newport, R. I.; Portland, Me.; and Rockland, Me. Section 5 provides for detail of officers in the field service to the offices here in Washington in case of need. I would like, if unanimous consent is granted, to offer an amendment to the Senate bill to add those two sections of the House bill at the end of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the appropriation, "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," shall be available, under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce, for paying the actual and necessary traveling expenses of lighthouse keepers at isolated stations to obtain medical attention.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to pay not exceeding 50 per cent of the cost of paving Mount Elliott Avenue from Wight Street to the Detroit River, Detroit, Mich., said portion being directly in front of the lighthouse depot at Detroit. The appropriation, "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," of the fiscal year in which the work is undertaken shall be available therefor.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized, subject to the consent of the Republic of Panama and suitable diplomatic arrangements for protecting the interests of the United States, to establish and maintain aids to navigation, including the purchase of sites, if necessary, on Jicarita Island and on Morro Puercos in the approaches to the Panama Canal from the Pacific Ocean, said sites belonging to the Republic of Panama.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering a perfecting amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 7, after the word "stations," strike out the words "to obtain" and insert the words "incurred in obtaining."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer as an amendment sections 4 and 5 of the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the Senate bill, after line 11, insert as new matter the following:

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized to purchase the necessary land to be used as sites for lighthouse depots at Newport, R. I., Portland, Me., and Rockland, Me.

"SEC. 5. The Secretary of Commerce may detail superintendents of lighthouses and engineers in the Lighthouse Service to duty at the Bureau of Lighthouses at Washington without change of status."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The House bill was ordered to lie on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INTER-AMERICAN HIGHWAYS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 355) authorizing the appropriation of the sum of $50,000 to enable the Secretary of State to cooperate with the several governments members of the Pan American Union in the undertaking of financing and building an inter-American highway or highways.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I question the propriety of authorizing an appropriation of $50,000 to enable the Secretary of State to cooperate with the several governments members of the Pan American Union in the undertaking of financing and building an inter-American highway or highways. That could contemplate but one purpose, and that would be that the Government of the United States would undertake the financing and the building of highways beyond the borders of the United States.

Now, of, course, the United States very properly will cooperate with members of the Pan American Union in furthering the building of this highway. We will build it in the United States to the border line and encourage them to take it up and build it on farther. But I question the propriety of even undertaking by a resolution of this kind to let it be thought that we are going to enter into the financing of the building of a highway beyond the borders of the United States.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Nothing of the sort is contemplated; it is not proposed for our Government to pay for such roads.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. What is meant, then, by the language, "To cooperate with the several governments members of the Pan American Union in the undertaking of financing and building an inter-American highway or highways"?

Mr. COLE of Iowa. The only thing contemplated by this legislation is that if one of the South or Central American States ask us to furnish them with engineering or other expert advice, we shall furnish it. So far as financing is concerned, that is a matter entirely separate. It is not contemplated that this country will invest out of the United States Treasury a dollar in building a mile of road outside of this country.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I shall have to object unless the language of this preamble be modified. I do not want to see Congress committed even in a remote degree to financing and building a highway outside of the United States.

Mr. HUDSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. It seems to me that the expenditure of this money will be more in the nature of conferences with those States of Latin America respecting the building of these highways than anything else. We have had experience as to the materials used and as to methods, and we can contribute to them a tremendous amount of value in these conferences. The gentleman from Texas realizes, as I do, that the building of highways is, perhaps, the greatest work of civilization.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes. The gentleman from Texas is entirely sympathetic with the building of better highways, but this afternoon we have had a bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to spend nearly a million dollars in the Republic of San Domingo in building a lighthouse.

Mr. HUDSON. I fully realize that that is on a different foundation entirely.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, unless this resolution is changed so as to show that we are not undertaking to finance the building of a public highway in a foreign country, I shall object. I object.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER, N. DAK.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15717) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Stanton, N. Dak.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, at or near Stanton, N. Dak., authorized to be built by Paul Leupp, his heirs, legal representatives, or assigns, by act of Congress approved May 1, 1928, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With committee amendment as follows:

In line 8, after the word "from," strike out the words "the date of approval hereof" and insert in lieu thereof the words "May 1, 1929."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE GRAND CALUMET RIVER, IND.

R. 15718) granting the consent of Congress to the commissioners of the county of Lake, State of Indiana, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River, at or near Lake Street, in the city of Gary, county of Lake, Ind.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the board of commissioners of the county of Lake, State of Indiana, to reconstruct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Grand Calumet River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Lake Street, in the city of Gary, Lake County, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE SOUTH BRANCH OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, AT MOLINE, ILL.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15916) to provide for the construction of a new bridge across the South Branch of the Mississippi River from Sixteenth Street, Moline, Ill., to the east end of the island occupied by the Rock Island Arsenal.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I do not see any report from the Budget Bureau on this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. We have not any report from the Budget Bureau. I have a communication from the commandant on the island.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a bridge across the South Branch of the Mississippi River from Sixteenth Street in the city of Moline, Ill., to the east end of the island occupied by the Rock Island Arsenal, and upon completion of said new bridge he shall cause the existing bridge located at Fifteenth Street in the city of Moline to be entirely removed from the waterway: Provided, That any additional lands or rights of way needed for the construction of said new bridge shall be furnished by local interests without cost to the United States.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, in carrying out the provisions of this act, and to remain available until expended.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "and directed."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

INTERAMERICAN HIGHWAY OR HIGHWAYS

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1192, House Joint Resolution 355.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to 1192 on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the Sixth International Conference of American States by resolution adopted at Habana, on February 7, 1928, intrusted the Pan American Union with the preparation of projects for the construction of an inter-American highway; and

Whereas the governing board of the Pan American Union, acting through the Pan American Confederation for Highway Education, has requested the cooperation of the several Governments, members of the union, in the formulation of such projects; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America, by joint resolution approved May 4, 1928, requested the President to direct the several agencies of the Government to cooperate with the States, members of the Pan American Union, in the preparation of such projects: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000 to enable the Secretary of State to cooperate with the several Governments, members of the Pan American Union, when he shall find that any or all of such States have initiated a request or signified a desire to the Pan American Union to cooperate, in the reconnaissance surveys to develop the facts as to the feasibility of possible routes, the probable cost, the economic service, and such other information as will permit a visualization of the whole undertaking of financing and building an inter-American highway or highways, to be expended upon the order of the Secretary of State, including the additional cost incident to the assignment by the President of personnel in the Government service, as now authorized, additional compensation of such personnel for foreign service, compensation of employees, transportation and subsistence or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary, and such other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Secretary of State in furtherance of the projects described.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, in line 10, after the word "facts," insert the words "and to report to Congress."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on page 2, lines 12 and 13, I move to strike out the language "permit a visualization of the whole undertaking of financing and" and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out "be pertinent to the building."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of Texas: Page 2, beginning in line 12, after the word "will," strike out the words "permit a visualization of the whole undertaking of financing and" and insert in lieu thereof "be pertinent to the building."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the title of the resolution be amended by striking out the words "the undertaking of financing and" and substituting in lieu of the matter stricken out the words "furthering the building of."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the title of the resolution will be so amended.

There was no objection.

The House joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, this resolution (H. J. Res. 355) presents no new problems. In the last session House Joint Resolution 259 dealt with the same subject.

Both resolutions deal with what is known as an "Inter-American highway"—that is, an automobile highway, or highways—which, it is hoped, will ultimately connect up all the countries of the Western Hemisphere from Canada to Patagonia.

The movement for the construction of such a highway had its practical inception as recently as 1924, when a group of engineers from several of the Latin-American Republics visited the United States to study road construction. These distinguished visitors toured the country as far west as Minnesota. They were received by President Coolidge and by Herbert Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce.

As the outcome of that tour, Argentina issued an invitation to all the American Republics to meet in the first Pan American Congress of Highways, which was held at Buenos Aires in 1925. Delegates to this important congress were named by President Coolidge, with Herbert H. Rice, of Detroit, as chairman; Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, under the Department of Agriculture, was one of the engineers who attended the congress.

Another important outgrowth of the tour of the engineers was the formation of the Pan American Confederation for Highway Education, of which Dr. L. S. Rowe, Director General of the Pan American Union, is the titular head and of which Mr. Pyke Johnson, of Washington, D. C., is executive director. Auxiliary boards for such highway education have been organized in at least 10 of the American Republics, and in many others organizations are under way.

Doctor Rowe, who has been conducting the correspondence, told the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in the hearings on this resolution, that the matter is one of widespread and intense interest. This educational movement is so strong that it has become an important factor in Pan American unity. Those who have watched its growth see in it a new dawn of fellowship among the countries of the three Americas, a fellowship not merely of trade but of peace and good will.

The proposed and partially projected inter-American highway was made the subject of discussions in the last Pan American Congress, where it was highly commended. More important action was taken at the International Conference of American States, held at Habana, Cuba, in February, 1928. Not only was the international project indorsed but it was declared to be one of the highest importance for all the countries and peoples concerned. By resolutions of this conference the Pan American Union was intrusted with the preparation of projects for the construction of such a highway and to submit the same to the second Pan American Congress of Highways to be held at Rio de Janeiro this year.

The joint resolution under consideration among other things authorizes an appropriation to enable the Secretary of State, acting for the President, to cooperate with the several governments. This cooperation includes adequate participation in the congress to be held at Rio de Janeiro. It includes also the making of reconnaissance surveys to develop the facts as to the feasibility of possible routes, estimating the probable costs of construction and the economic service of the same, "and such other information as will permit a visualization of the whole undertaking of financing and building" of such inter-American highway.

The authorization is limited in this resolution to an appropriation of $50,000, which is a very modest sum for so great a purpose. The United States is in an advantageous position. No new construction, or special construction of roads, will be called for in this country. We already have a network of hard-surfaced roads, all of which can be connected up with the highway or highways that lead to Laredo, Tex., where the longitudinal road through Mexico will have its beginning.

There is no desire on the part of our Government to claim any special credit for this program. It did not have its origin in Washington. The primary credit belongs to the Latin-American engineers and the special credit to the Government of Argentina, which called the first Pan American Congress of Highways. The present movement had its origin in those two events, and I am sure that we are glad to acknowledge our indebtedness to them, and to do so with the assurance that the Government in Washington will do whatever it can in cooperation with the other governments to bring about the ends sought.

The roads to be built through the republics to the south will be paid for by the countries affected. American capital may be called upon to help finance some of these projects, but that will be done outside of the Government. All that our Government, as such, can do is to give those countries that request it the benefit of our engineering skill and other technical advice and aid. This we should render to the extent requested.

President Coolidge in two messages to Congress, in 1927 and 1928, has urged Congress to render all possible assistance. In the message of 1927 he said that our "desire for improved highways" should not be limited to our own country. He said—it should and does include all the countries of the Western Hemisphere.

He went so far as to say that—private interests should look with favor on all reasonable loans sought by these countries—south of the Rio Grande—to open such main lines of travel.

In his last message to Congress the President assured us that his "view has not changed." He said we should—be ready to contribute from our abundant experience to make their task easier of accomplishment.

And he again expressed the hope that American capital would look with favor on the proposed developments.

President-elect Hoover shares with President Coolidge interest in the inter-American highway. On his recent "good will" tour of the southern republics he made it the subject of many conferences and he alluded to it often in his public addresses. Mr. Hoover is one of the pioneers in this movement. Speaking as an engineer to the Latin-American engineers on their tour of 1925, he said:

For many years—for perhaps half a century—the engineers have carried a dream in their minds that they might some day have a railway from Canada to Tierra del Fuego. That dream is much more likely of realization and is certain of realization through the development of the great new form of transportation by automobile, for through that we will have the extension of our road system to that point where we shall have at last, and in reality, and in not many years, real communication between all the nations of the American Continent.

Both as an engineer and as a President of the United States, he may well covet such an international achievement for the credit of his impending administration.

The "dream" to which Mr. Hoover referred in that speech is as old as Henry Clay, who in every way befriended and defended the southern republics which were then in their formative stages. He rendered so many services to them that his name is still revered among them. Almost a century ago he dreamed of breaking down the barriers between them and between them and us through the construction of an inter-American railroad.

Half a century later the dream was revived in Congress by James G. Blaine, and by others also. Under his leadership a Pan American Congress was held in Washington in 1888, the purpose of which was to further the construction of the Pan American railroad. It is a notable speech in which he welcomed the delegates, he hoped—that at no distant day the railway systems of the north and south will meet upon the Isthmus and connect by land routes the political and commercial capitals of all America.

He expressed the belief that "hearty cooperation, based on hearty confidence," would flow from such intercommunication and would—save all the American states from the burdens and evils which have long and cruelly afflicted the older nations of the world.

But the obstacles were then still too many to overcome. In the meantime a new form of travel and transportation has been developed in the world, the automobile and, associated with it, the airplane. This transportation is not only simpler and cheaper, on the whole, but more direct, and it brings the peoples into closer contacts. The automobile is democracy on wheels.

It will, of course, take many years to complete such an undertaking. But much has already been accomplished, more than is realized. A passable route through Mexico is promised within two or three years. Not only an educational movement but actual work of construction is under way in all of the Central American republics. South of the Isthmus both education and construction are well advanced and are under increasing momentum.

Associated with the proposed and projected automobile road is travel by air. The roads that will carry the motor cars will also serve as markers for airplanes. It will afford landing places in times of trouble and also for refueling. The inter-American highway will serve both forms of travel equally well.

The whole undertaking which will be served by the passage of this resolution is one that appeals to the imagination. It is in many ways the greatest quest of the American republics to-day. When realized, as it will be, it will be a conquest of world significance.

Mr. Pyke Johnson, executive director for the Pan American Confederation of Highway Education, has coined a phrase, "Southward ho," that may be accepted as the slogan for this movement. "Southward ho" will be to our generation what "Westward ho" was to the generations that preceded us.

REGISTRATION OF NURSES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15387) to amend the act of February 9, 1907, entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have two amendments to offer. One is on page 9, line 2. After the period insert the following:

The records and accounts of said board shall be subject to the audit of the auditor of the District of Columbia.

My other amendment is on page 6, line 24. After the period insert—

Any applicant who is denied registration may appeal from the decision of the board to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and the decision of said commissioners shall be final and binding on all parties.

Mr. FISH. I will ask the gentleman from New York before he submits the amendments to take the matter up with the gentleman from Nebraska, who has similar amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to agree on some amendments.

Mr. FISH. I will accept the amendments of either gentleman.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There is no objection on my part.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the amendment of the gentleman provides for an appeal to the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Would it not be better to provide for an appeal to the courts?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Nebraska is going to offer such an amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have an amendment which is acceptable to the gentleman from New York that provides that in the event a nurse is denied registration she may appeal to the courts of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHAFER. I agree with that amendment. I have one further question. I understood the gentleman from New York to state he had an amendment providing that the accounts of the board shall be reviewed by the auditor of the District of Columbia. Would it not be better to provide that the accounts shall be reviewed by the Comptroller General?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think all the District accounts are reviewed by the auditor of the District. I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska if I am right about that?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; in all matters of this kind the accounts are reviewed by the auditor of the District of Columbia and not by the Comptroller General.

Mr. SCHAFER. Would the Comptroller General also have authority to review them?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know.

Mr. O'CONNELL. What is the law on the question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The auditor of the District of Columbia.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Why not follow the law?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is what we are going to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the amendments I propose to offer were prepared by the auditor for the District of Columbia.

Mr. SCHAFER. I want to ask one further question. Has this bill been reported to the House by the unanimous vote of the committee, or has there been objection to the bill in the committee?

Mr. FISH. I understand it is a unanimous report.

Mr. SCHAFER. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read by sections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after June 30, 1929, the act of February 9, 1907, entitled "An act to define the term 'registered nurse' and to provide for the registration of nurses in the District of Columbia," be amended to read as follows:

"That from and after the 30th day of June, 1929, no person shall in the District of Columbia in any manner whatsoever represent herself to be a registered, certified graduate, or trained nurse, or allow herself to be so represented, unless she has been and is registered or is registered by the nurses' examining board in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. The nurses' examining board shall be composed of five members appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. Those persons who are members of the nurses' examining board on June 30, 1929, shall continue to be members of the said board for the remainder of the terms for which they were appointed. The term of each member of said board shall be five years. All appointments shall be made so that the term of one member expires on the 30th day of June of each year. Each vacancy or unexpired term shall be filled by appointment from a list of three nominees submitted to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia by the Graduate Nurses' Association of the District of Columbia. Each nominee shall have had not less than five years' experience in the profession of nursing, be a registered nurse registered in the District of Columbia, and a member of the Graduate Nurses' Association of the District of Columbia. The Graduate Nurses' Association of the District of Columbia shall make such nominations to the said commissioners. No member of said board shall enter upon the discharge of her duties until she has taken oath faithfully and impartially to perform the same; and the said commissioners may remove any member of said board for neglect of duty or for any just cause."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 14, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 3. The nurses' examining board shall meet in the District of Columbia between June 30, 1929, and July 15, 1929, and organize the board in accordance with the provisions of this act, and annually thereafter shall meet in the month of April for the annual organization of the board. At each such organization meeting the board shall elect from its members a president and a vice president, and it shall also appoint an executive secretary of the board, who shall not be a member of the board, but who shall possess the requirements necessary for membership in the board. The secretary-treasurer of the said board who is acting in that capacity on July 1, 1929, for the unexpired term commencing in April, 1929, shall cease to hold office as secretary-treasurer of the board on and after July 1, 1929. The executive secretary shall ex officio act as treasurer of the board and as such shall furnish a bond in the penal sum which shall be fixed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The said board shall adopt such by-laws as it shall deem necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act and may amend such by-laws from time to time at the discretion of said board. The executive secretary shall be required to keep a record of all meetings of the board and also a register of all nurses duly registered or reregistered under this act, and to furnish a certificate of registration or of reregistration to all such nurses; also to maintain a registry of nurses' training schools in the District of Columbia approved by said board. The board shall hold examinations not less frequently than once a year, and notice of each examination shall be given in one daily newspaper published in Washington and in one nursing journal at least 30 days prior to the examination. The executive secretary shall inspect all recognized schools of nursing in the District of Columbia and report to said board as to the sufficiency and quality of training afforded by such schools. The executive secretary may be removed by a majority vote of the said board for neglected duty or any just cause.

SEC. 4. That every nurse desiring to register in the District of Columbia shall make application to the nurses' examining board for examination and registration, and at the time of making such application shall pay to the treasurer of said board $15. Said applicant must furnish satisfactory evidence that she is over 21 years of age or that she will attain the age of 21 years within six months after the date fixed for the necessary examination to be held by said board after the date of such application. Except as otherwise provided in this act, an applicant shall not be registered unless she has passed an examination by the nurses' examining board. No nurse shall be registered in the District of Columbia who has not attained the age of 21 years. Said applicant must also furnish satisfactory evidence of good moral character, and further that she holds a diploma from a training school for nurses which has been registered by the nurses' examining board of the District of Columbia: Provided, however, That no training school shall be registered which does not maintain proper educational standards and give not less than two years' training in a general hospital, or in a special hospital with adequate affiliations, all of which shall be determined by the nurses' examining board.

SEC. 5. That any nurse who is at least 21 years of age and of good moral character and who presents satisfactory evidence that she has, prior to July 1, 1924, graduated from a school of nursing connected with a hospital, and that she has been engaged in nursing in the District of Columbia prior to July 1, 1929, shall be entitled to registration without examination upon payment of the registration fee of $15: Provided, however, That application for such registration must be made on or before June 30, 1932.

SEC. 6. That the nurses' examining board shall have power to register in like manner without examination any graduate or trained nurse registered as a nurse by examination in another State or Territory who holds a diploma from a nurses' training school outside of the District of Columbia which, in the opinion of said board, maintains a standard substantially equivalent to that provided for by this act.

SEC. 7. Each nurse who has been registered in the District of Columbia shall be reregistered each year on the 1st day of July upon application to the executive secretary of said board and the payment of a fee of $1: Provided, That such fee of $1 shall not be payable in case the applicant has been originally registered within the 12 months next preceding the day for reregistration. Application for reregistration may be made within 60 days preceding the day of reregistration. Registration of any nurse who does not thus apply for reregistration for any year shall be automatically canceled as of the beginning of such year. The by-laws adopted by the nurses' examining board shall define the conditions upon which the registration of a nurse may be restored. Schools of nursing in the District of Columbia may apply to said board for registration and, with the exception of schools of nursing maintained at Government expense, shall pay a fee of $25 at the time application is made. Each such school registered shall apply each year for reregistration, and, with the exception of schools of nursing maintained at Government expense, at the same time pay a fee of $25.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 24, after the word "of," strike out "$25" and the period and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$1: Provided further, That on the petition of any applicant to whom registration or reregistration has been denied by the nurses' examining board, the action of the board may be reviewed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on a writ of certiorari subject to appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in the same manner appeals are taken in similar cases."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk continued with the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 8. No person shall file or attempt to file with the nurses' examining board of the District of Columbia any statement, diploma, certificate, credential, or other evidence when she knows, or when she might by reasonable diligence ascertain, that it is false and misleading. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, sitting as a court of equity, may suspend or revoke any certificate issued and any registration effected under this act upon evidence showing to the satisfaction of the court that the registrant has been guilty of misconduct or is professionally incapacitated. Proceedings looking toward the suspension or revocation of a certificate or registration shall be begun by petition filed in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia in the name of the nurses' examining board, or of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, or of the major and superintendent of police of said District, and shall be verified by oath. Proceedings shall be conducted by the United States attorney for the District of Columbia according to the ordinary rules of equity practice and such supplementary rules as said court may deem expedient to carry into effect the purpose and intent of this act. An appeal may be taken from the decision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to the Court of Appeals of said District. Any such appeal on behalf of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia or of the major and superintendent of police of said District may be filed without bond. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia may determine whether a certificate or registration shall be suspended or be revoked, and if such certificate or registration is to be suspended said court may determine the duration of such suspension and the conditions under which said suspension shall terminate.

SEC. 9. That all expenses incident to the execution of the provisions of this act shall be paid from fees collected from registration or reregistration of nurses. The executive secretary of said board may receive a salary to be fixed by said board at its annual organization meeting not to exceed the rate of $250 per month. Each member of the board shall receive a per diem allowance at the rate of $10 per day for each full day such member is actually engaged in the performance of duties as a member of the board. The payment of such per diem allowance shall be made from any unexpended balance in the treasury of said board remaining on June 30 of the year during which the services have been rendered, and if the unexpended balance is insufficient to meet the total amount of such per diem allowance, the rate of compensation shall be reduced to a rate which will permit payment from such unexpended balance. All registration or reregistration fees shall be paid to the treasurer of the board, and shall be paid out under the orders of the board.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. Speaker, I offer another amendment:

The Clerk read as follows.

Page 9, line 2, after the word "board," insert: "That it shall be the duty of the auditor of the District of Columbia to audit the accounts of the Nurses' Examining Board at the end of each fiscal year and make report thereof in writing to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; said auditor to have free access to all books and papers of the board. The Nurses' Examining Board shall make annual report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia containing a statement of moneys received and disbursed and a summary of its official acts during the preceding year."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 10. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment in the workhouse for a period not exceeding 60 days.

SEC. 11. That nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent any person from nursing any other person in the District of Columbia, either gratuitously or for hire: Provided, That such person so nursing shall not represent herself as being a registered, certified, graduate, or trained nurse.

SEC. 12. That the word "she" and the derivatives thereof, wherever they occur in this act, shall be construed so as to include the word "he" and derivatives.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up out of order Calendar No. 1222, S. 5452, to amend the trading with the enemy act so as to extend the time within which claims may be filed with the Alien Property Custodian.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take up out of order S. 5452. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (d) of section 25 of the trading with the enemy act, as amended, is hereby amended by striking out the term "one year" in clause (1) of said subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the term "two years."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—CALL OF CONSENT CALENDAR ON THURSDAY NEXT

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, we have been in session for more than three hours since the House convened to-day and we have not completed more than one-half of the Consent Calendar. I understand that it is the purpose of the Speaker to now give recognition for suspensions, thus leaving half the calendar unfinished. In view of this situation I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday of this present week the Consent Calendar may be called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on Thursday of this week the Consent Calendar may be considered as being in order. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, can we assume then that no other bills on this calendar will be called this afternoon?

Mr. TILSON. It would not be quite safe to give that assurance, because some of the suspensions may not hold out. If they are completed in time, it would be natural for us to go back to the Consent Calendar. However, it is usual that after suspensions no more work is done on the Consent Calendar. It is seldom that we return to this calendar after suspensions are through, but we can not be entirely sure of it.

The SPEAKER. Is it the gentleman's request to continue the calendar from the point left off to-day?

Mr. TILSON. To continue the calendar from the point reached to-day, and that no suspensions be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next it shall be in order to consider the Consent Calendar from the point reached to-day, and that no suspensions shall be in order on that day. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman given consideration to the possibility of a session this evening in view of the fact that we are so near the end of the session? Any bills that could be sent to the Senate to-night would be far ahead of those sent over on Thursday next.

Mr. TILSON. I believe the session next Thursday will serve all purposes. Besides, those who are considering these bills are not prepared to go through the entire calendar this afternoon.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Are we likely to have a session on the Private Calendar?

Mr. TILSON. Not before Thursday. It is not expected that the Private Calendar will be reached before Friday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of the measures to be called up under suspension I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

COLUMBIA BASIN RECLAMATION PROJECT

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1462, which I send to the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1462) providing for the necessary surveys, studies, investigations, and engineering of the Columbia Basin reclamation project, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make such studies, surveys, investigations, and do such engineering as may be necessary to determine the lands that should be embraced within the boundaries of a reclamation project, heretofore commonly known, and hereafter to be known, as the Columbia Basin reclamation project, if authorized and constructed, and to determine definitely, and recommend, the best source of water supply for said lands, and which of the two proposed plans of placing water on said lands, the gravity system or the pumping plan, is the most practicable, feasible, and desirable, and the cost of the same; also to investigate the legal problem of water rights, plans for the settlement and cultivation of the land, and whether farmers on said land will be able to meet the construction costs of the project, and whether the said project is feasible and its construction is desirable at this time. The appropriation of one-half of such sums of money as may be necessary for the aforesaid purposes from time to time is hereby authorized from the reclamation fund, such appropriation to be available only when matched by equal amounts contributed by the State of Washington or by other sources: Provided, That the passage of this act shall not in any respect whatever prejudice, affect, or militate against the rights of the State of Idaho or the State of Montana, or the residents, or the people thereof, touching any matter, or thing, or property, or property interests, relative to the construction of the Columbia Basin project. The Secretary shall report to Congress as soon as practicable, and not later than December 10, 1931, his findings, conclusions, and recommendations regarding such project.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that a moment ago he agreed with the gentleman from Utah to recognize him to demand a second. Has the gentleman consulted the gentleman from Utah?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have conferred with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania to demand a second.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania for 20 minutes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, first I want to emphasize the fact that this is not the adoption of a project. In the briefest possible time I want to give you a picture of the Columbia Basin project.

The Columbia Basin project lies in the central eastern part of the State of Washington.

The land is gently sloping or level.

The soil is from 2 to 50 feet deep.

A part of this land is now dry farmed for wheat growing every second year.

Sagebrush covers several hundred thousand acres.

About half a million acres were homesteaded and farmed many years ago but were abandoned for lack of rainfall. A rainfall of 6 to 8 inches a year will not insure crops.

Deserted cabins, schoolhouses, and churches in profusion fall to decay as mute evidence of blasted hopes, homes, and fortunes.

Many small towns dot the project. Five railroads cross and recross it.

Hundreds of miles of county and State surfaced highways traverse this area.

The climate is mild and salubrious. The growing season is unusually long and favorable.

Abundant water supply is available.

The State of Washington has shown good faith by appropriating $172,500 for surveys and investigations.

Our private citizens have contributed many times that amount in time and money during the past 10 years.

The Congress has appropriated $125,000 for surveys and investigations.

This is a large project. When finally adopted and constructed it must be a success. Every detail must be mastered. It must repay to the United States every dollar expended. For these reasons the Department of the Interior desires further studies, further investigations, further surveys, all of which will require several years. Water controversies must also be adjusted.

Mr. BACON. Can the gentleman tell us what the final cost will be?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I can not yield at this time.

This bill provides for such further investigations. It does nothing more. It does not adopt the project.

The Columbia Basin project will not complicate the farm problem since it will, when approved by Congress, come under cultivation 20 to 40 years from now. Surveys, construction, and settlement of the first unit will require 20 years. When this unit is fully developed we plan to bond it and develop the second unit and later the third and then the fourth. This is not the work of a day nor a decade. We are looking far into the future. But to have the project when we need it and when you need it we must continue the investigations now.

The increased population of the State of Washington could absorb the products of this area.

Our expanding trade across the Pacific will demand many times the production of the Columbia Basin project.

When this area is fully developed the population of the United States will be 60,000,000 more than now. The Columbia Basin project would support but one-sixtieth of this increase.

Mr. Speaker, the development of this vast sagebrush empire of potentially fertile land concerns every State of the Union. Besides furnishing homes for your children and grandchildren it will from the beginning of construction create a great home market for your products.

In the State of Washington we are to-day driving 400,000 of your automobiles.

From New York, Maryland, Ohio, and Illinois we buy a million suits of clothing every year. From Connecticut and Pennsylvania as many hats. From Massachusetts and Missouri and New Jersey 5,000,000 pairs of shoes. Iowa furnishes our breakfast foods and washing machines by the trainload. Paints and farm machinery, tobacco, groceries, and women's wear come from many States. Eastern farmers feed these workmen. And yet history records that some of the greatest statesmen that ever hailed from the Mississippi Valley, New England, and the Southland many times declared in these Halls that the Columbia River country was inaccessible and undesirable. They were thinking of commerce—but distance blinded their eyes. Not a State east of the Rocky Mountains to-day that does not ship carloads or trainloads of its products into our State. This is true of Kansas, of Minnesota, of Maine, of Florida.

Foreign markets are costly to develop and difficult to hold. Home markets once developed are always yours. The Columbia Basin project will be worth $100,000,000 annually to your farms and factories.

President Coolidge says investigations should go forward.

The master of our State grange has often told me he had no objection to surveys.

General Goethals said:

> The Columbia Basin project will add more to the Nation's wealth than the Panama Canal.

Mr. Hoover said:

> I am decidedly in favor of the Columbia Basin project. It is economically sound and timely.

The American Federation of Labor and many other forward-looking organizations strongly indorse the project.

Gentlemen, to-day you will vote for sagebrush, jack rabbits, and stagnation or you will vote for homes, markets, and progress.

Sirs, I appeal to your statesmanship. I beg of you, look to the future and support this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington reserves 13 minutes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to call the attention of the House to this particular bill as untimely, particularly so in view of the fact that we are now engaged or about to become engaged in a plan for the protection of the farmers of the country. I desire also to direct attention to the fact that the cost of this project if we engage in this legislation will run into something over $300,000,000. I do not desire to take up the time of the House myself, except to have a letter read from a farmer in the irrigated section of the country which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read. I had my say on this particular matter in this House on January 23 last.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ABERDEEN, IDAHO, January 30, 1929.

Hon. Mr. MCFADDEN, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I read your objection to bringing any more lands under cultivation by irrigation in the Salt Lake Tribune, January 23. You deserve commendation for taking such a stand.

The farmers' grange and all farmers that are aware of conditions are against any more new irrigation projects at this time. We have land enough now to last us another hundred years.

There is a craze to water more land. I am on the Aberdeen Springfield Canal Co. project; have 40 acres; it is going alkalied from too much water, and that is the case on many irrigated projects. Let them drain the projects they now have.

It is safe to say that not more than one-half of the land on most of the projects is being farmed. Farmers are being solicited from one project to another in the United States and Canada; they are moving from one project to another. We have such productive land and soil, improved seed experts in farming in all its branches, experiment stations, agricultural colleges with all their advice, and farm machinery that we can raise a surplus in any kind of a crop we wish.

Markets are all that we need. The European countries are coming along fast, too, with new methods of farming. Our market is getting smaller in that direction, too. I am very glad that you are taking the stand that you do and wish you success. I was born in New York City 65 years ago, and lived there 42 years until coming out here. I like the West.

Very truly yours,

HERMAN RUPP, Aberdeen, Idaho.

Mr. McFADDEN. I may say in addition that as to this proposal, the National Industrial Conference Board is opposed to any reclamation project at this time. The National Grange and the local granges and other farm organizations all over the country are also opposed to this project. I will say also that there is a provision in the present War Department appropriation bill which authorizes the expenditure of $600,480, out of which $60,000 has been already allotted for surveys similar to this, and this very project is now receiving their attention, so that whatever surveys are being made are being carried on by the Federal Government. Why should also the Department of Interior duplicate what the War Department is doing?

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SELVIG].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. SELVIG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. SELVIG. It is unthinkable, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, for Congress to rush into a tremendous reclamation project at the present time. I know the proponents term the bill (S. 1462) that we are now considering to-day a mere authorization for surveys and investigations, but the real fact is that they have marshaled their forces to hasten the day when actual work will be done on the Columbia Basin reclamation project.

Let us stop and think before this is done. From whence comes this demand? What present or prospective food shortage is so imminent or what prospective food-price level is so high and so attractive that we must rush into this undertaking?

Surely the organized farmers of the State of Washington are not sponsoring this movement. In the face of advice from the United States Department of Agriculture given out on February 15, 1929, in the Agricultural Outlook for 1929, no one can say that there exists a present need or prospective economic necessity for the authorization of this project now.

Throughout this Outlook report there runs one dominant thought, one leading admonition to the country, and that is for the farmers to adjust production to effective demand. "Do not overproduce" is the warning proclaimed.

This advice was so strongly presented and so urgently emphasized that even the Washington Post was constrained to declare that something must be done to remove, if possible, the price-depressing effects of the present surplus production.

I will place in the RECORD here the statement from the Post referred to:

FARM OVERPRODUCTION

Farmers are warned in a statement just issued from the Bureau of Agricultural Economics that there must be no overproduction of crops this year if the present level of gross agricultural income is to be maintained. The bureau cautions against expansion in dairying, raising of cattle, sheep, hogs, and fruit. Reduction of the volume of feed crops and potatoes is advised. Spring-wheat farmers are warned that they should not increase the acreage of hard wheat.

* * * The statement amounts to a notice to the farmer that there is no possible way under present conditions to increase his income. If he extends his acreage, or increases his yield per acre, he is faced with the difficulties of overproduction and consequent falling prices. In other words, the only means the farmer has of protecting himself is by limiting his output, which is no protection at all, because he is thus deprived of profits that he otherwise might realize through increased efficiency.

Under present conditions limitation of production of some crops is absolutely necessary to keep agriculture from demoralization. * * * The situation leaves little encouragement for the agricultural population.

While limitation is necessary as an emergency measure, it can never solve the agricultural problem. * * * It is impossible that agriculture should continue half producing merely because there is no machinery to take care of that part of the crop which is not consumed within the country. What would the manufacturers say to limitation of their output? They make their profits because they are able to operate on a large scale. If the farmer is to have an economic opportunity equal to that of industry, the penalty which is now exacted for increased efficiency, resulting in greater production, must be done away with.

The statement of the bureau, while intended only to assist the farmer in solving his difficult problem, is an eloquent argument for farm relief, and its meaning should be heeded by Congress. A system must be adopted that will dispose of surplus farm products.

In the face of the present surplus production the promoters of the Columbia River reclamation project are now asking us to take the step which would eventually add nearly 2,000,000 of additional acres to our present acreage.

It should not be done.

I am in full agreement with Mr. A. S. Goss, State master of the Washington State grange, that to foster irrigation expansion at this time is little short of a crime against the farmers now on the land and an absolute crime against those who may be induced to go on this land under promises of wealth and independence. Our belief is shared by not less than 95 per cent of the farmers of America, and by many, if not most, of our leading economists.

Nevertheless, if we are wrong—

Says Mr. Goss—

we are willing to be set right. What we ask is what any reasonable man would insist upon if his own private affairs were involved.

We ask that all the facts be ascertained, and that to those best able to obtain them be intrusted the task of doing so. We ask that an economic survey be conducted by the Department of Agriculture designed to develop the fullest possible information as to the prospective need, the chances for successful operation, and the effect of the farmers now on the land, and that no money be spent unless such a survey indicates that the project is economically sound.

Common sense dictates that this procedure be followed. The United States under the leadership of the new administration and the newly elected Congress will grapple with the outstanding problem brought us by the war. The improvement, the rehabilitation of agriculture, can properly be so designated.

Let us not take action to-day which will aggravate this problem. Let us rather, one and all, cooperate in every phase of the solution of the farm problem.

That is what the farmers of the country ask of us. That is what they demand.

To pass this bill to-day would be directly against the farmers' interests. Their authorized spokesmen have so declared. The American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the State of Washington branch of the grange, the special committee of land-grant colleges and universities, all have gone on record against new reclamation projects.

I do not have time to read their declarations, but will place them in the RECORD.

In its resolutions the American Farm Bureau Federation, which met in Chicago December 12, 1928, declared:

We recommend that no new reclamation areas be brought under cultivation at the present time and that the Bureau of Reclamation be transferred to the United States Department of Agriculture, so that correlation may be had between the bringing in of new productive areas and the demand for additional farm crops.

In its resolutions the National Grange, which met in Washington November 23, 1928, adopted the following resolution:

The grange favors the completion of reclamation projects now under construction, especially where farmers have located on such projects and are suffering from an inadequate supply of water. However, we strongly oppose developing any new projects until there is a reasonable indication of the need for larger farm production.

In its report on the agricultural situation the special committee of the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities, which met in Chicago in November, 1927, declared:

Sound national agricultural policy requires that no new reclamation projects be undertaken for a number of years except when international and interstate relationships make national participation imperative.

The business men's commission, which was appointed jointly by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Industrial Conference Board to study the conditions of agriculture and measures for its improvement, well said in its report:

Since farmers are now suffering from overproduction, it seems worse than futile to spend new millions on reclamation projects with the aim of bringing still more land under cultivation.

What facts have been presented by the proponents of this bill which would justify its enactment at this time?

The report on the bill shows that many surveys and investigations have already been made. There will likely come a time when it will be feasible and proper to secure additional information. But to-day and for a number of years to come, as long as our vexed surplus problem is unsolved, the authorization can wait.

If it were necessary to present additional evidence to this body in support of my position, I would refer you to a circular by Commissioner Elwood Mead, of the Bureau of Reclamation, Economic Problems of Reclamation, recently issued. The entire circular is worth reading.

I can only take time to give a few sentences from this study. On page 6, referring to one of the present projects, the report states:

In spite of this potential privilege, even the most active promotion by the Bureau of Reclamation, in cooperation with the local community and the railways, fails to draw settlers to the unimproved lands.

Every one of the projects visited needs more settlers.

Those who are induced to come to the projects and view the lands, although sometimes disposed to buy improved farms, shrink from the labor and hardship involved in developing raw land.

On page 10 Mr. Johnson, discussing economic aspects of certain reclamation projects, suggests a loan fund from the Government as an inducement to secure settlers. In other words, the Government is being urged not only to advance the money required for irrigation but to apply additional stimulants as well to secure settlers.

Let me quote:

The other proposal entails the creation of a loan fund under the reclamation budget to advance improvement loans to settlers on approval of development, the settler putting in his own money along with the borrowed money in approved proportion. Such a loan would be limited to $2,500 and would be a first lien on the improved holding. Together with the $2,000 possessed by the settler, it would offer the minimum capital required for a successful start. It would obviate the years of hardship the settler is now destined to undergo and bring forward the time of full production. It would bring to the projects many valuable farmers who are unwilling to put their families through a prolonged period of inhuman privation.

On page 14 the same Doctor Johnson states fairly the present situation with respect to food production. We can all agree that while the total of the potential competition from the proposed Columbia River Basin is not great, yet it means bringing into production, according to the report, about 1,800,000 acres.

Our big problem is to give our farmers the benefit of the home market for farm products now being produced in this country. Tariff legislation will assist us in doing this.

Adding 1,800,000 acres of land will tend to offset these tariff benefits, to annul them. It will be like going around in a circle—more land, more crops, more stock, a greater surplus, low prices induced by the necessity to dispose of the entire production at the price foreign markets bid for the surplus. American agriculture will never be rehabilitated under such conditions.

Now, let me read what Doctor Johnson states:

When the policy of reclamation was first instituted every economist anticipated a steady and fairly rapid increase in the national and world demand for food. Our own population was increasing at an extraordinary rate through the excess of births over deaths and through unrestricted immigration. In spite of emigration, the population of every country in Europe except France was growing steadily. It appeared, therefore, that both domestic and foreign consumption would put increasing pressure upon our food supplies. A sane national policy seemed to require us to make available for food production such parts of our arid lands as were suitable for irrigation.

To-day the world situation is quite different. We have reduced immigration to a small flow that is almost balanced by emigration, and our birth rate shows a marked tendency to decline. Throughout the country the technique of agriculture is improving and production per man increasing.

It is by no means certain that domestic demand will outrun production on our present area of farm lands in the next half century. The population of our principal foreign customers for agricultural produce—the countries of northwestern Europe—is increasing much less rapidly than it did before the war.

Statisticians assert that within a decade population will be virtually stationary in all Europe north of Italy and west of Poland. At the same time food production in Canada, Australia, and Argentina promises a great expansion.

Let us devote our time and energy, our constructive imagination, our research, and give our aid and support to solving the present, immediate, front-door problems confronting our basic industry—agriculture.

This is the crying need of the hour. I am opposed to this reclamation project at this time and trust that it will be voted down.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to make studies, surveys, and investigations and do such engineering as is necessary to determine the lands which should be embraced within the boundaries of the proposed Columbia River reclamation project, and directs the Secretary to make his report not later than December 10, 1931, and authorizes the appropriation of such sums of money as are necessary to carry out the purposes enumerated in the bill.

The following amounts have already been spent in investigating this project: The State of Washington has spent $172,500. It is said that the citizens of Washington have spent $134,000, and the Federal Government appropriated $100,000 in 1923 and $25,000 in 1926.

While it is true that this bill only authorizes a survey and an investigation, it is well that Members should bear in mind that the real purpose is to ultimately get through a project which would seek to reclaim nearly 2,000,000 acres of land and if carried out will probably ultimately cost the Government half a billion dollars.

At a time when nearly all classes of farming are staggering under the burden of overproduction and when thousands of acres of good farm lands that do not need any irrigation and are situated where there is ample rainfall are being deeded over to loan companies because farmers are no longer able to earn the interest on the loans, is no time to be talking about bringing in, under the stimulus of Government subsidy, other millions of acres of new land. Without one single dollar of Government artificial stimulation, more land will be brought under the plow by the farmers themselves during the next generation than will be needed, if farming is to be a profitable business.

The best students of the farm problem are agreed that since one of the main difficulties of the farmer is overproduction, there should be no new irrigation and reclamation projects authorized by the Federal Government.

In its report on the agricultural situation, the special committee of the Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities, which met in Chicago in November, 1927, declared:

Sound national agricultural policy requires that no new reclamation projects be undertaken for a number of years except when international and interstate relationships make national participation imperative.

And the Business Men's Commission, which was appointed jointly by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Industrial Conference Board to study the condition of agriculture and suggest measures for its improvement, said in its report:

Since farmers are now suffering from overproduction, it seems worse than futile to spend new millions on reclamation projects with the aim of bringing still more land under cultivation.

It is said that organized labor favors this bill. In fact, we have all received letters from William R. Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, urging Congress to pass this bill. Well, with all due respect to him, when did President Green become spokesman for the farmers? What farm organization, representing the real dirt farmers, has asked Congress to enact this bill? Not a single one that I know. On the contrary, some of the leading farm organizations oppose it, as I shall presently show.

I want to have read in my time the statement of a real farm organization upon this project—the statement of Mr. A. S. Goss, the master of the National Grange in the State of Washington, where this project is to be constructed; and I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may now read in my time this statement of Mr. Goss, who is not only the master of the National Grange of the State of Washington, but is a member of the national executive committee of the National Grange of the United States. Some time ago he published an article entitled "Why the Grange Opposes Columbia Basin." This statement is from that article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOT A FARM MOVEMENT

In our opinion, the whole project is not a farm movement, but an enormous real estate scheme. Should an emergency arise, the land can be put under water in 15 years. General Goethals declared it could be completed in 7 years. There is no indication whatever of the need for more crops. On the contrary, there is every indication of the need for the Government to give protection to the farmer now on the land. One of the supporters of the project recently assured us that we need have no fear, for it would be absolutely impossible to settle the project for generations after it was completed. "What we want," he said, "is to get the Government to spend the money here."

[Laughter.]

STOCK ARGUMENT NOT SOUND

The stock argument for the project is that it won't be completed for 20 or 40 years, and we will then need the crops to feed our surplus people. The estimates of increase in population given in the report are not in accord with present trends of birth rates and immigration, but if they were true, the fact remains that when there is some evidence of a food shortage becoming imminent, there will still be plenty of time to complete the project. We are now increasing production on reduced acreages faster than our growth in population. Modern farm practice points to still further increase in production per acre and points definitely toward increased machine production on nonirrigable lands at costs which can not be met by the hand methods necessary to employ on irrigated farms. Economic pressure is daily placing the irrigated farm at a greater disadvantage, and the only thing to bring relief will be materially higher markets which are not in sight.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Goss, who represents a real farm organization, in that article states that this is more of a land-boosting scheme than a plan for the relief of the farmer. To bear that out I want to have read in my time a letter that has been widely sent out by the New Washington Hotel, of Seattle, Wash., advocating this proposition and boosting it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Friends of the Columbia Basin project have consistently supported the Boulder Dam project, believing that it should have the right of way over the Northwest's reclamation project, due to its priority of conception.

The two projects have equal merit, and now that the Boulder Dam project is assured of a successful completion, the educational work necessary for the passing of this bill should be quickly capitalized for the benefit of the next big western project—the Columbia Basin project.

The owners of the New Washington Hotel, in Seattle, operating hotels in Olympia, Tacoma, Bellingham, and having an interest in the new Mount Baker Lodge, as well as engaging in the pulp, canning, and oyster-raising business, have endeavored for the past two years to give favorable publicity to this bill by the use of the map and data on the reverse side of this sheet.

To this end we are addressing this letter to you and asking that you investigate this worthy measure, and we feel sure that you will become a booster and endeavor to hasten it to an early and favorable vote.

Yours very truly,

NEW WASHINGTON HOTEL.
By ADOLPH D. SCHMIDT,
Managing Director.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Yes; of course, if the Federal Government can be induced to spend $250,000,000 on this Columbia Basin project, it will be a big thing for the New Washington Hotel at Seattle, and its chain of hotels at Olympia, Tacoma, Bellingham, and Mount Baker Lodge. Therefore, start the propaganda. "Yes, we put Boulder Dam over by propaganda," says this letter, "now, let us get busy and put the Columbia Basin project over by propaganda." Propaganda? Yes. This Government is fast getting to be a government of propaganda. No wonder the economic position of the farmer is getting harder and harder every day. It is going to continue that way until those who represent him in Congress resist the wiles of propaganda and act upon their own judgment and common sense.

It seems to me that the dictates of good judgment and common sense speak in unmistakable terms against any new reclamation or irrigation project by Government aid or subsidy until there is at least some signs that overproduction of the basic farm products is no longer eminent.

Taking that view of the situation, I shall certainly vote against this pending Senate bill, and I sincerely hope it will be defeated. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania let me have enough time to enable me to finish?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am sorry I have not the time at my disposal, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, this bill in its present form purports to carry a provision for a survey of the economic possibilities of the region to be reclaimed but the language is not broad enough to require the type of survey we should have.

If there is one thing that has been brought home to everyone on the Committee on Agriculture, which has been considering the great problems of agriculture in the past few years, it is that such bills as this should carry a requirement for an economic survey as to the need of any further agricultural lands within the United States. Unless this proposal can be amended so that it shall include a survey of the need of the lands from a national viewpoint, I shall feel compelled personally to oppose it in the interest of agriculture generally. We need less rather than more agricultural lands in the country and will for many years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KETCHAM].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for three and a half minutes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time at my disposal, of course, I shall be able to say just a word or two; but in the first place, may I make this point—that I believe the survey provided for in this legislation is unnecessary. I hold in my hand a survey completed some time ago and published by the Department of the Interior, which survey was made jointly by the Department of the Interior and the authorities at the Washington State College of Agriculture. I am very certain that every Member of the House who might desire to inform himself as to the possibilities and the probabilities in connection with this whole matter, either from the standpoint of the money involved in it or the returns that are to come from it to the settlers who may be persuaded to take up lands there, would be completely satisfied, upon an investigation of this report, coming, as it does, from friendly people, that the project is a very doubtful one, even if it were launched and the real definite work of construction were undertaken. In the second place, I want to indicate to those of you who are interested in the problem of surplus production some facts I have gleaned from this report having a bearing directly upon the surplus production of the country. Taking a very modest and moderate estimate of the lands that might ultimately be brought into production, there would be produced annually 2,800,000 tons of alfalfa, 6,000,000 bushels of wheat, 12,000,000 bushels of oats, 8,000,000 bushels of barley, and 26,000,000 bushels of potatoes, having a value, approximately, of $56,000,000 a year. Those are the potentialities of this great project.

Now, in view of the situation that is confronting us concerning surplus production and the multiplication of machinery in connection with agriculture which, as Mr. Goss has said, has already made it possible, with a declining agricultural population, still further to increase our agricultural production, it seems to me that every man who is viewing this question purely from the standpoint of what is best for American agriculture as a whole will not vote even for a survey because a survey, as everyone understands, is just the beginning of the project itself. If you have any doubt about that all you need to do is to go back one year and read the report of the committee itself which was favorable, not to a survey then but to the launching of the project immediately. When this project was frowned upon by the Budget Bureau, then, of course, the next best thing, namely, a survey, was undertaken. So I make the point that we should not favor this bill because the survey is unnecessary and because the report already made shows that the project is uneconomical. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ARENTZ].

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, this bill does not start any project. It merely carries on the investigations that have been carried on for the past 10 years, and it is no more than right to these people of the entire Northwest that we complete the project we have started investigating. We want to investigate the feasibility, the economic and legal phases of this important project. It starts the development of no project. It does not start a ditch or start a dam; it merely investigates the situation existing as to the water rights in Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Washington, and Oregon. It investigates the economic situation as to whether or not there is a surplus being delivered by the developers of agriculture in the entire Northwest. It goes into the economic phases to determine whether or not this is justifiable, and if it is not justifiable, my friends, I am with all of you in believing that the thing should not be carried on, but I believe that after the investigation has been made we will be in better shape to determine the feasibility of this project than we are at the present time.

I hope this bill passes. I hope you will give this project the thorough investigation, legal, engineering, and economic, that it deserves, and if you do this you will find you have before you conditions that will justify you either in voting for it or against it when it may come up 5 or 10 years hence. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, as has been stated, this is not an adoption bill. The objections to this measure that have been voiced will be met by the investigation for which we are asking at this time.

We are asking for an investigation of the economic phases of this project and the question of whether or not it is desirable at the present time or in the near future to start construction.

I wish I had a little time to go into some of the statements made here by those who have opposed this measure. Our friend, Mr. Goss, has made some statements here, it is true, as read by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK]. It is the first time I have ever heard that Mr. Goss is a dirt farmer, and I want to call your attention to this fact, too. Some of the people who have opposed farm relief heretofore are against this bill. The farmer's trouble in the disposition of his products lies in the lack of proper marketing machinery. It is not so much a question of surpluses as it is a question of controlling the markets of farm products, and the same farm organization represented by Mr. Goss appeared before the Ways and Means Committee and told that committee that we are shipping the surplus into this country and that it was not the surpluses that were produced here that was causing the depression in agriculture, and they are seeking before that committee remedies through tariff rates to shut out the importation of these surpluses.

This bill would carry out and complete the investigation of one of the greatest projects in this country, a project of national concern which would increase the national wealth and bring in, through the completion of this project, productive lands that will be needed in the years to come.

Every economist who has investigated the matter has said it would not come into full production until 1960 if construction were begun now, and by that time we will have 60,000,000 more people in this country, and that this project will not produce one-half of 1 per cent of the increased production we will need at that time to feed the people of our own country.

It is mere camouflage to say that we are going to increase the production of the farming interests of this country beyond the point of absorption by our own people.

Every country on the face of the earth is developing its farm lands. Are we going to stand still in this country and let the Canadian people, the people of the European countries, of the South American countries, and of Australia bring into production their lands to feed the people of the world, while we stand dumb and motionless and make no progress in an agricultural way?

Why, it is absurd on the face of it. I sincerely hope you will support this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. LEAVITT].

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, nearly all of the discussion so far in opposition to the bill has not been on the bill as it is before the House but on the bill as it passed the Senate.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FORT] said he would be forced to oppose the bill unless it contained a provision that would call for an economic study to determine whether or not, considering the entire situation of agriculture, this proposed study should be carried on and completed; and in the bill as it is before the House there is exactly that provision.

There has been written in on page 2, following the end of line 7, these words:

> And also to investigate whether the said project is feasible and its construction is desirable at this time.

This is now included in the bill as we are acting on it this afternoon, and there is also included in the bill as we are now acting on it another amendment, following line 2, on page 2, stating that this is an authorization for an appropriation out of the reclamation fund, such appropriation to be available only when matched by equal amounts contributed by the State of Washington or by other sources.

These things have been written into the bill as it is before you at this time and since it passed the Senate.

Now, as to the opposition of the National Grange, I would like to see that organization for something sometimes instead of always against what is proposed. [Applause.]

Since I have been in the Congress they have opposed the farm measures that have been brought out by the Committee on Agriculture by offering a counterproposal. And now they come before us in a statement gotten out by Mr. Goss, the State master of the State of Washington, a reprint from the Grange News of January 5, that they are opposing this bill unless it contains certain things. They are opposing the Senate bill. They are saying that—

> More important than this—the engineering study—is an economic survey to determine the prospective needs of such an enterprise, the possibility of settling it with farmers who could operate their farms under it successfully, and the effect on the farmers now on the land.

Now, this is exactly what has been written into the House bill, and the only contrary thing that they propose in this statement by Mr. Goss is that the study should be made by the Department of Agriculture rather than the Department of the Interior. But how are we going to take it from the authority of the department that is handling all reclamation matters under our present organization of the bureau?

Mr. CLARKE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVITT. I am sorry.

Mr. CLARKE. So am I. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEAVITT. I will yield if the gentleman has a question; make it brief.

Mr. CLARKE. Whom do you propose shall make this economic survey?

Mr. LEAVITT. It will be made under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CLARKE. That means the organization of the Reclamation Service?

Mr. LEAVITT. Very likely.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you know in the history of all their surveys of that organization ever turning down such a project?

Mr. LEAVITT. Absolutely so. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question, because objection was made on the calendar this afternoon to two such bills, one bill (H. R. 10309), to investigate and determine the feasibility of the construction of an irrigation dam on the Bear River in Wyoming, upon which the Secretary of the Interior made an adverse report, and said:

> No record is available of any investigation made of conditions in this locality. It appears, however, that some years ago certain investigations were made of the so-called Bear Lake project farther down the river in the States of Idaho and Utah.

Then it goes on with an entirely adverse statement.

Then I have here the bill (H. R. 10308) that has to do with a proposed irrigation project on the Greybull River, in the State of Wyoming, in which they make a distinctly adverse report based on a study just such as is being asked for in this particular case.

Mr. CLARKE. I will put in the RECORD my apology.

Mr. LEAVITT. So they can not be charged with always bringing in favorable reports regardless of the proposals put before them.

We have before us this afternoon the one question of whether we are going to complete and supplement the study, already under way, of the engineers. There is no question but the project can be built, and the question is whether it ought to be completed now or whether it is soundly economical to build it at all. This bill merely calls for the completion of an economic study and of the legal situation, and to round up facts already assembled nearly $500,000 has already been spent; $134,000 came out of the people of the State as individuals and organizations, $125,000 out of the Government, $150,000 out of the State of Washington, and the only question now is whether we shall keep faith and complete the study of the project to determine whether it should be built. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, no gentleman who is opposing this bill to-day has voted for more measures for the relief of agriculture in the last few years than have I. I subscribe to the doctrine that the way to make the country prosperous and great is to make each part of it prosperous and great. [Applause.] If there is something in the project for the future of the great Northwest to make it more prosperous, I know my State will share in that prosperity. [Applause.]

This House knows that I have not been one to rush into the indorsement of new reclamation programs, and I am not committed to building this project, but I do submit that when the investigation of a great project has been under way for several years, and communities have put up tens of thousands of dollars for investigation, and are now asking you to authorize an appropriation to match what they are willing to contribute, to spend something for the benefit of their part of the country, I say it is narrow; it is mistaken policy of protection for agriculture to say to that section that we will not let you put up more of your own money for further investigation of this particular project.

The bill has been rounded out so as to safeguard it. It requires the department to report whether it is a feasible project, whether it ought to be built, and the money comes from this community. My friend from Pennsylvania seems to indorse such an investigation by the Army. What in the world does the Army know about investigating irrigation?

Mr. MCFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not yield in my limited time, but I can answer my own question: They do not know anything about it. [Laughter.] This money that the Army spends, every cent of it, comes out of the general funds from the Treasury. Any money that is to be spent under this bill to match the contributions of these people comes from the reclamation fund, a fund made up from the proceeds of the resources of the Western States. So far as competition with existing agriculture is concerned, let me observe that wheat and grain can not be profitably produced on expensive irrigated land. Sugar beets can. We do not produce half our own supply of sugar. Increased beet acreage in irrigated areas of the West means increased demand for proper tariff protection for the beet-sugar industry, and that would mean much to Michigan beet growers. I hope this measure will pass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Washington to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL of Washington) there were 130 ayes and 90 noes.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 136, not voting 119, as follows:

TO CREATE A TENTH JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 16658) to amend sections 116, 118, and 126 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to divide the eighth judicial circuit of the United States, and to create a tenth judicial circuit, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 116 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C. title 28, sec. 211), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 116. There shall be 10 judicial circuits of the United States, constituted as follows:

"First. The first circuit shall include the districts of Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Maine, and Porto Rico.

"Second. The second circuit shall include the districts of Vermont, Connecticut, and New York.

"Third. The third circuit shall include the districts of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware.

"Fourth. The fourth circuit shall include the districts of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

"Fifth. The fifth circuit shall include the districts of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas.

"Sixth. The sixth circuit shall include the districts of Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, and Tennessee.

"Seventh. The seventh circuit shall include the districts of Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin.

"Eighth. The eighth circuit shall include the districts of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, and Arkansas.

"Ninth. The ninth circuit shall include the districts of California, Oregon, Nevada, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Hawaii, and Arizona.

"Tenth. The tenth circuit shall include the districts of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Kansas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico."

SEC. 2. Section 118 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C. title 28, sec. 213; 45 Stat. L. 492; Public No. 664, 70th Cong.), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 118. There shall be in the sixth, seventh, and tenth circuits, respectively, four circuit judges; and in the second and eighth circuits, respectively, five circuit judges; and in each of the other circuits three circuit judges, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each circuit judge shall receive a salary of $12,500 a year, payable monthly. Each circuit judge shall reside within his circuit, and when appointed shall be a resident of the circuit for which he is appointed. The circuit judges in each circuit shall be judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit, and it shall be the duty of each circuit judge in each circuit to sit as one of the judges of the circuit court of appeals in that circuit from time to time according to law. Nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent any circuit judge holding district court or otherwise, as provided by other sections of the Judicial Code."

SEC. 3. Section 126 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C. title 28, sec. 223; U. S. C. Sup. I, title 28, sec. 223), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 126. A term shall be held annually by the circuit courts of appeals in the several judicial circuits at the following places, and at such times as may be fixed by said courts, respectively: In the first circuit, in Boston, and when in its judgment the public interests require in San Juan, P. R.; in the second circuit, in New York; in the third circuit, in Philadelphia; in the fourth circuit, in Richmond and in Asheville, N. ADDRESS OF HON. HAMPTON P. FULMER

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by my colleague [Mr. FULMER] over the radio Saturday night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I herewith insert an address delivered by Hon. HAMPTON P. FULMER of Orangeburg, S. C., over the radio on Saturday evening, February 16.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I have always contended that the Congress of the United States should go very slow in passing legislation seeking to put Government into business or that would tend to set up machinery, boards and commissions to regulate private or public business, but what is the Congress to do when men in business and corporations openly and in a high-handed way, disregard the laws of the land, as well as God, and without regard for legitimate business ethics and the interests of the public? We read much of late, and especially during the recent campaign about the prosperity in the United States. It was shouted near and far over the radio by every campaign speaker of the Republican Party: "Prosperity, prosperity." You can hardly listen in on any of the large broadcasting stations owned and controlled by large corporations without hearing something about prosperity. I admit that there is much prosperity in the United States to-day, but, my friends, it is only in spots, and the recipients of this prosperity are small, well-organized groups—in many instances speculators and gamblers on the stock and produce exchanges.

What about the independent and small banking units of the country? Why, they are gradually being bought up and frozen out. It won't be long before this country will be in line with Canada—just a few mother banks, with thousands of branches all over the country. Every day you note from the press the merging of large banking institutions and the taking over of banks as branches, or opening branches where other banks have gone down. These small groups controlling these large banks and branches will not only in the near future control the finances of the country, the Federal reserve system, but they will be able to control, as they largely do now, the administration in charge of running the Government of the United States. Look what is being done in the way of merging the large automobile corporations, and how they are taking over other small concerns or forcing them out of business. The months will not be many before the large railroad interests will have the large lines merged and will either force out or buy up the short lines, and thereby, under special legislation, at the expense of the shipper, agriculture, and the consumer, will be able to continue fixing freight rates under the Interstate Commerce Commission—a board that seems to be owned and controlled by them—whereby they can extend their prosperity that the old-line roads have been enjoying since the passage of special legislation for them.

Why, my friends, in the last Congress, certain Members of the House tried very hard to put over a bill setting up a rubber corporation, stating that it was the intention to have this rubber corporation function in the interest of consumers of rubber goods so as to protect them from certain rubber combinations in Great Britain, whereas at the time this bill was up for consideration the price of rubber had declined from about $1.10 to 25 cents, and since that time rubber has had further declines, and I think to-day is selling for about 18 cents.

What I really want to speak to you about is the manner in which the speculators and gambling groups are merging, pooling their money and tricks in trade, sending out propaganda in every imaginable manner and form, over the radio and through other channels, that bid fair not only to bring disaster to legitimate business, but untold hardships and poverty to millions of people who invest in bonds and stocks for investment, and to those who have to borrow money for legitimate business and for agricultural needs, both producing and marketing farm products. I want to give you some far-reaching facts as to the above statement, and as to the effect it is having and will have when we allow the speculative and gambling interests, as we have during the past year, and especially during the past several months, to run wild on the exchanges, fixing prices and paper values on stocks, bonds, and agricultural products, regardless of their true value based on their actual values, according to the earnings of the corporations whose stocks and bonds they deal in and on actual supply and demand for farm products.

On February 1, when the first advance was made in rediscounts by the Federal reserve, following the 3½ per cent rate established the previous August in the interest of credit stabilization in Europe, the average price of a list of 75 railroad, public utility, and industrial stocks selected for this argument was 94. On July 10, when the maximum strictures of the Federal reserve on speculation were reached in a 5 per cent rediscount rate, the average price of these 75 issues was 105. It will be noticed that during the interval of over five months, which included the madly ascending markets of March and May and the collapse of June, there had been an increase in the average of only 11 points.

It might appear, therefore, that Wall Street had given heed to the voice of bankers raised against inordinate speculation and concretely hindered by an advance in discounts from 3½ to 5 per cent. But it is to be remembered that this was a period not altogether favorable to the promotion of speculation, for trade was dull in the first quarter of the year, there was a great deal of unemployment, gold was going out rapidly, and election uncertainties were looming on the horizon. The size of brokers' loans then was more seriously considered than it was some months later when they were 40 per cent higher.

If the governors of the Federal reserve had had the power to reverse their policy they would probably have made their discount rate in March 4½ per cent instead of 4 per cent, and that of July at least 5½ per cent and possibly 6 per cent. Some of them freely admit to-day that they were too timid and too fearful of the effect on commercial loans when they established the July figure. There is, however, serious doubt, in view of subsequent manifestations of speculative insanity on the part of the American public, whether a 6 per cent discount rate last summer would have been effective in curbing the market excesses of October and November.

"COOLIDGE" AND "HOOVER" MARKETS

What happened was that following the 5 per cent rate in July and within a period of the most stringent money conditions that the country had witnessed since 1920—call money 12 per cent, time loans 8 per cent—the average price of stocks, which was 94 in February and 105 in July, had risen to 145 at the end of November. It was then higher than ever before with a sheer rise of 125 per cent since the "Coolidge market" began to be later absorbed and overshadowed by the "Hoover market."

From the middle of August to the end of November there was a stock average advance of 37½ points, with a 353,000,000-share turnover.

At the end of 1927 brokers' loans were $3,717,000. In the second week of July they had risen to $4,242,000,000. From then to the first week of December there was a steady rise, growing more rapid as the movement culminated, until loans reached approximately $5,400,000,000, an increase in five months of nearly 30 per cent.

We are told that because of these attractive rates on call money, reaching 12 per cent, lenders of money from every important financial center in Europe have turned their money into these speculative and gambling channels. I admit it has been hard for the banking interest, especially in the South and West, to make money for the past eight years, because of the deplorable condition of agriculture; therefore, with the call money reaching such a high peak, naturally banks in these sections invest their money where demand is rampant, rates high, and income good. This is also true of men who have large savings deposits where they get from 3 to 5 per cent thereon; they draw down their savings and invest them in these stocks and bonds, because of the attractive paper value, as shown by the daily press, and by every conceivable means of propaganda. On one hand, this is a mighty fine business; but there is another side to the picture because of speculation being allowed to run wild, pushing rates on call money as high as 12 per cent. In the first place, as I have stated, it brought about an increase in rediscount rates in the Federal reserve bank, in 1928 over 1927, of about 43 per cent. This increase had to be paid by member banks and passed on or taken from their profits. It is generally understood that the Federal Reserve Board had in mind increasing rates 1 per cent higher, or to 6 per cent, but they were fearful of another 1920 deflation setting in and destroying completely business and finishing agriculture. I want to give you here some interesting figures as given out by John F. Sinclair and others about December 10:

"TWELVE STOCKS SHRINK $1,317,500,000 IN MARKET VALUE WITHIN SIX DAYS

"By John F. Sinclair

"NEW YORK, December 10.—To show more vividly how complete the smash was in Wall Street last week, losses in paper profits of one dozen corporations picked at random from the big board are here given:

National Biscuit	$32,200,000
Chrysler	37,400,000
Anaconda Copper	46,900,000
Kennecott Copper	67,400,000
Du Pont	90,500,000
Montgomery Ward	91,300,000
Consolidated Gas	96,100,000
United States Steel	97,800,000
Sears, Roebuck	120,200,000
Radio Corporation of America	124,400,000
General Electric	137,000,000
General Motors	376,300,000

"These 12 stocks in just five and one-half days shrank in market value $1,317,500,000. This is equal to the assessed valuation of the real estate of Butte, Mont.; Atlanta, Ga.; Birmingham, Ala.; Louisville, Ky.; and New Orleans, La., combined.

"This list of 12 stocks by no means covers any great percentage of the active stocks, but it is a fairly representative list out of the 1,500 traded in on the New York Stock Exchange.

"Has the bottom been reached? Already tens of thousands of market operators have been wiped out. An average drop of another five points would wipe out other thousands of small speculators in all parts of the United States and Canada.

"The bears are jubilant, for it is their first substantial feast in six months."

"STOCK PRICE RALLY SMASHED BY BEARS—EARLY GAINS OF LEADERS ARE WIPED OUT AS SELLING IS RESUMED

"By the Associated Press

"NEW YORK, December 10.—Violent breaks in the high-priced specialties unsettled the stock market again to-day after an opening outburst of strength in which nearly a score issues were elevated $5 to $23 a share.

"Unconfirmed rumors that organized buying support for the stock market had been arranged at a meeting of leading bankers Saturday afternoon started a spectacular rally in prices at the opening in which several issues quickly advanced $5 to $23 a share. Radio, which broke $72 a share in Saturday's brief session, opened $14 a share higher at $310 and rapidly moved up to $314.

"International Harvester, which dropped $61.50 a share on Saturday, opened with a gain of $23 a share. National Tea advanced $10 a share, Victor Talking Machine, $8, American Smelting and Columbia Graphophone, $5 each, Kennecott Copper, $4.62½, General Motors, $4.50, and General Electric, du Pont, International Telephone, American Can, Liquid Carbona and Commercial Solvents recorded initial gains of $2 or more. Montgomery-Ward dropped $4 on the first sale but quickly recovered its loss.

"There was still some evidence of forced liquidation, although there were comparatively few large blocks in the early trading. One block of 12,000 shares of Missouri-Kansas-Texas Railroad common changed hands at $47.87½, a drop of 50 cents.

"According to Wall Street gossip, the meeting of bankers was held at the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., Saturday afternoon, but at the Morgan offices it was said nothing was known of such a meeting. Inquiries among officials of other leading banks also failed to throw any light on such a meeting, but it was pointed out that rumors of "bankers support" invariably crop out after every big crash in prices.

"Although many individuals undoubtedly had taken severe losses in the three days' reaction last week which wiped out billions of dollars in quoted values, no fears were entertained in banking quarters of any important financial casualties. Practically all the leading commission houses had raised their margins on speculative accounts to a minimum of 25 per cent before the crash, and several of the large ones are reported to have raised the average of their margins to close to 40 per cent."

"WESTERN TRADERS HARD HIT BY BREAK IN STOCK PRICES

"Special dispatch to the Star

"NEW YORK, December 10.—With Saturday's decline in the stock market the break in prices which began on November 30, after the high average of the year had been established, equals the only other slump in the market this year—that which occurred last June.

"The force of the selling movement, however, was more violent last week than it was in June, for it took the market from about the end of May to the latter part of June to bring about an average break of nearly 18 points, whereas since this decline started on the last day of November there was an average loss of approximately 17 points.

"This is explained in two ways. First, by the fact that the general average of stocks on November 30 was about 45 points higher than at the end of June, and, second, by the number of people speculating on the last great rise, which has been estimated as at least 50 per cent greater than when the market was in its earlier stages.

"Once more it has been the western public that has had to throw over stocks unless it had the resources to put up additional capital. The heaviest liquidation of the three days last week came from the stock-exchange houses with nation-wide wire systems and those especially active with clients from Chicago west to the Pacific coast. It was this same clientele that was most badly hurt last spring, when the market broke following the collapse in the Giannini bank and investment trust securities."

"FORBES HOLDS STOCKS STILL TOO HIGH

"By R. C. Forbes

"Very harshly it has been brought home to many that they really were suffering from speculative delirium tremens. When the writer sounded the warning, "the higher they rise the harder they fall," he was deluged with ridicule."

"LOW COMMERCIAL PAPER RATES IS AIM OF FEDERAL RESERVE

"Special dispatch to the Star

"NEW YORK, December 21.—The rate for bankers' acceptances yesterday was moved up to about a parity with the Federal reserve rediscount rate. This ordinarily would mean that the rediscount rate also might be raised, for in banking practice a spread of from one-quarter to one-half per cent is generally maintained.

"Between now and the end of December interest rates, not only in New York but in European money markets, are expected to advance sharply. The Bank of England has reported a heavy decline in its reserve ratio, due to withdrawals of gold, which suggested the possibility of an advance in its discount rate above 4½ per cent. This has been talked of for some time, but resisted by influential leaders in the English banking and industrial world. Such an advance would have a tendency to check the loaning of foreign capital in the New York market at the existing high rates."

Is it not high time for Congress to do something to curb these "big boys" who are robbing the public and bid fair to wreck business unless some regulatory measure is passed by the Congress?

Is it fair to put out propaganda that would tend to make the best of us bite, hoping that we may be able to make some easy money, so as to be able to be counted as one of those who are enjoying this prosperity that we hear so much about, which brings about millions of inflation in the way of paper values, only to put out another type of propaganda so as to bear the market and sweep in money invested as well as margins. You note that after they have gotten folks in the sky, and when they are ready for a bear raid, they call for an additional, extra margin from 25 to 40 per cent.

The Federal Reserve Board will tell you to-day that the increasing of rediscount rates was to curb speculation; but because, as stated a few minutes ago, bankers and investors flooding New York with their funds to take advantage of profits offered by these speculators and gamblers, the Federal Reserve Board's action did not seem to have any effect in these transactions. This is a sad situation, because this very money being centralized in New York makes less money available for commercial and agricultural needs, and to-day these lines are suffering as never before for proper financing and at reasonable rates. Business is slowing down and unemployment increasing.

In the next place, because of these high rates on money and the centralizing of the money of the country in New York for speculative purposes, there is quite a slowing down in the splendid building and construction record made in the last few years because of cheap money, and it bids fair to reach a low-record mark in 1929.

In November, according to a national survey, building and construction lines were 14 per cent less than November a year ago, and 9 per cent below last October's record. You will find a 20 per cent decrease in New York in November, 1928, and 35 per cent under two years ago; Chicago, 30 per cent; Los Angeles, more than 60 per cent; San Francisco, 35; and Buffalo, 50 per cent. What does this mean? Unemployment and increases in rents. On December 27 we have this information coming out of New York:

"MONEY STRINGENCY MAY BE PROLONGED—CONTINUED HIGH RATE FOR TIME LOANS IS FACTOR IN SITUATION

"Special dispatch to the Star

"NEW YORK, December 27.—The much-discussed year-end money stringency made its first definite appearance yesterday, when call funds, for the second time this month and, incidentally, for the second time in several years, went to 12 per cent.

"The renewal rate for call loans was announced in the morning as 9 per cent, but calling of loans by the banks took about $25,000,000 out of the market before noon, and thereafter the rate was stepped up, 1 per cent at a time, until it reached 12 per cent, 15 minutes before the close of the securities markets. The rate moved to 10 per cent at 12.13, 11 per cent at 2.19, and 12 per cent at 2.44.

"Time funds were unchanged from Monday's levels, the highest of the current year. Thirty-day funds were quoted at 8¼ bid, while other maturities up to four months were quoted at 7¾ bid. The time-money market, at least so far as 30-day loans was concerned, was a nominal affair, with a very small volume of funds in sight.

"The principal influences making for the tightening of call money are the calling in of loans by corporations in anticipation of first of the year requirements, the reduction of reserves on the part of member banks at the regional reserve institutions as a result of increased currency requirements, and preparations by State and national banks generally for end-of-the-year 'window dressing.' Neither the stock market nor the bond market was affected particularly adversely by the high money rates. From the standpoint of the latter market the most ominous portent in the money situation is the continued high rate charged for time loans. This, it is felt, argues against the probability of an easing of the credit situation after the turn of the year, an eventuality which hitherto had been regarded as foreordained."

We talk about prosperity; where is it? The aggregate value of common and preferred stock during 1921 was only a little over $4,000,000,000, whereas that of listed stocks on November, 1928, had reached above sixty-one billions. In 1924 total capital employed in American investment trusts was less than five millions, but in 1928 the total had grown to exceed eight hundred millions.

Here are some very interesting figures:

Seats on the New York Stock Exchange markets have advanced from $290,000 to $600,000, and are expected to reach the million-dollar mark soon. The transfer of some 100 seats last year yielded over twenty millions to holders thereof. The record will show that one party who bought a seat on these markets in 1872 for $6,000, sold same in November, 1928, for $475,000.

These speculators and gamblers, being well organized and well supplied with money that in many instances should be used in other needful channels, can at will ride the market up or down, extracting from innocent buyers of bonds and stocks and innocent, unorganized speculators scattered all over the country, their hard-earned money, thereby creating much prosperity in the hands of a few, at the expense of the many. These speculators and manipulators not only pool their finances, tricks in trade, but propaganda that is sent out as beautiful bait to catch suckers. Look how successfully they have used the Coolidge and

Hoover boom propaganda between the 1st and 10th of December. See what happened, as stated by Mr. W. S. Cousins:

"BULLS AND BEARS READY FOR BIG STOCK BATTLE

"By W. B. Cousins

"NEW YORK, December 10.—Bulls and bears in Wall Street counted their forces before the opening of the stock market to-day and lined up for the most gigantic battle in the history of big markets.

"It is a battle of big fortunes and skillful manipulation of the stock market against a powerful and determined bear party that has tasted the sweet fruits of victory in one of the most devastating fires of speculative selling that ever swept over the big board.

"PAPER PROFITS WIPED OUT

"In the last three days of last week the bears, by concentrated selling pressure against the inflated and ballooned "blue chips" of the stock market, the high-priced sky-rocketers of the Hoover bull market, have swept away the last vestige of market prestige of the bulls, wiped out hundreds of millions of dollars of paper profits of the small and big traders all over the country, and brought back a common-sense viewpoint to thousands of investors who had firmly believed there was no "roof" to the market's capacity to rise.

"With the ground from under their feet crumbling and sliding, thousands of small traders are blinking to-day and wondering what it is all about; for in three days of selling on the stock exchange the market as a whole and its representative industrial and railroad stocks have been swept back to the price level of the first week in November, before the so-called Hoover market had preened its wings for its sensational aerial fight.

"BOOM COMPLETELY FLATTENED

"Where are their stocks? Where are their profits? What have they to show for the spectacular uprushes in the prices of stocks bought about election time? For answer look at to-day's stock quotations, which show the major results of the Hoover stock boom to have flattened out like a pancake and disappeared like chaff before the high wind.

"Though Radio, around which the bulk of the bull market movement centered, sells to-day about 70 points above the first week in November, the stock has shrunk 124 points from the peak of the boom. Montgomery Ward is back to where it started, having in the meantime skyrocketed 100 points. General Motors, the old bellwether of many a bull campaign, refused to take any part in the Hoover fireworks, and as a result is down 35 points from its selling price in the first week of November.

"Such a combination should make for rising prices in the stock market, and that is exactly what has taken place. The trouble is that prices have been rising much too fast. Manipulated to the last degree by a band of powerful and skillful professional traders, aided by the avarice of a gullible public, which never knows when it has had enough, stock prices rose far above sensible hailing distances of the wealth and earning capacity of the corporations they represented. In the mad scramble for profits the so-called fundamentals were completely overlooked. Nothing mattered except that prices were soaring and would continue to soar.

"THEN COMES MONEY SQUEEZE

"Then came the squeeze in the money market. As everybody knows, ballooning of stock prices can not be accomplished without money. Money for margins, money for the investment trusts, money for the big brokerage houses."

The following editorials written by the editors of the Sumter Daily Item and the Columbia State, two of the best newspapers in my district, will give you valuable information on this subject:

"THE WORLD'S GREATEST GAMBLING HOUSE

"Where does legitimate trading in stocks cease to be legitimate trading and become speculation that merges into wild gambling inimical to the business interests of the country?

"Perhaps there is no practical answer to the question. And perhaps if it were possible to draw a line between 'business' and 'gambling' it would be practically impossible legally to prevent harmful gambling seriously interfering with legitimate trading. Yet it does seem that in a country like this, so devoted to 'business," there should be more protection for the innocent bystander. When people go crazy on land speculation, as they did in Florida, they can not be checked. When the bubble bursts, the speculators themselves are the direct losers, but those in large communities having no part in blowing up the bubbles are also victims. The same is true when a gambling riot occurs on the New York Stock Exchange, but in the latter case the contagion becomes country-wide, ultimate losses are vastly greater than the bursting of even a great land boom, and legitimate business throughout the whole country suffers directly during the period of speculation and from the subsequent reaction.

"Away back in 'the provinces' they catch the gambling fever. Writing from Joplin, Mo., to the Springfield Republican, a correspondent says the workingman 'out here in the Middle West' is having his attention distracted from his every-day duties by the girations of Radio and du Pont. He thinks a country that sat up the Louisiana lottery and that wouldn't countenance a Monte Carlo might regard the New York Stock Exchange as a bit wild. 'In all seriousness,' the writer continues, 'while the stock exchange performs its immense and necessary work in an honorable manner, the unbridled gambling in stocks which has spread over the whole country may easily develop into a demoralizing habit. Better wages, industry, and thrift tend to build up wealth in an even stratum among all the people, but the evil tendency of a lottery is to take from the many to give to the few. It is evident that neither Coolidge and Hoover nor the great industrial leaders ever believed in building one man's fortune upon other men's losses.'

"How does the wild gambling affect legitimate business throughout the country? How does it curtail the development of legitimate business enterprises? In a number of ways and through a number of channels. Tens of thousands of persons with small savings or capital are induced to speculate. They seldom 'go in' until worked up by the 'fever,' so they get in when prices are high and the values largely fictitious. If they bought the stocks outright, the returns therefrom would be small, but these seldom buy except on margin, and they buy at high prices for speculation. They can not protect themselves in reactions and are therefore sold out. Their money is lost to them forever and lost to the business of their communities throughout the country.

"But that is not the main loss to business. Brokers' loans—borrowings mostly 'on call' from banks and other sources, decreased during the week ending December 12 by the substantial figure of $219,000,000, but even with that reduction brokers' loans were $5,175,000,000 or nearly $1,700,000,000 greater than in the corresponding week of 1927. With this huge demand for money on call, interest rates advanced to 10 and even 12 per cent, and the banks of the country, from the 'provinces,' including South Carolina, poured their money into New York by the hundreds of millions. It is still there. Interest rates for money everywhere stiffened. The banks can not be blamed for taking care of themselves. Most of them have had a tough time with their experiences at home. But legitimate business at home does not find banks greedy about accepting their offers of 6 per cent for loans when the banks can get 9 per cent from traders in New York. That condition retards general development and home enterprise. Because of demands for gambling money is given a fictitious value that straight business can not afford to pay.

"But what are we going to do about it?"

NEW MILLIONAIRES—THOUSANDS CREATED BY GAMBLING IN STOCKS

Millionaires have increased from 7,000 in 1914 to between 30,000 and 40,000 in 1928, Carl Snyder, of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, told the American Statistical Association.

"Possibly half or more of these (new millionaires) have been created by the violent debasement in the value of the currency which has taken place since the beginning of the war," he said. "A considerable part of the present number must be due also to the enormous rise in the value of securities since the war and to the colossal manipulation in security values, incomparably the greatest gamble the world has ever known.

"Years of unusual expansion are paid for by lean years of depression and unemployment, often involving widespread suffering.

"When fortunes can be made gambling in pieces of paper, of what attraction are the unique virtues of industry, sobriety, and thrift? These are temporarily thrown into the discard, reluctantly and discontentedly to be resumed when the house of cards has crumbled.

"The apparent gains of prosperity, or at least of booms, are largely illusory and in so far as they are a reality have been, in the past at least, too dearly paid for. Clearly true prosperity—that is, the general diffusion of comfort and well-being among the largest possible number of the population—is not dependent upon inflation and boom."

While thousands of broke speculators were caught in the net and thousands of our farmers are going broke—a great many of them without funds to buy the real necessities of life—let's see about the plans on the part of Wall Street for Christmas, as given by the Associated Press:

"WALL STREET IS PLANNING BIG CHRISTMAS CELEBRATION

"NEW YORK, December 20.—Wall Street expects, and is ready for, a merry Christmas.

"The great wave of speculation in the past few months has left the Street plentifully supplied with money. It is estimated that brokers' commissions will establish a new high record for all time this year, being placed at above $360,000,000, or more than $1,250 a day for each member. To that amount may be added an enormous sum representing the aggregate of extra dividends, paper profits converted into cash, increased salaries as the result of the busiest days in history, and, above all, bonuses.

"Bonus is almost a synonym for Christmas in Wall Street, and especially so this year when most good-hearted bosses will share their profits with employees. The sharing began days ago and the stores in the Street have been somewhat hard pressed to change a plethora of brand new $50 and $100 bills presented by workers who ordinarily present a quarter or a dollar bill to the cashier.

"The aggregate of bonuses alone will run into millions of dollars. Commission houses and other active organizations in the Street have paid as bonuses from 10 to 80 per cent of the year's salary. There have been a few cases where employees, usually those of long service, have received as a bonus a full year's pay. A few houses cling to the old custom of distributing gold coins as Christmas gifts, but most of them find their employees are quite as well satisfied with a crisp bill, especially when it runs into three or four figures.

"Christmas parties are being planned and held in hundreds of the larger offices. There will be, of course, the usual Christmas tree set up in front, song sheets will be passed, bands and choruses will surround it, and the Street will enjoy once again its own carol singing."

Here is some more of our prosperity:

"$250,000,000 EXTRA DIVIDENDS ORDERED—GENERAL MOTORS DIVISION OF $44,500,000 HEADS CHRISTMAS LIST—OIL FIRMS STAND HIGH

"NEW YORK, December 24 (A. P.)—Directors of 450 corporations in the United States played Santa Claus this Christmas, placing in their stockholders' stockings extra dividends totaling more than $250,000,000. Several hundred millions more were distributed in stock dividends, rights for purchase of additional stock and increased dividends.

"General Motors Corporation heads the list with a melon of $44,500,000 in extra dividends. A dozen other corporations have set aside a million and more dollars of their surplus for their shareholders. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., which is a heavy shareholder in General Motors, is paying out $13,452,000, while the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. is distributing $6,000,000.

"The Standard Oil companies are among the heaviest contributors. Standard of California is distributing $6,297,000; Standard of Indiana $2,307,000; Standard of New Jersey $3,039,000; Standard of Kentucky $342,000; and Standard of Nebraska $100,000."

It is my prediction that unless Congress does something to regulate these speculators and gamblers, or some genius who has the welfare of legitimate business and the country at heart can bring about a readjustment in the use of credit which will turn some portion of it to channels where it is most needed, we are headed for one of the most serious economic crises in the history of this great Republic.

BRIDGE BILLS

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many bridge bills on the Consent Calendar, and many of them are for extensions of time for beginning the construction of the bridges. The committee has investigated each individual case and found there were proper reasons for delay and has favorably reported these bills for the extension of the time for one year for beginning the construction of those bridges. I have segregated the bills for the extension of time and now have them ready and wish to ask unanimous consent that they may be read by title, the committee amendments agreed to, and the bills passed. I will say these bills are all in practically the same form approved by the committees of the House and Senate and approved repeatedly in the House and Senate, and as far as I know there is no objection to any of them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, is the Great Falls bridge on that list? I want to be sure.

Mr. DENISON. If it is, it is the last one on the list, and as there is objection to that bill it should be excluded from the list.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know how many of these bills are contained in the gentleman's request?

Mr. DENISON. Quite a number.

Mr. SABATH. How many of these that provide for additional bridges?

Mr. DENISON. These are all bills granting an extension of time to begin the construction of bridges which Congress has already approved.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact there are some people who ask for legislation to construct a bridge and finally they come to the conclusion they need a little more financing, and because of that they delay the construction of the bridge and foreclose other people who are in a better position to construct such bridge or bridges and estop the city or county in getting legislation for the construction of bridges?

Mr. DENISON. I will say to my colleague that is not the case, because none of these bills foreclose anyone else from coming to Congress and asking that permission be granted to build the bridge. Any city or county or State that wants to build a bridge may have a bill filed for that purpose and our committee will favorably report the bill, regardless of any other bill that may have been passed. In other words, no city or county or other public authority is ever prevented from building any bridge merely because a franchise has been granted to other parties to build a bridge at the same location.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bills by numbers.

Mr. DENISON. We want them all printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bills will be considered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] a question. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman from Illinois is very familiar with the bill (H. R. 16920), granting the consent of Congress to E. T. Franks, his successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River approximately midway between the cities of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind. It is really in effect an extension for the construction of a railroad bridge over the Ohio River between the cities of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind. Would the gentleman mind including that in his list?

Mr. DENISON. I made the statement to the House that all of these bills were in the usual form for extension of time. Personally I am not opposed to the bill that the gentleman mentions, but I wish to keep faith with the House and include in my request only strict extension bills.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is not in the usual form. It is an extension in effect.

Mr. DENISON. I have no objection to adding that to the list.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In view of the fact that the bill H. R. 16920 is in effect an extension—and I am sure that the gentleman from Illinois will agree that it is—I ask unanimous consent that that be considered with these other bills here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 16920 be considered along with these other bills. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, what calendar number is that?

Mr. KINCHELOE. It is Consent Calendar No. 658.

Mr. BURTNESS. There is no such number on the Consent Calendar.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then it is on the House Calendar.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to this particular bill, but I have a statement of the bills to be included in the unanimous-consent request made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON], and some of them have adverse reports from the Roads Bureau of the Department of Agriculture. I have been here all afternoon, and I had not been out of the House for 60 seconds before the gentleman made his unanimous-consent request. If the gentleman wants to adopt those tactics, I am not responsible.

Mr. DENISON. These are not new bridge bills. They are bills for extensions of time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is the very time when the irregularities go on. The Roads Bureau in many of these cases say they were against the bridge bill originally and are against the extension.

Mr. DENISON. Our committee takes the position that when bills of this kind are in proper form, or are made so by proper amendments and meet the approval of the House and Senate committees as to policy, we ought to pass the bills, without regard to the views of a subordinate in the Bureau of Roads.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman is a supporter of the administration, he should conform to its wishes.

Mr. DENISON. Well, we think the two committees of the House and Senate represent the views of the administration just as much or more than does any subordinate official in the Bureau of Roads.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Some of these bills are among those that abound in scandal.

Mr. DENISON. I do not want anyone to think I am taking any advantage. I made the request for unanimous consent at the request of many Members of the House and in the usual manner. I did not look to see whether the gentleman from New York was in the Chamber.

Mr. TILSON. Is the gentleman going to object to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky or not?

The SPEAKER. Consent has been given for the consideration of these bills. The question is whether the House will also consent to consider the bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation approximately midway between the cities of Owensboro, Ky., and Rockport, Ind., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is authorized to construct, maintain, and operate such bridge and the necessary approaches thereto as a railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or both, or as a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles, adapted to travel on public highways, or as a combined railroad and highway bridge for all such purposes; and there is hereby conferred upon the said E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. After the completion of such bridge as determined by the Secretary of War, if the same is constructed as a highway bridge only, either the State of Kentucky, the State of Indiana, any public agency or political subdivision of either of such States within or adjoining which any part of such bridge is located, or any two or more of them jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in such bridge and its approaches, and any interest in real property necessary therefor, by purchase or by condemnation, in accordance with the laws of such State governing the acquisition of private property for public purposes by condemnation or expropriation. If at any time after the expiration of 10 years after the completion of such bridge the same is acquired by condemnation or expropriation the amount of damages or compensation to be allowed shall not include good will, going value, or prospective revenues or profits, but shall be limited to the sum of (1) the actual cost of constructing such bridge and its approaches, less a reasonable deduction for actual depreciation in value; (2) the actual cost of acquiring such interests in real property; (3) actual financing and promotion cost, not to exceed 10 per cent of the sum of the cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches and acquiring such interests in real property; and (4) actual expenditures for necessary improvements.

SEC. 4. If such bridge shall at any time be taken over or acquired by the States or public agencies or political subdivisions thereof or by either of them, as provided in section 3 of this act and if tolls are thereafter charged for the use thereof, the rates of toll shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the amount paid therefor including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible under reasonable charges, but within a period of not to exceed 20 years from the date of acquiring the same. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the amount paid for acquiring the bridge and its approaches, the actual expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. If such bridge is constructed as a combined railroad bridge for the passage of railway trains or street cars, and a highway bridge for the passage of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles then the right of purchase and condemnation conferred by this act shall apply to a right of way thereover for the passage without cost of persons, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways; and if the right of purchase or condemnation shall be exercised as to such right of way over the bridge then the measure of damages or compensation to be allowed or paid for such right of way shall be a sum equal to the difference between the actual fair cash value of such bridge determined in accordance with the provisions of section 3 of this act, and what its actual fair cash value so determined would have been if such bridge had been constructed as a railroad bridge only. If the right of purchase or condemnation conferred by this act shall be exercised as to the right of way over such bridge, then that part of the bridge which shall be purchased or condemned and shall be thereafter actually used for the passage of pedestrians, animals, or vehicles, shall be maintained, operated, and kept in repair by the purchaser thereof.

SEC. 6. E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall within 90 days after the completion of such bridge file with the Secretary of War and with the highway departments of the States of Kentucky and Indiana a sworn itemized statement showing the actual original cost of constructing the bridge and its approaches, the actual cost of acquiring any interest in real property necessary therefor, and the actual financing and promotion costs. The Secretary of War may, and at the request of the highway department of either of such States shall, at any time within three years after the completion of such bridge investigate such costs and determine the accuracy and the reasonableness of the costs alleged in the statement of costs so filed, and shall make a finding of the actual and reasonable costs of constructing, financing, and promoting such bridge. For the purpose of such investigation the said E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, shall make available all records in connection with the construction, financing, and promotion thereof. The findings of the Secretary of War as to the reasonable costs of the construction, financing, and promotion of the bridge shall be conclusive for the purposes mentioned in section 3 of this act, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake.

SEC. 7. E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized and empowered to fix and charge just and reasonable tolls for the passage of such bridge of pedestrians, animals, and vehicles adapted to travel on public highways, and the rates so fixed shall be the legal rates until the Secretary of War shall prescribe other rates of toll as provided in the act of March 23, 1906; and if said bridge is constructed as a railroad bridge, or a joint railroad and highway bridge, as provided in this act, the said E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix by contract with any person or corporation desiring to use the same for the passage of railway trains or street cars, or for placing water or gas pipe lines or telephone or telegraph or electric-light or power lines, or for any other such purpose, the terms, conditions, and rates of toll for such use; but, in the absence of such contract, the terms and conditions and rates of toll for such use shall be determined by the Secretary of War as provided in said act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 8. The right to sell, assign, transfer, and mortgage all the rights, powers, and privileges conferred by this act is hereby granted to the said E. T. Franks, his heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, and any corporation to which or any person to whom such rights, powers, and privileges may be sold, assigned, or transferred, or who shall acquire the same by mortgage foreclosure or otherwise, is hereby authorized and empowered to exercise the same as fully as though conferred herein directly upon such corporation or person.

SEC. 9. All contracts made in connection with the construction of the bridge authorized by this act and which shall involve the expenditure of more than $5,000, shall be let by competitive bidding. Such contracts shall be advertised for a reasonable time in some newspaper of general circulation published in the States in which the bridge is located and in the vicinity thereof; sealed bids shall be required, and the contracts shall be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. Verified copies or abstracts of all bids received and of the bid or bids accepted shall be promptly furnished to the highway departments of the States in which such bridge is located. A failure to comply in good faith with the provisions of this section shall render null and void any contract made in violation thereof, and the Secretary of War may, after hearings, order the suspension of all work upon such bridge until the provisions of this section shall have been fully complied with.

SEC. 10. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the committee amendments will be considered as agreed to, the bills just reported engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the agreement the question is on the adoption of the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The House bills were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I demand the third reading of these bills.

The House bills were read a third time by number.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bills.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. I recognize that unanimous consent has been given that these bills should be considered, but do I understand that they should be called up en bloc and passed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands the effect of the consent given.

Mr. SABATH. Was that the request, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. That was exactly the request.

The question was taken, and the bills were passed.

The Senate bill (S. 5066) was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bills were passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WELLER, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

AUSTIN, TEX., February 19, 1929.

Hon. CHARLES G. DAWES,

President of the Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Am directed to transmit the following resolution unanimously adopted by both houses of Texas Legislature:

"Whereas Texas furnished one-twentieth of the men used in active duty during the recent World War; and

"Whereas the units composed of Texans bore their share of the brunt of battle and suffered their share of casualties and disabilities; and

"Whereas there has never been located in Texas any large general hospital of the United States Veterans' Bureau for the treatment of general disabilities incurred in service; and

"Whereas there has never been located in Texas a hospital for the treatment of mental cases; and

"Whereas it is necessary to send Texas boys out of the State to United States Veterans' Bureau hospitals for treatment of such disabilities; and

"Whereas the subcommittee of the Veterans' Committee of the House has recently unfavorably reported the recommendation of Gen. W. T. Hines, Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau, to locate a hospital of 300 beds in Texas, at a cost of $1,200,000; and

"Whereas during each session millions of dollars are spent building hospitals with thousands of beds in other States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the senate (the house of representatives concurring) do hereby memorialize Congress to follow Director Hines's recommendation before adjourning this present session that a general hospital of 300 beds, with a ward for mental cases, be established in Texas, at a cost of $1,200,000; and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the request of the House of Representatives of the State of Texas (the Senate concurring) that a prompt meeting of the full Veterans' Committee of both the House and Senate of Congress be called, and that said recommendation for hospital be favorably reported."

BOB BARKER,
Secretary of Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 2, memorializing Congress for the passage of necessary legislation providing for an increase of the tariff on manganese and related ores

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas during the period following the World War great strides have been made in the development of manganese ore and concentrates, and it appearing that the following features of the manganese industry commended it to tariff consideration, to wit:

1. Importance of the industry from the standpoint of military preparedness.

2. Desirability of the domestic supplies to insure commercial self-sufficiency.

3. Abundant natural resources in the form of low-grade ore reserves.

4. Possibilities of developing larger supplies of high-grade ores.

5. New processes developed for the economical utilization of available resources of both high and low grade material.

6. Definite progress made by virtue of moderate tariff protection during the past six years.

7. Assurance that adequate tariff would enable substantial proportion of domestic requirements to be obtained from domestic mines; and

Whereas it appears that increased tariff protection is necessary to protect and further the development of mineral lands producing manganese or related ores, and especially the lower grade of such ores, and it further appearing that during the past few years and largely during the last three years under tariff protection many processes have been discovered and developed to a commercial stage for the treating, refining, and preparation of said ores, including what is known as the Bradley process, leaching processes, flotation of carbonate ores, magnetic concentration of oxide ores, and magnetic concentration of carbonate ores, calcining and nodulizing processes, and at the present time extensive research and laboratory efforts are now being made looking to the commercial treatment and handling of lower grade manganese and related ores; and

Whereas large sums of capital are necessary to the development of the manganese industry in general and further tariff protection appearing absolutely essential and vital to the further development of said industry, but with adequate protection definitely assured the necessary money appears available, and American brains can and will do the rest; and

Whereas it appearing that the manganese industry needs tariff protection in order to survive and it can not develop untouched resources unless such protection is substantial. It appearing from submitted facts that Russian and other imports can and will jeopardize and possibly destroy American production of manganese and related ores and contents, and further that the present tariff rate upon such ores is wholly inadequate to afford proper protection and encourage future development and research: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation enacting a tariff schedule upon manganese ore or concentrates of all kinds according to the schedule hereinafter set forth as a minimum, and that paragraph 302 of the present law now in force and effect, known as the Fordney-McCumber Act, be amended to read as follows: "Manganese ore or concentrates of all kinds containing less than 10 per cent of metallic manganese shall be admitted free of duty; containing 10 per cent or more of metallic manganese and less than 20 per cent, one-half of 1 cent per pound on the metallic manganese contained therein; containing 20 per cent or more of metallic manganese and less than 25 per cent, 1 cent per pound on the metallic manganese contained therein; containing 25 per cent of metallic manganese or more, 1½ cents per pound on metallic manganese contained therein," and that such schedule be and become immediately effective and operative upon enactment and approval; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to both Houses of the National Congress and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana; also to the Ways and Means Committee of the National Congress and to the Tariff Commission thereof, with the request that they, and each of them, exert every effort within their power to bring about the enactment of such tariff legislation.

Approved by—

J. E. ERICKSON, Governor.

DEWITT & SHOBE

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1839, the bill (S. 5055) for the relief of DeWitt & Shobe, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims. It merely provides for the payment of an item of $8,296, which is just half of the claim as prayed for. It is for extra work done on the river. The bill has been approved by the committee.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$16,592.40" and insert in lieu thereof "$8,296," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to DeWitt & Shobe, of Glasgow, Mo., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $8,296 in full settlement for extra work performed under contract dated May 15, 1912, for revetment work at Providence Bend, Missouri River, for which work the Government has received the benefit, but for which no payment has been made, the facts in this claim being identical with the facts in the case of Fox & Bristol, allowed and paid by the Comptroller General (vol. 21, Comptroller General's Decision, p. 750).

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WORLD PEACE

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I have received two articles, which are entitled "The Way to World Peace" and "Analysis of the Way to World Peace," from a very able and distinguished official of the Government who has received the highest honor for his services.

I ask to have these articles printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I shall offer later an amendment to the Constitution if the committee in its judgment or a majority thereof are of the opinion that this plan is feasible.

Personally, I favored a vote of the people before going into the World War, and advocated that on the public rostrum in my State, and still do not believe we would have had any war if the people could have voted thereon. I am in favor of submitting all questions of such grave importance and all questions which cause any large expenditures of the people's money to a vote of the people themselves, unless in the campaign preceding the election of their Representatives the questions involved should have been an issue or discussed.

There being no objection, the articles were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WAY TO WORLD PEACE

(1) Amend the Constitution of the United States now so as to require that before war can be declared or participated in (except only in the event of attack or invasion), (2) there must be a referendum; (3) that if the majority of the votes cast are for peace, there the matter ends; (4) that if the majority be for war every able-bodied citizen between the ages of 18 and 50 shall be drafted for service, either military or industrial, wherever he or she can be of the most use, and that all profits in excess of 5 per cent received by any person, firm, or corporation from the day war is declared until peace is finally concluded shall be turned over to the Government.

Our best contribution toward world peace ought to consist in making it most difficult for us to become involved in war, and with public opinion consulted in advance and with plans already worked out and well understood for effectually controlling both labor and capital and thereby eliminating the element of sordid self-interest by putting profiteering out of everybody's reach, the possibility of the United States engaging in another war should attain the irreducible minimum consistent with national honor.

Ours is a popular form of government—of the people, by the people, for the people—and the majority is supposed to rule.

If the Nation be at any time in actual danger, its citizens can safely be trusted to rally to its defense, but equally surely may they be relied on not to be suddenly stampeded by ill-considered war enthusiasm.

By amending its own Constitution as outlined and thus setting a practical example which every other nation could—and many, if not all, might—follow, the United States would be taking its place and doing its share toward preserving world peace.

ANALYSIS OF "THE WAY TO WORLD PEACE"

(Numbers keyed to above plan)

(1) If anything is to be done along this line the Constitution must be amended, because a mere statute could be repealed almost overnight.

(2) Capitol objectors will contend that—

A. A referendum would take too long.

B. Emergencies call for very quick action sometimes.

C. And it might not be safe to let the public know all that's going on behind the scenes.

The truth is that—

A. Referendum on who's to be President takes but one day.

B. The only possible emergencies—"attack" and "invasion"—are both specifically excepted.

C. If and when the time comes when the principal can not be taken in his agent's confidence, than it's time to call representative government a farce and quit cold!

(3) It's the people's country, and any Representative who, like yourself, so conspicuously on the prohibition travesty, is willing to subordinate his own personal opinion to his constituents' known, or easily ascertainable, wishes, ought to be glad to get the latest expression of their judgment before making so momentous a decision as to plunge the country into war and thereby condemn the flower of its young manhood to death!

(4) Remove all selfish incentive and nobody will want war.

MERGER OF DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted minority views relative to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations operating in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 1652.

SEC. 2. That in all suits or proceedings that may be instituted under this act in which the United States has been made a party, the process of the court shall be served upon the United States district attorney for the district within which suit may be or may have been instituted, whose duty it shall be to appear and defend the interest of the United States in said real estate.

SEC. 3. After the entry of final judgment or decree by the court in any suit or proceeding in which the United States has been made a party under the provisions of this act pursuant to a finding in the court that a lien exists in favor of the United States the effect of any sale which may thereafter be made by writ of execution or otherwise under the terms of the said judgment or decree, shall be the same, as to the discharge from the property sold of liens and encumbrances, and otherwise howsoever, as shall be provided by the law of the State within which such real estate may be situated in connection with such sales in the courts of that State, and the lien of the United States upon such propery shall be subject to discharge from said property by such sale in the same manner as may be provided by the laws of such State as to other liens of a similar nature, and shall be relegated to the fund provided by such sale, subject only to such other liens and encumbrances as the court may find to be prior to the lien thereto.

SEC. 4. That upon the application of the Attorney General, the court, in which any such suit may be pending, may, for good cause, stay the sale of the property involved under any decree that may be entered in such suit until the expiration of the next succeeding session of Congress.

SEC. 5. That no judgment for costs or other money judgment shall be rendered against the United States in any suit or proceeding which may be instituted under the provisions of this act, nor shall the United States be or become liable for the payment of the costs of any such suit or proceeding or any part thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, Senate bill 5548 will be indefinitely postponed.

RELATIONS BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Karl H. von Wiegand concerning the relations between the United States and Great Britain.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KARL H. VON WIEGAND—"LUDENDORFF FORESEES WAR BETWEEN UNITED STATES AND BRITAIN"—"CONFLICT WITH AMERICA WOULD BRING REVOLUTION IN ITS WAKE IN ENGLAND," SAYS NOTED MILITARY STRATEGIST

By Karl H. von Wiegand, chief foreign correspondent of the Hearst newspapers

MUNICH, February, 1929.—"Wars between nations will end when peoples come to the realization that they are the tools and the fools of the hidden war makers; when the peoples become actually free, when they have shaken off the hidden powers and really govern themselves. Then, and not till then, will there be world peace."

Gen. Erich Ludendorff, ex-war lord and militarist, the brains of the imperial German armies in the world conflict, speaking.

FOR PEACE—"NOT INTERESTED IN WAR," DECLARES LUDENDORFF

I was sitting in the drawing room of his villa on Prince Ludwig Heights, on the outskirts of Munich, where I had sat many times before, chatting with the man who indisputably was one of the greatest figures in the World War—perhaps the greatest strategist in it—who had stood off so large a part of the world, and who only succumbed after America threw its tremendous energy, men, and money into the scale against him.

And this man had turned apostle of peace! Advocate and prophet of rule by the people! I had asked him what he—one of the greatest living experts on armaments and war, who had directed millions of men into battle as an orchestra director leads his orchestra—what he thought of the nervousness in Europe, the increased arming going on on all sides, the chances of war in 1929.

"I am not interested in war or armaments," he answered. "I am interested only in peace, in revealing to the peoples who the war makers are—the 'supernational powers.' Above all, I want to see the German people a free people again."

"Do I understand, General, that you are now against all war?" I asked.

"I am against war," he replied with all the vigor of his dynamic energy. "I can conceive a moral war on two grounds: By an oppressed people for their liberty and independence, in which your American Revolution against the English probably would come, and war in the defense of the preservation of a nation attacked."

Then with great vehemence Ludendorff declared: "Germany's war in the world conflict was a moral war, for we were attacked on all sides and were to be crushed. The Versailles treaty, the outlines of which had been decided upon long before, is ample proof. The plan was for the armies of the east, that is Russia, and the armies of the west, to meet in Berlin. We foiled that." Something of the old military ardor was stirring in Ludendorff.

HOW? HOW? WHAT CHANGED UNITED STATES OPINION OF GERMANY?

"Your entrance into the conflict, America's war against Germany, was a grossly immoral or unmoral war, for you had nothing against us.

"We were known to you as a gentle, industrious, hard-working people and progressive Nation. Your own statistics of the millions of our race that are in the United States show that they are among the most law-abiding, industrious, and thrifty elements in your population.

"How did we suddenly become to you Huns, Boches, beasts, who cut off children's hands, women's breasts, fried out in kettles the bodies of our honored dead and yours on the battle fields?

"I ask you, how could a people with our history and our culture so suddenly be transformed in your eyes into that which we were painted and the American people believed? It was the hidden powers—the secret forces—those forces which make for war and to the unmasking of which I shall devote the rest of my life."

Like a refrain, like the iteration of a man obsessed, came again and again from the great battle conductor—"supernational powers," "hidden forces."

"I know I am called a poor politician. Some say worse things of me. I have gone deep into this subject. I maintain that the greatest enemy of peace are the things politically and in statecraft done in the dark; secret diplomacy, secret pacts made by hidden hands and forces to the peoples invisible.

WAR TO END WAR—TURN GLARE OF PUBLICITY ON ALL DIPLOMACY

"The American people had nothing against the German people, and we certainly had nothing against you. Do you suppose that in the present Anglo-American tension the English people as such want to kill the Americans or make war on you or that the American people want to kill off any of the British?

"Certainly not. In this day and age civilized peoples do not want to make war on one another. Why should they kill one another? Because they are made to see 'red,' so to speak."

"Then your excellency believes in the possibility of war between England and America?" I suggested.

"Possible?" The famous military chieftain raised his eyebrows high. "More possible than war seemed possible between America and Germany years ago. For, between America and Britain, there are undeniable strongly conflicting interests and policies. There were none between America and Germany.

"But one thing the English people and the men behind the scenes in London may be quite certain of, that is war with America will bring revolution in its wake in England no matter what the outcome of the war may be. In the end the sword will be turned against England herself, just as it was with us after we had smashed Russia."

"Then, what is your idea that peace can best be maintained and wars prevented?"

"First. That the people really govern and have their will carried out. Governments of to-day and the democracies as they now exist are deceptions and too often just a mask for those who pull the wires.

"Second. The glaring light of publicity, ruthless publicity, focused on all acts of diplomacy and statecraft.

"Tear away the curtain that conceals the secret powers and hidden forces on the stage of secret diplomacy, secret lodges, secret statecraft. Drag out into the light the war makers and let the people see them!

"Why did Chamberlain and Briand make their Anglo-French naval pact in secrecy? If its intent was good, why should it have been secret? Both are representatives of so-called democratic systems where people live in the illusion that they govern themselves.

"Was Chamberlain carrying out the will of the British people when he made that pact obviously directed against America on the one hand and Germany on the other?

"Judging from the storm it raised in England, one must conclude that he was not and could not be, since the people knew nothing about it. Then whose will was he carrying out? Who are the hidden forces behind that pact?

"The act of the Hearst newspapers in dragging that secret naval pact into public light was promptly followed by popular repudiation in England. That was a spendid journalistic achievement in the interest of peace.

"Why, if they are but carrying out the will of their peoples, must Stresemann, Briand, and Chamberlain meet in secret behind closed doors in Geneva, Lugano, or elsewhere? If they are carrying out the will of the peoples, why may those peoples not know what their representatives are doing? And if they are not carrying out the will of the peoples who elected them, then whose will are they carrying out?"

"What is your view of possible great events in the new year?" I asked.

"I greet every new year with welcome, for it will mean another year in which the peoples will learn to think more. The more they think the more they will realize how they are being deceived, made tools and fools of."

"That sounds very revolutionary, General."

"I do not want the shedding of blood. But if a people arise as one man there will be no bloodshed. Those who have deceived and exploited the people will run for their holes and be glad to get away.

"Rumania is an example of what I mean when a nation is ripe for throwing off the yoke that is on the people. There was no bloodshed when Maniu so splendidly and peaceably overthrew the régime there. So it will come in other countries, too. First, we must learn to think differently. That is hard. It takes time."

"Do you think the coming year will bring war?"

"War against Russia is in the foreground of the hidden powers. Externally they are seen in certain elements in France and England. But we will prevent it; we will prevent it." The last he added with great vehemence.

"But, General"——

"Yes; I know what you are going to say—that you are amazed and that I myself told you I wanted war with Russia and would be willing to help.

"That was in 1920. I did not know then what I know now. At that time I wanted to stop the butcheries going on in Russia. To-day I know that Russian peasants would be no less oppressed by a change in Moscow and not be made free by a war.

"Advantage would be taken by France of such a war to make Germany the battle ground, at least through which her armies would march. Every drop of German blood shed in a war against Russia would be deeply deplorable. It must be prevented. It will be prevented." (Copyright, 1929, by New York American.)

IN ROMAN BONDAGE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Fellowship Forum entitled "In Roman Bondage," with relation to the agreement recently entered into between the Vatican and Mussolini.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Fellowship Forum, February 16, 1929]

IN ROMAN BONDAGE

The agreement expected for several months between the Vatican and Premier Mussolini has at last been reached and the Pope, so long known as the "prisoner of the Vatican," steps forth a temporal ruler. No longer is he merely a spiritual ruler, the head of an ecclesiastical body, but he is the ruling sovereign of an independent, autonomous state, with power to levy taxes, maintain an army, establish a postal system, coin money, make laws, and exercise all of those powers and enjoy all of the rights which belong to any other sovereign ruler.

By a stroke of the pen, Mussolini and the Pope's Secretary of State, acting for their respective governments—for the Vatican state must now be considered as such—undo all that the first Victor Emanuel, Garibaldi, and their heroes wrought more than a half century ago. By a stroke of the pen the Vatican state, abolished in 1870, is re-created, the Pope, instead of being a prisoner, becomes an earthly king, and the Italian people are reduced to slavery, for under the agreement which has been reached, under the arrangements which have been effected by the Pope and Mussolini, liberty in Italy is now a memory. With Mussolini a dictator in civil matters and the Pope absolute in affairs spiritual, the people of Italy are subjected to a bondage as absolute as the world has ever known—because not only their bodies but their souls, under the Roman theory, are the property of the Italian state and the ruler in the Vatican.

Judging from the unofficial version of the agreement between the Pope and the Fascist Government, the most far-reaching feature contained therein is the application of canon law to the Kingdom of Italy. Acceptance of this law is in direct opposition to the principle proclaimed and maintained by the Italian liberators who accomplished the unification of Italy in 1870. It is so terrible a thing from the viewpoint of American people, who believe that men are created free and equal, and that under the law all men are on the same level and shall be accorded equal and exact justice, that we believe few appreciate just what it means.

Under the acceptance of canon law by the Kingdom of Italy, civil laws in that Kingdom will be modified to conform with Roman church law. Under this law, ecclesiastics will be amenable only to the church law. Since the unification of Italy and her liberty from papal thralldom, the priests have been in the eyes of the law just as laymen. If they were accused of crime, they were treated as other human beings. Now, under canon law, the civil authorities may not arrest priests or cause them to be tried in the civil courts as common men. The civil authorities may only report such offenses to the priest's bishop. In case of arrest, a priest, instead of being placed in jail, must be detained separately. If convicted, he will not have to serve in a common jail, but may be placed in a monastery or, in case of a woman, in a convent. Moreover, the full power of the civil government may be invoked by the church to enforce its decrees, and especially will this be true in the case of a priest who has been deprived of his robe. Moreover, the priesthood are exempt from any form of military service, except that in case of war they may be employed as chaplains or in the Red Cross. Other measures of the canon law include severe rules against and penalties for heresy, simony, blasphemy, and sacrilege.

Thus we are to see in Italy what life is to be as actually lived under Roman Catholic dominance. We have heard protestations on the part of Romanists that the church does not seek temporal power—that it merely wishes to have its claim to temporal authority admitted, but has no disposition to employ it. In Italy the lie is given to-day to that false protestation. We are to see what conditions in America would be were America a Roman Catholic nation. We are to see in Italy a people reduced to absolute slavery, more complete than the mere bondage of the body, because it is at the same time a bondage of the soul. We are to see the Roman Catholic Church with power over the everyday life of human beings, with control of the schools, with men told what they may think as well as do, what they may believe, what they must reject, and how they must worship.

We are going to see a small army of ambassadors go out from Rome, representing the Pope, empowered to negotiate treaties, and demanding recognition for their master just as a representative of the King of England expects recognition by other governments of the independence and the sovereignty of the British people. And that question is going, sooner or later, to be put up to the American people through its chosen officials. Undoubtedly, it is an issue Mr. Hoover will have to face in his administration, soon to begin. The time is not far distant when a representative of the Pope will come knocking at the doors of the White House, seeking recognition of the temporal authority of the Roman Pope. Pressure, strong pressure, will be brought to bear upon the new administration to send a representative of the American people to the Vatican.

It is regrettable, but true, that this issue is soon to be before this Government. We trust that the chosen representative of the people will have the courage to meet it squarely and settle it in the only way it can be settled if the wishes of the American people are to govern. In America, religious freedom is a priceless possession. Under the Constitution, there can be nothing else, and in harmony with the spirit of that Constitution, the American Government can have no diplomatic negotiations with any church power.

To Catholicize America is the wish dearest to the heart of the Pope of Rome, now that his status as an earthly ruler has been recognized. Such recognition he no doubt regards as a step toward the Romanization of the world, including America, and it would be part of the duty of a papal ambassador to Washington to further the church's cause in America. Establishment of diplomatic relations between Washington and the Vatican would be but a step toward the ultimate goal. The people of the United States will resent such step being taken. We want no supergovernment here, spiritual or otherwise, and we want no government that places its priesthood on another plane than other men. Of what clay are priests made that they are above and outside the law? If a priest commits a murder—or a worse crime—why should he be confined to a monastery, which to them is a sort of heaven on earth, while common men must enter a prison or mount a scaffold? In America we respect the ministry, but under the law all men are equal, whether they serve in the pulpit, in shop, in field, or in factory, and nothing will be tolerated that will make for any degree of distinction under the law.

What has happened in Rome may truly be called the rape of the Italian people. The freedom for which Garibaldi and his famous band fought has vanished like mist before the morning sun.

PROPOSED UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President I present a proposed unanimous-consent agreement for a meeting Monday night, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That on Monday, February 25, 1929, at not later than 6 o'clock p. m., the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock

p. m., and that at the evening session, which shall not continue later than 11 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 11725, an act for the reapportionment of representation in Congress.

Mr. BLEASE. I object.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kansas when we may expect a call of the calendar for unobjected bills?

Mr. CURTIS. After to-night's session I am going to see if I can not arrange, to-morrow or the next day, for an evening session on unobjected bills.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend the national prohibition act as amended and supplemented, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. JONES to insert at the end of section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, yesterday I took occasion to call attention briefly to the shocking conditions as respects temperance which exist in the State of Idaho, and I am sure that any Member of the Senate who followed me when I was speaking will find it difficult to understand how the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in view of those conditions, could think of any method of handling liquor abuses worse than prohibition.

I now desire to follow up what I then said by a brief reference to an article which appeared in the New York Herald-Tribune of Saturday, July 24, 1926, headed "Idaho Drowns Dry Problem in New Moonshine." Among other things, the writer of that article states:

The Federal judge in Idaho asserted that the cases involving liquor that come before him for adjudication exceed all the other combined cases. It may be sufficient from the actual statistical phase to point out that the Federal forces seized 102 stills in dry Idaho in the period between September 1 of last year and June 1 of this year. All of which should be considered in connection with the fact that the 1920 census gives Idaho slightly more than 430,000 inhabitants. If the number of captured stills represents, as Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, the prohibition chief, says, but 10 per cent of the number in existence, Idaho has a still for every 400 inhabitants within its borders.

That is to say, just about the same number that the State of South Carolina has.

LIQUOR AVAILABLE EVERYWHERE

So much for the figures; they give but a lame suggestion of the actual situation. The fact is, as the officials themselves will tell you, liquors of various qualities are accessible to those who desire them in any town or hamlet of the State. For those who have a penchant for the outdoor fresh and green variety, the mountain sides and river banks fairly teem with fermenting vats and steaming cauldrons.

And so on. If there be no objection, I ask leave of the Senate that the entire article may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

[From New York Herald Tribune, Saturday, July 24, 1926]

IDAHO DROWNS DRY PROBLEM IN MOONSHINE—BORAH'S STATE SHOWS NEITHER DISAPPROVAL NOR RESENTMENT OVER PROHIBITION AS FLOW IS STEADY—HARD CIDER CHOICE OF MANY FARMERS—CITIZENS BOAST OF SUNSHINE 365 DAYS IN YEAR, MOONSHINE 365 NIGHTS

(This is the seventh article of a series by a Herald Tribune reporter who investigated liquor conditions in the Western States. It deals with the situation in Idaho.)

By M. Jay Racusin

(Copyright, 1926, New York Tribune, Inc.)

BOISE, IDAHO, July 11.—The stranger alighting at Boise, the capital of Idaho, is at once struck with a noticeable air of pride and contentment about its people. This, it has been humorously said here, is attributable to two things: The exquisite beauty of their railroad station and the extraordinary quality of their moonshine. The station is the idea of Calvin Cobb, publisher, and one of Idaho's most esteemed citizens. Their moonshine is the fine handicraft of a Tennessean who brews this highly prized liquid in the mountain environs of the town of Mackay, from which it derived its celebrated name.

In consequence of the widespread and thorough approval of this beverage and sundry other delectable liquors, one is informed there is no prohibition problem in Idaho, because the inhabitants settled the question to their complete satisfaction some time ago. The people appear to have all the intoxicants they want. What they do not obtain through purchase they manufacture themselves, and I am reliably told there are more making than buying.

ATTEND TO OWN BUSINESS

There is no mystery, then, about the general apathy toward the liquor question met with in this State on every hand. The people show neither resentment nor excitement about it from any point of view. They tell me that in Idaho they have a habit of minding their own business, and hope the enforcement officials mind theirs.

It is not surprising, then, to learn that here, indeed, in the home State of United States Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH, prohibition has passed out of the conversation of the inhabitants, because, as I have seen, it has ceased to trouble them. Nor has it ever figured in any of the State's internal political conflicts, nor is it, I am advised, ever likely to. It is noteworthy that no national representative of the people of this community has ever been clothed with the opinion of a constituency on this point.

DRINKS OF HIGH QUALITY

Idahoans, like Coloradoans, will tell you at once that you are in the driest of dry deserts, alcoholically speaking, but the beverages offered one immediately thereafter are immeasurably superior to the Coloradoan product, both as to quantity and quality. It is true that Idaho has a severe dry law and is as helpless in enforcing it as are Iowa and Colorado and Kansas and any number of other States, because of utter lack of State agencies. It is true, too, that Idaho has a very wet palate. The one seems to be a concession to a certain mass psychology, the other a surrender to a genuine appetite.

A prominent person in the capital confided to me that if Idaho was in fact dry, the New Yorkers must be traveling down Broadway in steamboats. It was common knowledge, he said, that Idaho had sunshine 365 days in the year and moonshine 365 nights.

The statistics one could bring to bear on the situation in this State have been offered me by officials with the warning that, although impressive enough in their cold sort of way, they scarcely present the lively picture of Idaho's drinking propensities. I shall permit these officials whose duties revolve about the liquor problem to fill in the deep coloring of the scene with their own observations.

Perhaps it is striking enough to learn that the Federal judicial machinery in the State handles from 400 to 500 liquor cases a year and that the number has been increasing about 50 cases annually. In the 6-month period from January 1 of this year to July 1, I am told that the 10 agents of the Federal enforcement squad here made 367 arrests for various violations of the Volstead Act, mainly touching on the conduct of stills and the transportation of liquors. In addition to this, these agents turned over for prosecution in the State courts in the same period 250 more cases.

What the harvest of the county authorities amounts to can only be conjectured; an idea may be gleaned from the books of the sheriff of Ada County, containing the capital, which show that out of 213 arrests for all causes since the first of the year to July 1, 111 revolved about the liquor traffic, or more than half. There are 44 counties in the State.

The Federal judge in Idaho asserted that the cases involving liquor that come before him for adjudication exceed all the other combined cases. It may be sufficient from the actual statistical phase to point out that the Federal forces seized 102 stills in dry Idaho in the period between September 1 of last year and June 1 of this year. All of which should be considered in connection with the fact that the 1920 census gives Idaho slightly more than 430,000 inhabitants. If the number of captured stills represents, as Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, the prohibition chief, says, but 10 per cent of the number in existence, Idaho has a still for every 400 inhabitants within its borders.

LIQUOR AVAILABLE EVERYWHERE

So much for the figures; they give but a lame suggestion of the actual situation. The fact is, as the officials themselves will tell you, liquors of various qualities are accessible to those who desire them in any town or hamlet of the State. For those who have a penchant for the outdoor fresh and green variety, the mountain sides and river banks fairly teem with fermenting vats and steaming cauldrons. The farm house on the plains often houses a still and the old homestead often quakes with the glee of those who gather there to taste of its illicit concoctions.

The output of the renowned Mackay moonshine boilers is found and praised wherever one goes, while hardly less esteemed for its aged qualities is the Jarbridge stock from a neighboring State. Bootleggers abound in city and village and limousine and truck stand ready to disgorge any quantity of potent beverage for pantry shelf or pocket flask.

For those of a more discriminating taste, who desire stocks of a dependable quality, the 60-mile Canadian border is within easy reach, and caravans of authentic rye, Scotch, and wine wind nightly down from British Columbia, destined for those who can offer sufficient coin.

The thirst of these Idahoans, however, is slaked from other sources. There is home-brew aplenty and wines—prune wine, fig wine, cherry wine, grape wine, raisin wine, dandelion wine, rhubarb wine, and wine of whatnot—crowding master moonshine mighty close for first illicit honors in many homes.

And there are revivals of beverages that had their day of glory while Queen Victoria yet lived—root beers and ginger mixtures. In those days they were as harmless and proper as the good queen herself, but now they are being given a new kind of life and are kicking in tune with the Idaho times.

And there are lively scenes about the windows and shops of the grocers and hardware dealers, who, touched with the tippling pulse of their neighbors, offer great stocks of malt and extracts of this and that and hops and bottles and caps and cappers and boilers and cookers and spigots and all the varied apparatus without which no brewery is complete.

The constant display of these goods is said to be putting ideas into the heads of many people who never before dreamed of going in for home-brewing, so that the quantities of these materials disposed of is one of the most amazing facts developed in this community by the author of these articles.

I learned from one grocer in Boise, at Eighth and Main Streets, that he sold enough hops in one week to make 50,000 gallons of home-brew, and from a hardware merchant across the street I heard that the sale of the articles referred to constituted one of the chief phases of his business. It was a fact worthy of note disclosed by both these merchants that half their patronage for this home-brew material came from the farming districts, usually considered the chief forces of the dry movement.

HARD CIDER ABUNDANT

Nor must I overlook that special amenity of many a country table and fireside—hard cider. It is more often found in upper than lower Idaho because of the excellence of the fruit in the northern end of the State. The presence of fine apples has given rise to many vinegar factories here, and as cider must pass through a process of hardening before its eventual transformation into vinegar, cider making has become quite a common and fashionable industry in many an Idaho household.

Under the circumstances it is to be expected that there would be observed all the disturbing excrescences experienced by other communities we hear that tippling has increased among the youth of both sexes, that youngsters have begun to clog the police and sheriff dockets with the escapades and serious delinquencies, that scandals have cropped out from time to time about wild life and unsavory dilemmas among high-school students, that boys have been drawn into bootleg traffic for the rich rewards held out to them, that women have taken to the illicit trade, that drunkenness has increased from year to year, that the offense of driving automobiles under the influence of liquor has risen in many communities to an alarming degree, that many public and semipublic gatherings of a social nature are marked with the presence of intoxicants in some form or another, and that representatives of some of Idaho's best families have faced the judge for defiance of the Volstead Act.

The attempts of the various authorities to deal with the situation in this State is confessed by them to be a mere gesture, with little effect on the general flood. There can be no quarrel with the statutes. They are severe enough; no physician is permitted to prescribe so much as a drop of whisky; it is a penitentiary offense to possess or make any apparatus that may be employed in the manufacture of intoxicants; fines of $100 and $500 are imposed for first offenses for possession of liquor, while 90 days to 6 months and a year are the penalties for second offenders. So drastic are the State laws that the Federal agents frequently prefer to have their cases tried in the State courts for speedier and more vigorous handling.

LOCAL OPTION ONCE RULED

And it should be recalled that most of the State had years of experience with dry regulations under local option before the entire community went bone dry by legislative enactment in 1916, a few years before the advent of the Volstead Act.

The experience of the wise men of Idaho, however, seems to have produced little in the way of an inspiring idea for damming the liquor flood at their doors. There are counties where the laws are defied with a brazenness that would put a New Yorker to shame. There are districts where juries flatly refuse to fine or to jail their neighbors for liquor offenses though there is evidence enough to convince the blind and deaf. In areas such as Custer County and Owyhee and Valley and Elmore Counties, the authorities have found themselves absolutely helpless before the wet temper of the people, and have thrown up their hands in disgust. They have never sent a Federal agent into Custer County because, they told me, they considered it futile to attempt to enforce the eighteenth amendment there. It is here that the generous stream of Mackay moonshine has its source and is permitted to flow out to irrigate Idaho's many thirsty throats apparently without obstruction. Here, indeed, alcohol is king.

And the towns and cities which might be described as wide open are to be found at all points of the compass. Tipplers whose business carries them to various parts of the State know what a haven of choice liquors Coeur d'Alene, in the north, is, and what potent beverages may be secured without the slightest difficulty in such places as Wallace and Moscow and Sandpoint and Lewiston. Special honors, too, should go to Hailey, upon which the Federal agents thought not long ago to make an effort to clamp the lid, sweeping in eight stills, and arresting 14 persons at one blow. The next day, however, the cauldrons were running full blast again.

For those who prefer the quality of the product farther south the wide-open booze train may be taken up at Weiser and on through Payette and Emmett and Caldwell and Nampa and right into Boise, the capital, where were born and now respose the State laws so boldly defied. Nor is there a lack of stimulating liquors at Twin Falls or McCall or Pocatello, and those who seek will find much at Oakley and Blackfoot to bring the blush to their cheeks.

OFFICIALS CAN'T COVER AREA

When asked about enforcement progress, officials laugh and say they do all that can be expected of 10 Federal agents in a mountainous area big enough to tuck a couple of New England States away in one of its corner pockets. The one lone agent of the State, Jim Foster, is a fine fellow, they say, and is an enthusiastic worker, but it's all like King Canute trying to stem the ocean tide. It's upon the shoulders of the county sheriffs that most of the work of enforcement falls, and their books show that the greater portion of their business is the offspring of the liquor traffic. The local police, usually but a handful, do what comes in their way, but they are too busy regulating traffic and keeping their towns clean of crooks to pay much attention to the moonshine trade.

This, of course, makes the situation in the cities extremely rosy for the rum runner. The Federal agents insist that they can't police the towns that they are not expected to, and that their chief aim is to apprehend the still operator and check the big transporters. The police say they have little time or inclination to go snooping around for home-brew vats.

There is no disposition among the officials here to trouble the individual who takes his drink in his house or putters around with his home brew in his own castle for his own consumption, so that the Boisean is permitted to do pretty much as he pleases. And he does. There are, of course, many places, little back rooms upstairs, where one may obtain wines and hard spirits for as low as 25 cents and 50 cents a draught. Along Main Street I counted 20 such places. But the Idahoan as a rule does not relish this drink. He prefers to have his bottle on the shelf or hip. He can get his favorite Mackay or Jarbridge for $6 to $7 a quart. There is little alcohol or gin sold hereabouts, because it can stand little competition with the excellent moonshine.

The Boisean bootlegger will offer one liquors of quality from Canada, which he proffers with a guaranty of authenticity for $50 per case or $8 to $10 per quart. There is a choice of Bourbon, Grand Dad Hermitage, John Dewar & Sons, Three Star Jameson, etc. And many a case is left at many a door, along the streets of the rich, Idaho Avenue and Jefferson Street and Warm Spring Avenue, as a certain plasterer in the town can testify. This subcontractor revealed that for the last six months his time has been entirely taken up with installing concrete vaults with iron doors in many cellars along Warm Spring Avenue, which were destined to be the resting places of choice stores of stimulants.

Boise, one should remember, has but 25,000 inhabitants, yet James W. Briggs, its chief of police told me that if all the persons in this city who possessed illicit liquors were taken into custody, it would require a building several blocks square and a dozen stories high to contain them.

NO PLACES PADLOCKED

But hear more from this frank officer of the law. He complains that no places in the city are padlocked. There is something the matter with the legal machinery. Some place the blame upon the reluctance of judges to issue the closing orders, he explains, others put it to the discredit of the prosecuting attorneys.

"Of course, there are loads and loads of liquors around Boise City and throughout the State," he says. "It would be ridiculous to deny it. And a lot of this fever for making and drinking intoxicants is brought about by the suggestion and advertisement flashed before the people's eyes wherever they go. The store windows and the streets are filled with malt ads and extracts of one kind or another and hops and caps and cappers and boilers and coils and all the other machinery used for brewing purposes, and people that never thought of doing such a thing before have it finally put into their heads to try and make these things themselves. The persistent display of cocktail shakers and spigots and flasks is bound to have its effect, and it does, and those things are sold by the hundreds. It has affected the entire social life of the people. I see it under my eyes.

"Young girls are going out and getting drunk with young boys in numbers and with a persistence such as we have never seen or heard of before. There have been outbursts of immorality among them that is directly traceable to the consumption of liquor. The excesses that have bobbed up every now and then among our high-school pupils have been one of the most alarming phases of the situation in this city, and, I take it, in other cities of the State.

"These young people get their bottles of hooch and rush out to some farmhouse on the outskirts of the city and there indulge themselves to their heart's content.

"Of course, the bootlegger is to be found pretty near everywhere, and there are so many stills in the hills and valleys of the State that they are producing more 'moon' than there is a market for here and they are exporting to other communities. Now and then we catch one of these tin-boiler factories right in our midst here.

"There is plenty of wine making in the homes here. They are making wine out of anything, but I see no reason why we should disturb these people. If the Federal people want to get after them, let them do it. We haven't the time or inclination to bother these people.

"There is a certain amount of stuff coming in from the Canadian border and this is the stuff that the people of means in Boise consume. I know what I am talking about because I was assistant director of Federal prohibition enforcement here not long ago. Generally speaking, the situation in the other towns is just about the same as it is here and I don't think we are any worse off than cities in other parts of the country. It's a strange thing and I have observed that people who never drank before are drinking now. Here we find the women reviving old beverages that we thought had gone to bed ages ago; like beer from herbs and roots and concoctions that your grandmother used to make out of ginger; but now they are brewed with a kick in them. And this is supposed to be one of the dryest communities in the Union. At least, we have some of the strictest laws.

NUMBER OF DRUNKS GROWS

"We get a few more drunks than we used to, and the docket shows that we are picking more cases of driving while intoxicated than ever before. The figures, however, don't begin to give the facts."

The experience of Sheriff Pfost, of Ada County, with a population of 60,000, and numbering Boise among its cities, is perhaps the most illuminating that has come out of the whole community.

"More than half of the work of my four deputies," he says, "has to do with liquor cases. I am a prohibitionist and in favor of some form of control of the liquor industry. I have never taken a drink in my life, and I shudder to see what is happening under my eyes. As it is, this whole business is making crooks out of a lot of honest men. The enforcement of the liquor laws to-day in Idaho is a farce. Our higher ups, who are supposed to do some tall thinking for the community, are getting nowhere. The number of men that the county, State, and Federal authorities allow for the enforcement of the laws is ridiculous.

"In the period between 1914 and 1916, when Idaho went bone dry, we didn't have one-third the number of prisoners in the county jails that we have there to-day. In the period before state-wide prohibition we never heard of driving while under the influence of liquor; at least, the dockets don't show it.

"The number of women we arrest for participation in the bootleg game is surprising even to me. At one time we had 13 here in the county jail for this offense. They say they go into it for the money. And boys are drawn into the business by offers from the older fellows of big rewards.

"But probably the most alarming thing about this whole business is the number of young boys and girls that have been enmeshed in the strains of this traffic. Our docket shows dozens of minors—school boys and girls—who were picked up intoxicated or for reckless driving while under the influence of liquor. The number of these cases is really astounding.

"Every now and then a scandal breaks out of a serious nature and a dozen or more of the high-school girls and boys are sent off to some private institution outside the city and every precaution taken to protect the names of the pupils and families. This situation exists not only in Boise but in other parts of the State, and in other States, if this was a condition peculiar to Idaho. I have questioned the youngsters on why they indulged in these excesses, and they told me, 'We just wanted to see what it was like and get the thrill, and it felt all right, so we just kept on doing it.'

BEST CITIZENS SELL BOOZE

"And it may be news to a lot of people, but some of our finest citizens are in the bootlegging business, and the impression that most of the rum runners are cheap, poor people is all wrong. I know what I am talking about. And there are lots of places in the State of Idaho where the people simply can't see the Volstead Act at all, and won't find offenders guilty. For instance, there is Owyhee County, where most of the liquor used in southern Idaho is made. There are 4,694 people living in this county and it is the biggest district in the State.

"The Federal agents have captured still after still in this area, but simply can't get a conviction from the juries there. There people simply don't believe it's a wrong thing to do and won't find guilty.

"I had a personal experience on this point. I arrested a man named John Basco with 160 quarts of moonshine recently in a car in the county. We had the goods on him and he virtually confessed, but the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. In another instance we found an immense still and brought it into court. It was very impressive, so the jury brought in a verdict that carried a small fine with it. There are many such counties where this situation obtains.

"What are you going to do?"

Judge F. S. Dietrich, the Federal judge for Idaho, asserts that the liquor cases that come before him exceed the total of all other cases. It is his impression that there were not many big fellows in the trade, and that many of those caught seem to be poor fellows who wanted to make a killing and get out of it. They frequently are unable to pay the fines imposed, he says, and are compelled to serve their fines out in jail at the rate of $2 a day.

MANY WOMEN BOOTLEGGERS

George W. Oyler, the chief of the Federal forces in Idaho, is nothing if not frank. He says: "If we could get padlocks and confiscation of automobiles, I think we could eventually make Idaho dry.

"Somehow we can't get legal processes for these things as other communities do. Since January 1, just the same, we picked up 67 stills in the State and arrested 367 persons for various offenses.

"It's true that we have a large number of women bootleggers, and if we wanted to we could arrest more of them. They are usually the wives of the men with whom they cooperate. We've some bad spots in this State to deal with. Owyhee Valley, Custer, and Elmore Counties simply will not produce convictions, and we do not send a man to Custer at all because it's useless. And, you know, we have had to put some sheriffs here in jail for bootlegging themselves."

In connection with the activities of the Federal agents, the capital recently was churned into an uproar over the manner in which these agents would enter homes under the subterfuge of State warrants, and digging out single bottles of spirits, would arrest their occupants. Local attorneys contended that as there was no sale, the Federal agents had no authority to enter these homes or make arrests, and that as a matter of policy it was ridiculous for these agents to be snooping around for a bottle here and there when the hills were swarming with bulging stills.

The Idahoans simply will not be disturbed; we need only point out what is happening in the smaller communities with a reference to Pocatello, where the sheriff informs me that he has had a hundred liquor cases a month, that 80 to 90 per cent of the occupants of the county jail are offenders against the liquor laws, and that nine-tenths of the cases handled by his office revolve about the liquor traffic.

Nevertheless, prohibition has passed out of the conversation of the Idahoans, and they consider their habitat one of the driest corners of the Union.

Mr. BRUCE. One very significant thing about this article is——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator by whom was that article written?

Mr. BRUCE. I forget at this moment who the individual was. The Senator knows journalism is a very impersonal thing. It is enough for my purpose that it appeared in that great newspaper, the New York Herald Tribune. One of the most significant things about the article is the fact that it refers to the influx of liquor from Canada into Idaho. Of course, that influx at once suggests one of the reasons why so much hard liquor is being manufactured in the Dominion of Canada at the present time. A very great proportion of it is manufactured not simply for the delectation of American tourists who go to Canada but of American consumers in the United States.

As to what the Senator from Idaho said about bootlegging in the Dominion of Canada and the lack of efficiency with which Canadian systems of liquor control are working, it is sufficient to assert that anyone could come to the United States and obtain a great volume of deeply biased testimony either favorable or unfavorable with reference to the practical workings of prohibition in the United States. So it was the easiest task in the world for the Senator from Idaho to go to Canada and without difficulty secure from partisan sources, journalistic and otherwise, a mass of impressive testimony adverse to the virtues of government control in the Dominion of Canada. It should be remembered that only a short time ago every solitary Province of the Dominion of Canada was under the sway of prohibition legislation, but that now every one of those Provinces, with the exception of little Prince Edward Island and the relatively unimportant Province of Nova Scotia, has revoked its prohibitory legislation. Why did they revoke it? In part, because bootlegging in Canada, as in the United States, had become an abuse of fearful proportions.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRUCE. I am sorry, but my time is so limited that it is impossible for me to yield.

It was not to be expected, Mr. President, when bootlegging had sprung up in every nook and corner of the greater part of the Dominion of Canada under the fostering influence of prohibition, that just as soon as prohibition was repealed bootleg liquor would disappear. Of course not. The human blood can not be innoculated with disease and work it off in a moment or in an hour or in a day. What Canada is suffering from to-day in so far as her system of government control is not effective is but the morbid sequels of prohibition; and another thing to be borne in mind is that after all the best customer of the Canadian bootlegger is not the Canadian patron, it is the American patron.

Mrs. Willebrandt calls attention to the fact in her very last report to the Government, a report made only a few days ago, that within the last three years clearances of liquors from Canada to this country have increased 75 per cent, and that computation does not take into account at all the vast rivers of liquor that have been clandestinely poured into the United States during the same period. The problem of drink reform in Canada can never be brought completely to a successful solution until prohibition in this country shall have come to an end and the bootlegger with it.

I also called attention yesterday to the fact that, while the consumption of hard liquor in the Province of Quebec has increased only 25 per cent in the last four years, the consumption of wine and malt liquors has increased 100 per cent. That, mind you, was during the last four years. If we go back to the first four years of this Canadian experiment what do we find? I turn for a moment to a paper written some years ago by Arthur St. Pierre, a member of the Canadian Liquor Control Commission, for the Independent of October 10, 1925, which showed not only that arrests for drunkenness in the city of Montreal under the operation of the Canadian system of liquor control had declined 50 per cent, but also this:

> In 1924–25 the sales of wine by the commission exceeded its sales of spirits by 23,814 bottles, while in 1923–24 they were less by 864,960 bottles.

So there, I say, we have incontestable proof of the beneficent way in which the Quebec system of liquor control is operating. Arrests for drunkenness are being reduced and the ideal of Thomas Jefferson is being realized, in that wine and malt liquors are being steadily substituted for hard liquor.

With such a record for the Quebec system of liquor control as that, why should I trouble to inquire closely into conditions that prevail in British Columbia or in Saskatchewan or in Manitoba or in Ontario or in any other Canadian Province that has thrown off the yoke of prohibition? What my proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution is based upon is the Quebec system of liquor control; and what it proposes to do is by proper modification of the eighteenth amendment to empower Congress to adopt a system of liquor control akin to the Canadian system of liquor control. Therefore if the Senator from Idaho is really desirous——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I had not intended to discuss this proposed legislation, because I had hoped that this bill might pass without lengthy discussion, but when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] attempts to talk about conditions in those parts of Canada where the so-called liberal liquor legislation has been enacted, and disputes the statements of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I desire to be heard for a few moments.

It has been my experience to cross the line into Canada during the past two years repeatedly. I have gone into those districts where the beer parlors are licensed; and the fact of the matter is that to-day there are more "blind pigs" and "speakeasies" on the Canadian side than there were before the beer parlors were licensed, and a large number of the Americans who cross the line buy their hard liquor from these men who run places for selling liquor in violation of law, and are regularly arrested and fined, and pay a substantial fine, instead of having a license in the ordinary way. The fact of the matter is that the people who get beer at the beer parlors are not satisfied with it. They go to the places where hard liquors are sold in violation of law and buy the liquor there. The men who run those places are then arrested regularly, about once a month, and fined from $250 to $500.

The experience of the communities of Canada bordering the State of Washington at least by no means proves the claim that a more liberal privilege of using beer causes people to want less hard liquor. In fact, they want more hard liquor, and instead of decreasing bootlegging, as it was claimed would be done, the fact of the matter is that there is a greater amount of bootlegging in hard liquor.

I shall not take much time in discussing this proposed legislation, but I do not believe it is any argument on the part of those who oppose it, to get up on this floor and make threats about exposing Senators who drink wet and vote dry.

In the first place, my experience in the House and Senate over a period of years leads me to believe that the Members of both bodies are sober men. I believe that very few of them ever drink to excess—so seldom, in fact, that if one ever does, it is talked about as a striking and disgusting example.

It may be that they occasionally take a drink. I do not know. I come from a State that had prohibition since before the national amendment was even seriously considered. The people of my State by the referendum voted a bone dry law, and on two occasions, when attempts were made to modify that law and make it more liberal, it has been sustained by the electorate of the State by a bigger and more overwhelming majority in favor of the bone dry law than had previously been given at the election. So, for my part, I am not personally concerned about that question.

It is not, however, a question of whether men happen to take a drink occasionally. The question is whether or not they are carrying out the will of the people who send them here.

Every time this question has gone to the American people in a national way the prohibition side of it has been overwhelmingly supported; and certainly there is nothing in the returns of the last election to justify anyone in claiming that the people of this country are less loyal than formerly in their support of prohibition.

I am in favor of this legislation because it proposes to allow judges to impose heavier sentences upon those who violate the prohibition law. Most of the men engaged in commercial business in violation of the prohibition law are in it to make money, and in some communities they make enormous sums of money. I believe that the judges should have wider powers. I believe it meets the approval of the American people to increase these penalties. Certainly if any interpretation can be placed upon the votes of the people in the last election, when prohibition was made one of the dominant questions, it is that the people are more determined than ever before to retain prohibition legislation.

So, for my part, I shall gladly support this bill.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Members of the Senate, I desire to direct some criticism to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

A distinguished jurist has said that "crimes are more effectually prevented by the certainty than by the severity of punishment." Those of us who have had the responsibility of administration of the laws appreciate the soundness of that doctrine.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington is unique as a legislative proposal. It is without precedent. I will read it:

> Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Here is a proposal in the form of an amendment not framed in language that has any force or effect in legislation, but rather expressing a sentiment of Congress; and this advice is to be given to the several judges of the United States, and the judge is to be told that he is advised by Congress to be a little more lenient, to be a little more generous in handing out his sentence where, in his opinion, there can be a discrimination between casual or slight violations and so-called regular "bootlegging."

That is the effect of the language of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington. It is asinine; it is ridiculous and not worthy the support of a great deliberative body such as is the Senate of the United States. Write that into the law, use that language of gangland, and you at once bring this body into disrepute. There will be a question as to our intelligence—yes, and a question as to our purposes.

Therefore, Mr. President, in order to help out the situation, in order to give less intensity to the severity of fanaticism, I have endeavored to draft an amendment that at least is framed in the language that is known to courts and legislative bodies which I shall submit, if it is in order, as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

Who is a "bootlegger"? What constitutes "bootlegging"? What is "regular bootlegging" and what is "irregular bootlegging"? It is not very difficult to express the purpose of the committee reporting this bill as I find it from their report. The committee state, referring to the present penalties:

> These penalties are adequate where the commercial element is not present, but they are absolutely inadequate when applied to professional bootleggers and other large-scale operators. * * * Such an amendment should not operate harshly upon the casual violator. Its object is to reach the professional commercial operators who profit financially by their criminal defiance of the law.

Therefore, the question of sale is the only question involved in the consideration of the committee, according to their report; and the substitute that I propose to offer, and shall offer at the proper time, rests the proposition on the question of sale, in order to reach the very thing complained of by the committee in the committee report.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the eighteenth amendment as a matter of principle. I am opposed to the Volstead Act because it does not comport with the eighteenth amendment. I am not going to enter upon a discussion of the prohibition question this morning. I set forth my views the other day in this body. I do not propose to repeat what I then said, but I do propose this morning to refer to some of the argument that has been made on behalf of this bill.

Much has been said about Canada, Mussolini, and Great Britain. The distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] yesterday stated that in Great Britain only 17 cents remained out of a daily wage of 50 cents of an English workman, the 33 cents going for English ale. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that when the economic conditions of Great Britain are so depressed, when men are driven into penury and poverty, when they have no fire with which to warm themselves and no food with which to feed themselves, why damn a man when he endeavors to forget his poverty and his privation? That proves nothing for or against prohibition. But that is not the difficulty in Great Britain. It is not the English ale that afflicts the British workingman to-day. It is the economic condition that exists in Great Britain, and whatever misuse or abuse there has been of ale by the English workingman, that is not what has brought him to his distress.

Mr. President, with millions of men unemployed, poverty and distress stalking about the British Isles——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BLAINE. When the British Government is laden with a tremendous war debt, when the British Government is building up a naval and military strength as against the world, search for the cause for poverty in Great Britain and you will find it in the economic condition of that nation. Successful though she was in the war, that very success will perhaps bring her defeat in the future. Mr. President, reference was made to a single isolated case of some Cornish workingman who chose to have his few glasses of ale. To charge the present economic condition, the privation and poverty, of the English workingman to his use of ale is perfectly ludicrous and ridiculous.

Then we were taken to Canada yesterday, and we were taken to Canada again this morning. We were told that Canada still had her bootleg problem on her hands. Yes; she has. Canada is in exactly the same position occupied by every nation that has ever undertaken prohibition. Canada never had the bootlegger until Canada introduced prohibition. Canada never had her "speakeasies," Canada never had her "blind pigs," Canada never had the misuse, the abuse, or the excessive use of hard liquor until Canada had prohibition.

Hard liquor is easily made and easily distributed. In Canada the people learned how to make it and how to distribute it under prohibition, and it is going to take some time before the Canadian people learn how to do away with the evil that originated under her prohibition laws.

Norway had exactly the same experience. Norway introduced prohibition—rigid, strict prohibition. She found that bootlegging and the illicit manufacture of hard liquor became the general thing in that country. Norway changed, and adopted a moderate program. Yet Norway has her problems growing out of the period of time when she had prohibition. So in every other country that has ever undertaken prohibition there have been developed these sources of illicit manufacture, illicit distribution of hard liquor, and it takes years to do away with that which prohibition engendered, promoted, fostered, and developed. So, here in America, repeal the eighteenth amendment, repeal the Volstead Act, and we will still have the bootleggers and the moonshiners for some time, because they have been trained under prohibition.

That should not blind us to the fact that the questions arising out of prohibition must be solved. Yet the distinguished Senator from Idaho in his debate said that until a better system was found he was unwilling either to modify or relax the intensity of the Volstead Act, or repeal the eighteenth amendment. What are the present conditions? I am going to read briefly from a report of the Associated Press dated Chicago, February 14. This describes the present condition growing out of prohibition. It describes the liquor-running syndicate, a product of the Volstead Act:

Chicago gangsters, posing as policemen, invaded the North Side stronghold of the George Moran ("Bugs") gang, lined up seven helpless, unarmed victims with their faces to a brick wall and mowed them down with automatic pistols and machine guns.

The wholesale execution was carried out at 10.30 this morning. It was an innovation in Chicago gang history, and was done with all the precision of an army firing squad. The raid brought the total of gang victims to more than 135 in the last few years.

And the period of the last few years has been during the prohibition period. That is the condition to which the Senator from Idaho referred, and which he is unwilling to cure.

Mr. President, for one, I do not know what may happen in the future, but, so far as the present is concerned, the evidence is overwhelming that prohibition has brought its gangsters, its profiteering, its crime. It has been hooked up with crooked politics. In fact, prohibition, crime, and crooked politics are triplets.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. They develop from the same source, they are organized for the purpose of profit.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. BLAINE. I can not yield, Mr. President, because my time is short. I am sorry.

Again, the Senator from Idaho referred to Italy, saying that the dictator had issued an edict that had closed several thousand saloons in Italy. I dare say that this morning the sun-kissed slopes of Italy still bear the grapes, and the wine presses of Italy are still turning out their deliciously flavored wines, notwithstanding the dictates of the dictator.

Everywhere, Mr. President, we will find exactly the same condition resulting from prohibition. Every civilized nation in the world, every nation outside of the western Asiatic nations, which has had prohibition in the last centuries, every one of them excepting America, has repudiated prohibition because it has not worked and can not work.

We can not successfully legislate against science; we can not successfully legislate against nature. Even the springtime that is about upon us will cover the fields with the beautiful, golden dandelions, as a protest of nature. The California grapes still grow, the Michigan grapes still grow, the wine presses are at work, fruit juices still ferment, and so long as those processes are possible so long are people going to produce that which stimulates. Legislate as you will, heap the penalties higher and higher, make them more severe—notwithstanding all of that you can never defeat the processes of nature.

Moreover, Mr. President, referring again to the conditions in the city of Chicago, where 135 men have been murdered, all connected with the liquor interests, does severity of punishment deter crime? No. Men commit murder even though they subject themselves to the electric chair. So the severity of the punishment does not make any more certain the enforcement of the prohibition law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COUZENS in the chair). The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, as this bill first stood, I expected to vote against it. With the Jones amendment adopted as a part of the bill, I expect to vote for it. While I do not think that my remarks will mark any new era in American thought, I want the RECORD to show my reason for that position.

I do not think the question involved is one of the wisdom or unwisdom of the prohibition law. The proposal is not to repeal it, and therefore the wisdom of its adoption does not seem to me to be the controlling factor in our decision now. Prohibition is here. It seems to me that it has passed beyond the realm of opinion. I regard my own opinion of its possible success or failure as entirely worthless now that we have launched on the experiment. The outcome of the experiment will be more convincing than the opinion of the wisest man. While the experiment is being carried on we owe to the Constitution, which we respect, and the laws we are sworn to enforce, to give it a fair trial.

I do not think that, generally speaking, we improve a law by merely piling on penalties. I doubt very much the wisdom of the process of increasing penalties to meet a condition of widespread violation of law. Certainty of punishment is a far more effective deterrent than is severity of punishment.

Back in 1765 a wiser man than most of us wrote the greatest book ever written on the law of the men of our race. Blackstone's Commentaries embody more wisdom, perhaps, than any other law book in the English language. Blackstone never heard about prohibition, and I want to read into the RECORD at this point his words on the wisdom of increasing the severity of punishments. Everyone must admit that his opinion was not discolored by prejudice against or in favor of the prohibition law.

I read from his fourth volume. He said:

Punishments of unreasonable severity, especially when indiscriminately inflicted, have less effect in preventing crimes, and amending the manners of a people, than such as are more merciful in general, yet properly intermixed with due distinctions of severity. It is the sentiment of an ingenious writer, who seems to have well studied the springs of human action, that crimes are more effectually prevented by the certainty than by the severity of punishment.

Then he quotes from Montesquieu at some length.

The laws of the Roman Kings and the Twelve Tables of the decemviri were full of cruel punishments; the Porcian law, which exempted all citizens from sentence of death, silently abrogated them all. In this period the Republic flourished; under the Emperors severe punishments were revived; and then the Empire fell.

He follows that with several pages of illustrations from the laws of France, of China, and of England, and finally tells of the manner in which murder was done away with as an accompaniment of robbery when the English law was changed to permit a milder sentence than death for robbery. After that men were often robbed but seldom murdered. Previously they murdered as well as robbed when both crimes were punishable by death. Then Blackstone concludes in this way:

Yet, though in this instance we may glory in the wisdom of the English law, we shall find it more difficult to justify the frequency of capital punishment to be found therein; inflicted (perhaps inattentively) by a multitude of successive independent statutes, upon crimes very different in their natures. It is a melancholy truth that among the variety of actions which men are daily liable to commit no less than a hundred and sixty have been declared by act of Parliament to be felonies without benefit of clergy; or, in other words, to be worthy of instant death. So dreadful a list, instead of diminishing, increases the number of offenders. The injured, through compassion, will often forbear to prosecute; juries, through compassion, will sometimes forget their oaths and either acquit the guilty or mitigate the nature of the offense; and judges, through compassion, will respite one-half of the convicts and recommend them to the royal mercy. Among so many chances of escaping the needy and hardened offender overlooks the multitude that suffer; he boldly engages in some desperate attempt to relieve his wants or supply his vices; and if unexpectedly the hand of justice overtakes him, he deems himself peculiarly unfortunate in falling at last a sacrifice to those laws which long impunity has taught him to condemn.

We who have to legislate on the prohibition law, which is so widely flaunted, ought to bear those words well in mind. The temptation to meet each increase in the number of violations with an increase in severity of punishment is a most natural human reaction, possibly, but as legislators attempting to be wise we ought to do our best rather to increase the certainty of the punishment than its severity.

We have heard a good deal about conditions in Chicago. I think I owe it to the Senate to say that about a year ago I thought it was high time that I quit taking the opinion of my social acquaintances on the success or failure of prohibition or basing my conclusions on the very limited experience that one individual can have, and I tried, through the heads of the larger companies which employ many men in Pennsylvania and through governmental authorities there, to get a sort of confidential questionnaire circulated to find out what really, in their judgment, was the effect of the prohibition law. They were almost unanimous in saying that conditions throughout the country districts of Pennsylvania are vastly improved since prohibition. They are not quite unanimous, but a vast majority concur in saying that in the larger cities, particularly where there are slums, conditions are rather markedly worse. If we have improved conditions for the entire country population, if we have confined the chief transgressions against the law to comparatively small urban areas, something has been accomplished in the 10 years that have elapsed since the experiment began.

I venture to say that prohibition, whatever we may think of it, has succeeded as an experiment as well in the past 10 years as did the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments succeed in the first 10 years after their adoption. I think I remember hearing it said that the condition of the negro was very markedly worse 10 years after slavery ceased than it was before the Civil War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Pennsylvania on the amendment has expired.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I will speak now on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Briefly, if the Senator please.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would like to call attention to the fact that it was 60 years after Congress enacted a law prohibiting the importation of slaves into the United States before that law was absolutely enforced. For more than 60 years after that law was enacted men still smuggled slaves from Africa into the United States.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes. Men of our race have always been smugglers of one commodity or another, and they have always been bootleggers, and they have always chafed at the restraint of laws that interfere with their personal preferences. Our people are not docile, and sometimes I thank heaven that they are not, as are the people of other races who have been trained under a more despotic rule. But everybody realizes the wrongs that there were before prohibition. Every man who ever saw the inside of a saloon knows that nowhere does human nature sink lower than inside of those swinging doors. If prohibition has not done anything else, it has got rid of most of the wide-open saloons.

I did not mean to talk about the merits or demerits of the prohibition law, but I started by saying that I would have voted against the bill because of the philosophy of penology that I have tried to outline. But now, if the Jones amendment is adopted, with its expression of the intent of Congress in distinguishing between the degree of these crimes that may arise under the Volstead law, I feel justified in voting for the bill, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. There has been some suggestion that the proposed Jones amendment, merely expressing the intent of Congress, would have no binding force on a judge passing sentence. I imagine that is a correct interpretation; but the Senator is an able lawyer, and I would like to have his view as to the actual result should a judge ignore the plain intent of Congress and impose a very heavy sentence on a casual offender for a slight violation as set forth in the amendment. If the case were appealed to any appellate court, would it not be as nearly certain as anything can be in law that the appellate court must consider the announced intent of Congress as proposed in the amendment?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think so, Mr. President; and it is conceivable that a maximum sentence imposed for the most trivial of conceivable offenses would constitute such an abuse of judicial discretion as to lead to a reversal.

Some of the Senators seem to be worried by the use of that phrase, that "it is the intent of Congress that" the court should do so and so. When we stop to reflect upon it every statute implies that phrase. The intent of Congress is the thing that is expressed legislatively in every statute, and that phrase, although it does not occur in all of them, might as well be put at the beginning of every law that we enact. The court in construing the law will seek to get the intent of Congress in every statute, whether that phrase is in it or not. When we say here that it is the intent of Congress that so and so shall be done, that is just as imperative and dogmatic a command as it would be were the words omitted or were any other form of words used.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Senator favor an additional amendment to the amendment which he has just spoken in favor of which would provide that the penalty imposed for each such offense after the first offense should be as provided in the bill; in other words, to insert the words "after the first offense"?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I think that is implied in the use of the word "casual." Certainly an isolated single first offense is casual in the utmost degree in which anything can be casual, and I think it is plainly directed by the use of the word that for an offense of relatively little gravity occurring for the first time the court should administer the minimum sentence. I should so read the statute. I would not object to any amendment which would make that more clear, but I do not think it is needed.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would it not be true that in the case, let us suppose, of a poor and rather ignorant person who, having come from a country where it is not considered wrong to make or consume wine——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We all came from that kind of a country. All of us who are more than 10 years old were born in a "wet" country. So I do not think the immigrants deserve any special sympathy.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let us then include all of us.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, how much time have I left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will not the Senator indulge me then because of the shortness of my time?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. One thing more I want to say to the Senate, and it has influenced my decision on the bill. I have found, as we all have, that when people get in trouble for violating the Volstead law they come running to us who are Senators or to Members of the House, but principally to Senators, as if we were sort of a pardon board and could get them out of trouble. Like most of my colleagues, I have refused to intercede in any such case. I always shall. Anybody who comes to me for that service is wasting his effort, but I know I am not unique in that respect. One thing has struck me very vividly, and that is that those people do not in the least mind the imposition of a fine, they do not seem to lose caste in their own circles if they have to pay a fine, but they do dread a prison tremendously. The only bribe I was ever offered in the whole of my public life—it was not technically a bribe, but in effect it was a bribe—was when I was offered $20,000 if I could get a sentence of a year's imprisonment changed to a fine, no matter how big. This gentleman suggested that I be employed as his lawyer and not appear publicly, but I would get paid according to results. Of course all I did was to tell the judge about the offer and that gentleman served his sentence.

That incident illustrated the dread that these people have of a prison sentence and the contempt that they feel for a mere order to pay a money fine. Any fine permitted by the Volstead Act is so small in comparison with the profits of this business that it is a mere license fee, but to stay in the penitentiary or in jail can not be treated as a license fee by any means. It is the realization of that fact that leads me also to feel that perhaps it is wise in this case to increase the penalties as we are doing. But as a statement of future intention, I want to say now that I shall oppose in the future all efforts to meet crime of this or any other kind by constantly increasing the penalties. It is not consistent with a sound philosophy of penal legislation.

Mr. EDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to enable me to offer an amendment?

Mr. EDGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRUCE. I offer the following substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Washington. It is an amendment I have already offered and is now on the table, but I now desire to call it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. BRUCE. Will not the Senator let the amendment be stated?

Mr. EDGE. The amendment can be stated when I shall have concluded my remarks. My time is rather limited, as the Senator must appreciate.

Mr. BRUCE. Very well.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, my position and conviction on the general subject of prohibition has been very clearly defined on many occasions both in this Chamber and in the country.

My conviction has been that some provisions of the Volstead Act were not warranted by the terms of the eighteenth amendment, or, in other words, it has prohibited privileges that the eighteenth amendment permits. However, I have, as a Member of this body, never failed to vote for every appropriation that has been presented in the regular manner in order to assist enforcement, with one exception, the exception being the $24,000,000 proposal which, I may say, was not proposed in the usual manner.

With the assurance that has been given from a legal standpoint by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] as to the probable effect of the Jones amendment, I have determined likewise to vote for the pending bill, providing the amendment or one equally effective in protecting casual violators shall be adopted; in other words, I agree entirely with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in that part of his eloquent speech on yesterday wherein he stated that it is our duty in every possible manner, within reason, to try to assist enforcement. The present situation must be and is not only intolerable but unsatisfactory both to those who believe that the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act were wise legislative measures and to those who do not so believe.

I was glad to hear the Senator from Idaho yesterday indicate that he was not opposed to a revision of or amendment to either the eighteenth amendment or the Volstead Act providing it could be demonstrated to him, speaking personally, that such an amendment or revision would bring about a better condition than now prevails. Personally I am convinced that an amendment to or revision of both the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead Act are absolutely essential and necessary if we are ever, satisfactorily, to improve present conditions.

I do not agree that the situation in Canada is so bad as it might be represented by some analysis or interpretation of the official reports of that country. While it is no doubt true that the bootlegging industry thrives in Canada, it is perfectly obvious it is for the purpose of supplying the United States, because the people of Canada can legally secure in one form or another all the liquor they desire to secure. That situation prevails practically in every Province in the Dominion of Canada. Why, then, would Canadians or United States visitors patronize bootleggers, with inferior goods at higher prices, when I repeat they are legally permitted to purchase from Government stores?

I hold in my hand a synopsis of the official report of the Liquor Commission of the Province of Quebec, which, in my judgment, conclusively demonstrates that governmental control is a great improvement over present conditions prevailing in the United States. Further, it likewise clearly indicates that the demand for hard liquor in comparison with the demand for wines and beers is rapidly decreasing in that Province. I ask permission that a paragraph from the report may be printed in the RECORD at this point without reading.

There being no objection, the extract was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Montreal Daily Star of Friday, February 1, 1929]

TOTAL REVENUE

The total revenue of the commission for 1927–28 exceeds that for 1926–27 by $831,688.

Touching on the comparative popularity of wines and spirits in the Province of Quebec, the report shows that the sale of wines increased from 716,000 gallons in 1924–25 to 1,433,000 gallons in 1927–28, or slightly over 100 per cent in four years, while during the same period, the sale of spirits increased from 718,000 to 910,000, or only slightly less than 27 per cent.

Attention is also drawn to a marked falling off in the consumption of alcohol and "whisky blanc," a favorite drink of the working class, which amounted to 11 per cent in the past four years.

Commenting on the sales of spirits, the report says:

"Another fact no less important is that the greatest increases in the sale of spirits have occurred in those varieties which are the more expensive, and which might properly be termed "de luxe" liquors, as, for instance, brandies and cognacs, liqueurs, Scotch whiskies, and rye whiskies, which show increases of 24 per cent, 95 per cent, 50 per cent, and 52 per cent, respectively; and these are the liquors which find favor with people of means and with our tourist trade.

"The conclusions would indicate that our local population is gradually interpreting the spirit of the law by showing a preference for wines as against spirits. This presumption is also supported by the fact that the increase in the sale of spirits is more or less proportionate to the normal increase of population, both resident and transient.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I believe that sooner or later we shall adopt some form of governmental control or distribution as against the present system. I am convinced that the debate of yesterday and the day before, going out to the country, will strengthen the feeling of the necessity for such a revision of the present law. I look forward with great hope to the outcome of the proposed nation-wide or international inquiry not only on the subject of prohibition but also on the broader subject of all crimes. I have been convinced for years that we shall never accept a remedy for the present intolerable situation either from what might be termed, for the purpose of discrimination, the extreme "dry" or the extreme "wet." In other words, they are intolerant of each others viewpoint. A solution must be found, for no one will defend present conditions. I repeat, it is my hope that the result of the studies of a nonpartisan, nonbiased, high-standard commission of men and women appointed by the incoming President may furnish a solution. Whatever their report may be, whatever their recommendations may be, I am confident it will have an effect upon Congress and upon the country that could never be secured through any legislative investigation of any kind or character.

We have listened to two wonderful speeches during the last two days; one a terrific indictment of the present conditions, and, in my judgment, not overpainted; the other a defense of the law and the necessity to enforce the law. Then we are faced with the question: What are we going to do about it? After 10 years of more or less debate and consideration in this Chamber and in the other we have been unable to do anything about it. Those who conscientiously believe that the attempt to absolutely prohibit was a mistake and not in the interest of real temperance have not succeeded in any measure in having their suggestions for modification or revision adopted. On the other hand, there has been very little legislation of a more drastic nature enacted by those who hold the other opinion. We have drifted along, with conditions, I repeat, becoming worse and worse.

I am quite convinced that Congress, irrespective of party division, will look with great hope and anticipation upon the result of the promised inquiry, whatever its recommendations may be. As I understand it, the inquiry will not be confined or limited in any particular, but presumably as a result of the proposed investigation, recommendations will be made, perhaps for modification, perhaps for more drastic legislation, perhaps for amendments, perhaps for repeal, and I am convinced that this country will react, and I trust that Congress will react, to whatever those recommendations may be.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have assumed that at this stage the debate does not go to the merits of the prohibition question. I have assumed that that is an issue which has been settled by the country. The only question is how can enforcement of the prohibition law be made more effective.

The reform which we are discussing did not come about in a momentary manner. It came just as other reforms have come after years and years of agitation. The temperance movement began as early as the twenties of the last century, various organizations undertaking to promote the cause. It continued to grow until finally the agitation period was supplemented by a period of educational efforts along this line. For years the chief concern was to educate public sentiment to the evil of the liquor traffic. Any intelligent man who will study the progress of and growth of this movement will recognize that numerous associations were formed to make more effective the educational features of the reform movement.

Following that came effective organization. First, it was local. In my State it was limited at first to the township. Then it extended to a district in a city, giving such a district authority to drive the saloon out of any particular residential section. Later on the movement extended to the county and even comprehended in time to municipalities. Then the next normal step was the State. So it was not an overnight movement, but it extended over scores of years, and naturally when various States had written the prohibition law on their statute books the next step was national prohibition.

There may be some question raised as to whether the movement toward nation-wide prohibition proceeded faster than public opinion would indorse; and in that particular situation we have difficulty in enforcement. However, anyone who thinks that the eighteenth amendment is going to be repealed or even in any way amended has not taken the time to study American public opinion on that question.

The amendment is in the Constitution; it certainly will never come out of it; and it is just as certain that it will not be amended. Like every other moral reform, its strength will increase from year to year.

As to the Volstead Act, which simply provides the machinery to enforce the decree of the eighteenth amendment, there may be some modification; in fact, the particular measure now pending looks to its modification; but I repeat that there can be no question as to whether we are going to make an effort to repeal the eighteenth amendment. Nobody in authority has ever made any suggestion of that sort with reference to the commission of investigation that it is presumed will be appointed by the President elect after he shall have been inaugurated. Rather, I imagine, the efforts of the proposed commission will be devoted to the study of the effectual enforcement of the organic law, which is certainly going to remain as it is. Anyone who is taking the view that the commission of inquiry which is reported to be appointed will consider the wisdom of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment—I am not now referring to modification of the law—certainly has no foundation whatever for such an opinion.

Mr. President, I agree in part with those who are afraid that severity of penalties will not be conducive to effectual enforcement. That question was discussed at the very time the Volstead Act was passed. A Senator who sits on the other side of the aisle at the present time was then in the other body, as I was. When the Volstead bill came up there for consideration and discussion he offered an amendment to the bill having in mind the thought I have expressed. The question was how severe should the penalty be for the violation of the law. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], in pointing to the danger, which he reenforced by reference to Blackstone, was warranted in his conclusions as to conditions prevailing in that day, because then 160 offenses were punishable by death. Even the stealing of a loaf of bread by a poor starving man was punishable by death. Such extraordinary penalties, of course, would defeat effective enforcement. So it was not at all strange that when the Volstead Act was originally passed the question came up, Should there be a penitentiary offense provided for the violation of the law? Those who were concerned about effectual enforcement thought it would be better not to provide such a penalty, and it was not written into the law largely because the friends of the measure thought it unwise to do so.

But, Mr. President, after 10 years of effort to enforce the law a new danger has come up, and that is the danger of bootlegging, which is making profit out of the violations of the law and prospering over the miseries of the people. When you fine a bootlegger, you may fine him $10,000; his profits may be so exorbitant that he will willingly pay the $10,000 and go on with his violations.

I am firmly convinced that we have now reached the point where we must resort to the penitentiary offense to reach these offenders who are profiting in large measure by the violation of the law, although in past years I have opposed such a penalty; and I am so convinced that I do not hesitate for a moment in voting for a measure that will imprison the violator who is making profit out of the business. I think it was wise to offer the amendment that the author of the bill has presented to make some gradation here. I have felt the danger of the possible imposition of a severe penalty for some slight offense by a judge who might be narrow and quite prejudiced. Nobody wants to have that done, and for that reason I think this amendment is a wise one; but, so far as I can see, this is one of the advance steps in effective enforcement and ought to receive the support of every believer in the enforcement of law, because to my mind the greatest danger that could confront our country would be to get into the habit of disobeying law.

For that reason I shall, without hesitation, support the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, and back with whatever influence I have the bill that is now before us.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, from the time the barroom held sway until the enactment of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution every effort to advance the cause of prohibition has met with the determined opposition of most of those who were opposed to its enactment originally. The speech of the able Senator from Missouri and others who believe as he does proves conclusively that the enemies of this law are still doing their utmost to discredit the good it has accomplished; also to prevent more stringent laws for its enforcement and increased appropriations to employ enough men for this purpose. Many newspapers that opposed the enactment of this law are still trying to mislead their readers with misinformation about the good accomplished by this legislation and seem afraid for it to have a fair trial. The enemies of this law oppose my amendment to appropriate money sufficient to really enforce it properly.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the eighteenth amendment will not be repealed within the lifetime of anyone now present in this Senate. In fact, I do not believe it will ever be repealed. This law has been enacted by the untiring efforts of millions of people who were interested in this great moral question. There are more people in this country who would leave their political party because of prohibition than any other public question and they are demanding its enforcement.

Prohibition should not be made a partisan question. It is a great moral issue and it should be supported by the members of both parties. It is unreasonable to expect this law, which has been enacted only a few years, to get perfect results without sufficient funds when it changed a law that had been in existence more than 100 years allowing the sale of liquor. The good that has been accomplished since this law went into effect with the very limited funds that have been available is small as compared with what could be done with a sufficient appropriation.

In my judgment, the only way it will be properly enforced is by reasonable appropriation for all the departments having control of the enforcement of the law. To show the good it has accomplished, I have talked with many conductors on trains in my State who inform me that before the prohibitin law was enacted many drunken men would ride on their trains while this seldom happens since the passage of this law. Without it I believe there would be 10 times as many automobile accidents and people would not be willing to trust themselves in cars on the public highway.

Mr. President, the debate in the Senate the past few days has awakened the people of this country to the fact that enemies of the law are still active and will do everything they can to make it unpopular with the hope of repealing it. Mr. JONES has done a fine thing for the country in urging this law, which, while not increasing the minimum penalties, does give longer terms in the penitentiary for the regular bootleggers. I predict that the next Congress elected will come here obligated to appropriate whatever sum is necessary to enforce this law.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is right in line with my position on this subject as it was outlined in a speech that I delivered here a few days ago, in which I said that I did not think a person who had violated the law once, who had been drawn into a net, or who had been "framed" by somebody, should have to pay as much penalty as some hardened criminal.

The bootlegger who is deliberately in the business as a business and who defies the statutes and the courts is the fellow who ought to be made to pay a severe penalty when he is caught the second time. I should be willing to give him an opportunity to repent and mend his ways for the first offense. I think that is a good plan. But I would teach him a lesson when he was convicted the second time.

The amendment which the Senator from Washington has offered reads:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Why should we not do that? That is a good amendment. Why should we not lodge this discretion with the judge, and enable the judge to say, if he wants to, "This boy or this girl, drawn into this net, I think should not be punished as much as this one or that one; and therefore I am going to dismiss their cases." Let him do that outright if he wants to, or let him say, "I am going to impose a nominal fine on them," and then lecture them, and tell them to stay out of such company.

Mr. President, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] was discussing the matter this morning, I turned to an item in the Washington Post about Pat Crowe, who kidnaped Jack Cudahy several years ago. The paper on yesterday reported that Pat Crowe had killed himself, and Pat turned up to-day and denied the statement. Let us see who this Pat Crowe is—this miserable wretch who went into an American home several years ago and stole a 4-year-old child—kidnaped him and held him for a $25,000 ransom, while the child's father and mother were frantic with grief. Think of this miserable thief stealing and carrying away the first-born of an American father and mother, and holding it for ransom, and finally returning the child and receiving $25,000 for his infamous crime!

Who is this Pat Crowe? He is on the side of the bootlegger. Here is what the paper says about him:

Crowe, 62, to-night picked up a newspaper and read the story which told how Pat Crowe's body lay unclaimed in the morgue at Buffalo, and faced burial in the potter's field.

Listen to what this man Pat Crowe has to say:

I am far from dead. I have been living on the Bowery for nine years. I just sold my overcoat for the price of a drink. I am agin' prohibition, and take good liquor whenever I can find it.

Pat Crowe is a fine example of the bootlegging business! He is the miserable wretch who drank and debauched in the evil days when he stole little Ed Cudahy and held him until he almost drove his father and mother mad! This old villain, hardened in sin and crime, sells his overcoat for a drink, and comes out against prohibition. His thirst for strong drink has possessed and mastered him. It has made him penniless and a pauper, and it drives him to-day like a slave into the blind tiger's den, and he sells the overcoat off his back for a drink.

Ah, Mr. President and Senators, instead of our standing here and giving warning to the young men of the country to touch not, to handle not, to taste not the vile stuff some are telling them that it is a personal right, a matter of personal liberty to debauch themselves, to ruin their own happiness and the happiness of their families, to make themselves drunk, and go home and kill their families in their drunken, crazed condition. We say to them, "You have a right to do these things, because you are enjoying personal liberty in this country."

We are told that when men drink whisky all their lives in this fashion they get to a point where, as they get older, they have to drink more and more to feel the effects of it. Take this miserable wretch Pat Crowe as an example. He has reached that time, tottering on toward the evening and the sunset of life, he goes into a blind tiger and takes the overcoat off his back and barters it for a drink.

Mr. President, I once served in the House with a man who has since gone to his reward. We were dear friends. He sat down one night with me in the Willard Hotel and he said, "Tom, I will not be here long. I wish I had my life to live over. There is but one thing that I know now that I would change." I said, "What is that?" He said, "I would not touch a drop of whisky. That stuff has caused me many pains and a lot of trouble, and it is not worth five cents. If I had my life to live over I would never touch a drop of whisky."

Yet we have speeches made here that invite boys in this gallery who hear them, and girls, too, to think it is right, nice, and romantic to go out and revel around in these devilish, debauching whisky parties, dragging fine young men and young women down to hell in a hurry. That class of people are not the ones who are going to control this country in the years to come, and such women, they are not going to be the mothers of men who are going to build American homes and control this Nation in the years to come.

Will the other class, the sober class, the law-abiding class, surrender to that class or will we tell them they will have to obey our law or get out? We are not going to surrender these moral strongholds of right and virtue to the dens of iniquity in this Nation.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I have offered a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and I ask that it be brought up.

Mr. JONES. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "wherever," in line 3, and substitute therefor the words "so far as"; in line 6, after the word "exportation," to insert the words "for commercial purposes"; and to add at the end of the amendment:

and it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, shall properly discriminate between the graver and the less grave offenses hereunder.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, with all due deference to the Senator from Maryland, I feel that that amendment is really subject to a point of order in that it is not a substitute. The first part of it is an amendment to the main text of section 1, and could be very properly considered in that way; but I do not think it should be held to be a substitute for the amendment which I propose.

Mr. BRUCE. It is absolutely germane. My point could not possibly be accomplished unless I took within my purview the text of the bill as well as the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington.

The situation, Mr. President, is this:

The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington makes no real change—

Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum. It is perfectly idle to be speaking in a vacuum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Edwards	McKellar	Shortridge
Barkley	Fess	McMaster	Simmons
Bayard	Frazier	McNary	Smith
Bingham	George	Mayfield	Smoot
Black	Gerry	Moses	Steck
Blaine	Gillett	Neely	Steiwer
Blease	Glass	Norbeck	Stephens
Borah	Glenn	Norris	Swanson
Bratton	Goff	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Brookhart	Gould	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Broussard	Greene	Overman	Trammell
Bruce	Hale	Phipps	Tydings
Burton	Harris	Pine	Tyson
Capper	Harrison	Pittman	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hastings	Ransdell	Wagner
Copeland	Hawes	Reed, Mo.	Walsh, Mass.
Couzens	Hayden	Reed, Pa.	Walsh, Mont.
Curtis	Heflin	Robinson, Ind.	Warren
Dale	Johnson	Sackett	Waterman
Deneen	Jones	Schall	Watson
Dill	Kendrick	Sheppard	Wheeler
Edge	King	Shipstead

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], which the clerk will now read.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I think there is some misapprehension. The question before the Senate now, it seems to me, would be on the substitute offered by me for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Against which I raised the point of order that it was not really a substitute.

Mr. BRUCE. I suppose we can discuss that point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair ask the clerk to read the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] has moved to insert at the end of section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Maryland pardon the Chair while the Chair observes that the amendment of the Senator from Maryland is not directed to the amendment of the Senator from Washingon but is directed to the main text of the bill, and would be in order after the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington had been disposed of.

Mr. BRUCE. With great respect to the Chair, I think the Chair is mistaken. It is directed at the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, and also at the text, because if the substitute had no reference to the text, it would make really no effective application to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will ask the Secretary to read the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Maryland offers the following amendment:

Strike out the word "wherever," in line 3, and substitute therefor the words "so far as"; insert in line 6, after the word "exportation," the words "for commercial purposes"; and add after the word "purposes" the words "and it is the intent of Congress that the court in imposing sentence hereunder shall properly discriminate between the graver and the less grave offenses hereunder."

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES. I make the point of order that the amendment is not really a substitute for my amendment. It contains really two amendments to other parts of the bill. The latter part offered as a substitute might properly be a substitute, though I am not sure of that; but it is all offered, as I understand the Senator from Maryland, as a substitute. It is not properly a substitute.

Mr. BRUCE. But the amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is not debatable; but, of course, the Chair, with great respect for the Senator from Maryland, will hear him for a moment on the point of order.

Mr. BRUCE. I was going to observe that the amendment of the Senator from Washington is utterly ineffective unless it is connected up with the whole text of the bill. That is the point. It is impossible for me to offer a substitute for his amendment that does not apply to the text of the bill as well as to his amendment. In other words, Mr. President, as I see it, the amendment of the Senator from Washington works no substantial change of any kind in the text of the bill. It still leaves wholly obliterated all distinctions between first and second offenses under the proposed act, and that is the important thing to bear in mind. The amendment of the Senator from Washington leaves absolutely intact all distinctions between first and second offenses. Then, his amendment includes any and all offenses against the Volstead Act, whether of a commercial nature or not; that is to say, it includes the offense of a youth who is arrested with a hip flask in his pocket as well as the bootlegger with a capital of millions of dollars. The whole object of my substitute——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator suspend?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is disposed to hear the Senator, but will ask the Senator to let the Chair submit the point of order to the Senate for the Senate's decision. The pending amendment has been offered by the Senator from Washington, and the Senator from Maryland has offered an amendment to that amendment. The Senator from Washington has raised a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland. The question is, Is the point of order well taken?

On a division, the point of order was sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. KING. Perhaps it may be regarded as not relevant, but it occurs to me that an amendment by way of a substitute which attacks the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington would be entirely proper, and that the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland as a substitute to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington would be entirely proper. The parliamentary inquiry now is, Would not the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, which challenges only the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair, of course, thinks that any amendment which ran directly to the pending amendment would be in order.

Mr. KING. While I have the floor, if I may be pardoned——

Mr. JONES. Is the Senator speaking on the bill or the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is raising a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, addressing myself to the amendment of the Senator from Washington——

Mr. JONES. I make the point of order that the Senator from Maryland has already spoken on the amendment, and also on the bill.

Mr. BRUCE. Not on that amendment; I spoke on the first committee amendment.

Mr. JONES. I was under the impression that the Senator had spoken on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. BRUCE. Then I was under a misapprehension.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, let the amendment be reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from Washington moves to add, at the end of section 1, the following proviso:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senate has been so considerate of me that I feel that I ought to be very considerate of it; but this is the strangest provision ever proposed to be written into a law, to my knowledge.

It amounts to passing a law and then passing a Senate resolution asking the court please to follow a certain course in enforcing the law. I do not know of any precedent anywhere for this form of legislation. I beg to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that the proper way to carry out the purpose which he has in mind is to change the language of the bill and make it read in substance that "whenever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution under the national prohibition act and it appears to the court, or that the defendant is found guilty of regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize the business of the transportation or sale of liquor, in that case the court shall impose the following penalties." I have not undertaken to phrase that in exact legal terminology, but that would make the language a part of the substance of the act, and it would be mandatory upon a court, whereas the proposed amendment of the Senator, while its purpose may be humane, nevertheless is not a part of the statute. It is merely a recommendation.

I have read a good many laws in my lifetime and I never saw one with a clause like this. I suggest to the Senator that he reform his amendment by proposing a substitute for the bill containing the language which he now puts into the amendment, not as a recommendation but as a substantive part of the act itself. I say that in furtherance of proper legislation. I will say to the Senator that I shall probably vote against the bill anyway, but in its present form, it seems to me, though I dislike to say it, that it amounts to an absurdity in our legislative procedure.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. REED of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. BRUCE. I would like to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the amendment is not limited to commercial violations of the Volstead Act. It leaves the bill just as fully applicable as ever to the smaller as well as the graver offenses under the Volstead Act.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The bill could be reformed to embrace this thought, but I do not want to undertake to do it in this way without more careful consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr BROOKHART. Mr. President, this discussion has been remarkable in many respects. It has elicited about the greatest eloquence heard in the Senate during my period of service here. It has elicited some of the most remarkable arguments that I have ever heard in the Senate. One which has especially attracted my attention was made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], who said that prohibition had been repudiated by every country that had ever adopted it. I think that is the substance of his statement. I regret that he is not present at the moment so I might be corrected if I am in error.

Mr. President, I had a little experience in the recent campaign in reference to the repudiation of prohibition. I was in the State of Wisconsin and went clear across it and practically all over it. Instead of repudiating prohibition Wisconsin indorsed it by her vote in the election by some 130,000 majority. I was in the State of Missouri during the campaign, and I was clear across that State. The great State of Missouri, which is the proud home of my own birth, did not repudiate prohibition, but indorsed it by some 140,000 majority. I was in the State of Maryland, and the great State of Maryland did not repudiate prohibition, but indorsed it by some 44,000 majority and more than that as to some candidates. Yet we hear the discussion and the assertion that prohibition is being repudiated where it was adopted.

And more remarkable perhaps than these election results were the other developments of the debate to-day. Here was the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], who came in and surrendered to-day and admitted that he was opposed to the idea of prohibition in many ways, but is now going to vote for this bill to increase the penalties. Here is the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], after an election result of some 300,000 on the dry side, who comes into the Senate debate and surrenders to-day, and is now going to vote for the bill. From this we can expect almost anything. The next thing I expect to hear is that Al Smith is on the water wagon. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the evils of prohibition have been pointed out most eloquently by the great Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. Many of them have been admitted by the even greater speech of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. But neither of them has furnished us a bill of particulars as to the specific things that are causing these evils. They have dealt largely in glittering generalities. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] brought in one illustration of Pat Crowe selling his overcoat in the last few days before his suicide for a drink of booze. Despicable as that may be and severely as we may condemn it, I want to say to you, Mr. President, and to the Senate that the evils of prohibition are not caused by the Pat Crowes of the country. I hold in my hand a copy of the morning Herald, on the front page of which, in big, bold, black type, are the words:

Drys charged with corrupting youth. Girls "guzzle" as drys rant, REED says in BORAH debate.

I want to know where those girls are who are doing the guzzling in this country? Those girls are not the farmer girls of the country. There is not one of them in 10,000 guilty of that charge. Those girls are not the laboring girls of the country. There is not one of those girls in 10,000 guilty of that charge. Those girls are not the Government clerks and employees. There is not one of those girls in 10,000 guilty of that charge. But if that charge be true, it is the girls who belong to the high society of the city life who are guilty, if anybody is guilty.

I want to point out now who I think are primarily responsible for the failure to enforce this law. It is the people who occupy the big places, the high places. We have in the United States a class of people of that character who hold themselves to be above all law. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has most eloquently pointed out that other laws are violated. We have that aristocratic class which regards itself as the financial autocracy in our country and it has no respect for law. We had a Daugherty in the office of Attorney General of the United States, we had a Fall as Secretary of the Interior, and the Dohenys and the Sinclairs go unpunished under our laws because this upper crust of American society refuses to abide by and to obey the law.

I want to say that nearly all of the big hotels of the country are violating the law right now and they are going unpunished. Gen. Smedley Butler would have cleaned up Philadelphia until it would have been as dry as any little town in my own State of Iowa if he had had the support of the high society of the city of Philadelphia. But when he came to lock up the hotels and the aristocratic clubs his support oozed away and his crusade was partly a failure. The same situation is true in all the cities of the country.

Mr. President, right here in the city of Washington the trouble is the violation of this law by the high society of this city. I do not know much about it because I do not get very much into that society. But I know a little about it. I know how a Wall Street gang can invite a crowd of United States Senators to a dinner and can set out a hip flask of whisky for everyone who wants to take it, and all that sort of thing, in violation of the law of the United States, and yet this is the same crowd of people that calls upon the Congress and upon the country to protect the greatest wealth in the history of the world with law. This is the same crowd that denounces everyone as Bolshevik who stands for economic equality with labor and the common people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, that is the class that is dangerous to the Constitution of the United States. The Pat Crowes, the little criminals, the little drunkards, will never overthrow the Government of the United States; it is in no danger from that class of criminals; but the other class, with its great and far-reaching economic power, spreading out into every industry and into every enterprise in our country, with its disregard for law, is dangerous to the Republic itself.

Mr. President, I say to you if the Secretary of the Treasury had proceeded against high social violations, he could have enforced the prohibition law much better than he ever has done during the present administration; but he has winked at this element of high society; no attempt has been made to bring these financial autocrats to account for their violations of the prohibition law. Anything that has happened to any of them has been purely incidental and usually smoothed up and whitewashed over. It is the Pat Crowes and the little criminals who have been punished instead.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield just a moment for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the junior Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BROOKHART. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to ask if any Senator can inform us when we shall begin voting? A vote has seemed imminent four or five times, and if a vote is going to be deferred for some time, I think there are many Senators who would like to know it.

Mr. BROOKHART. The only thing I can say is that we shall probably vote when the debate ends. I have no inside information on that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was wondering if there were any other Senators who desired to speak when the Senator from Iowa shall have concluded?

Mr. BROOKHART. I can not answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. BROOKHART. Mr. President, I think it is time to stir up a real row on this prohibition question. That is the reason I am speaking during these few minutes upon it. I was proud to listen to the eloquent arguments in favor of prohibition, but I want some arguments made in favor of enforcing the prohibition law against the most guilty criminal class that is violating it. It is not the common people who are paying the high prices for bootleg whisky; it is not the ordinary person who indulges in the violation of the law; it is the persons who take an extraordinary toll profit from those same common people, and then will be exempt from the prosecution which they so justly deserve.

I have some hope of the new administration. I have some hope that a real effort will be made when the new President assumes his office. I think the greatest point of inefficiency in the enforcement of the prohibition law has been the failure even to try to set up a machine big enough and adequate to enforce the law of the whole country. Instead of that our appropriations have been held down. The enforcement has been but part way done. There has been only a partial success for prohibition. In spite of that, Mr. President, in spite of all these defects and all these troubles, in spite of the widespread violation by the aristocratic class of our country, it is still being enforced among the great body of our people. They are gladly submitting to that enforcement, but they do not mean to stop with their own submission. They mean that this law shall be enforced as to all; they mean that in the end the rich and the powerful shall abide by the law in the same degree that the lowly and the ordinary person must submit. When that day comes—and it is not far distant—prohibition will remain the greatest victory of this age. It is the greatest victory for civilization that came out of the World War. I think we will all admit that the World War hastened nation-wide prohibition in the United States. But for the war and for the necessity for efficiency, which must go hand in hand with the prosecution of war, the eighteenth amendment would not have been adopted so soon. That amendment and the Volstead Act constituted the great American victory growing out of the war.

Some people talk about the modification of the Volstead Act. I am ready to modify it any minute; I will vote to modify it when this bill is voted upon; but any modification I shall vote for will be to strengthen it, to increase its power, to increase its effectiveness; and especially will I vote for any amendment or any modification that will enforce this law against the super-American aristocracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I had hoped when I heard of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that it actually modified the bill and would make some provision so that a first offender might not receive the full penalty proposed by the bill, which, as I pointed out the other day, is a greater penalty than is now provided for those who break the white slave act or the law relating to slavery or kidnaping or the importing of kidnaped persons. As I said then, it seems to me we are in danger of losing our sense of proportion when we provide a more severe penalty for a man who sells a dozen bottles of wine to his neighbor, as he and his ancestors may have done for countless generations without anyone of his race or nation thinking it to be wrong in the slightest degree, than we have provided for such universally recognized crimes, morally as well as legally, as are embraced in the terms white slavery, kidnaping, and the slave trade.

Mr. President, I am informed by those who favor the bill and who favor the amendment that the proviso offered by the Senator from Washington does not modify the law and does not legally modify the amendment to it. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether I am correct in that understanding.

Mr. JONES. I do not know exactly what the Senator means when he says that it does not even modify the amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understood the Senator to say in private conversation that his amendment was not in the nature of a legal modification of the provisions of the measure which is now pending.

Mr. JONES. No; it has not the force of a real legislative provision; but the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] stated the reasons for the proviso very clearly and very definitely and also pointed out its importance in the courts and what the effect would be if a judge should disregard it. In a strict legal sense it has not the force of law, but, in my judgment, it will accomplish exactly what we desire it to accomplish.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator who has offered the proviso states that in a technical, legal sense it will not have the force of law, I do not see how personally I can vote for the bill even if the proviso shall be attached to it. May I give one instance of what I have in mind that might happen under the bill? There might be two offenders, one a wealthy bootlegger engaged in the business of defying the Constitution and laws of the United States. There might be, on the other hand, a more or less recently arrived foreigner engaged in doing something which his ancestors have done for generations, making wine and selling it to his neighbors in small quantities, an act which he does not believe is wrong and with the penalty for doing which he is not familiar. The two come before the same judge. The judge chances to be one of those who believe that the prohibition law is more sacred than any other law on the statute book and one of those who happens to believe that the selling of wine is a greater offense against the United States than the slave trade or kidnaping, and consequently the judge, using the complete legal power of his office, gives the full penalty to both offenders—five years in jail and a fine of $10,000. The poor man must take his medicine, for he has no money with which to appeal the case. The rich bootlegger may appeal the case, and if he is able to prove to the court of appeals that his offense is merely a casual violation, that the offense for which he was caught and tried was the transportation of wine in a truck from one warehouse to some one's house and that that was a casual act, he may secure his freedom, whereas the poor man, who is not able to afford the bringing of an appeal to the higher court, must suffer the full penalty of the law.

Mr. President, I had hoped that this amendment might provide for a lenience to first offenders, but since it does not so provide and since, as I have pointed out, it still makes it perfectly legal for a judge who is partially disposed in this matter to inflict the full sentence of the law upon an humble first offender, I shall have to vote against the bill even if it contains this amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I know that I can not add anything to what has already been said with reference to this measure, but I do want to explain my position on the matter.

I think the bill is objectionable for two reasons. First, I can not conceive why those who have charge of prohibition enforcement in this country should feel that by making the penalty five years they are in any wise aiding the cause of prohibition. In my humble judgment—and I have had considerable experience in prosecuting cases—if we make this penalty five years we are going to get less convictions under the law than if we leave it as it is to-day.

The trouble with prohibition is not that the penalties are not sufficiently severe. The trouble to-day is that there is not, in most of the communities in this country, any attempt to enforce the law. Let me say that in my experience in prosecuting cases I found that where a severe penalty is provided for, and it is left up to the court to impose that penalty, as it is in all cases in the Federal courts, the jury very frequently say, "We are not going to find this man guilty and leave it up to the judge to send him away for five years." Consequently, regardless of whether or not the jury should do that, the fact is that they do it in innumerable cases.

Where there is a State statute, in many of the States, or at least in Montana, it is left up to the jury to fix the penalty. In the Federal courts that is not so; and while in the Federal courts the jury are not supposed to know anything about what the penalty is and are not supposed to take that into consideration, yet any lawyer who has ever prosecuted any cases knows that almost always the jury do take into consideration, as one of the elements in determining whether or not they are going to find the defendant guilty, the question as to whether there is a severe penalty or a light penalty.

In view of what has taken place in the city of Chicago recently, and in view of what is going on in other parts of the country with reference to bootleggers and with reference to corruption and with reference to the debauchery of our public officers, I appreciate that one hesitates to stand upon this floor and say anything against a bill of this sort, as his statements are bound to be misconstrued. It does seem to me, however, that the Senate of the United States ought not to pass a law saying that when a man comes up for selling a glass of beer or for selling a glass of wine we are going to authorize some court to say that that man can be sent to the penitentiary for five years, whereas if Secretary Fall had been convicted he could have been sentenced to only two years.

Much as I should like to see this law enforced, and much as I should like to help the enforcement officers enforce it, I am unable to bring myself to believe either that we are helping it by raising the penalty to five years or that we are doing a right or a just thing by giving into somebody's hands the power to put some man away for five years.

I know a good many of the prohibition officers, and I know what everybody else knows—that until quite recently, at least, the prohibition department was reeking with graft and corruption. The Senator who occupies the chair at the present time [Mr. ASHURST in the chair], who took part in the investigation that went on for some time into the Department of Justice, knows that we had evidence before that committee showing shocking conditions of how men got tremendously rich by engaging in the bootlegging business. We had before us the evidence of how George Remus started out as a police-court lawyer in the city of Chicago, and how he gradually took over one distillery and then another, until finally he became the owner of 17 different distilleries in the United States of America, and became a multimillionaire. We also had before us in that case the evidence of how he had bribed officials in various States of the Union.

Of course, Mr. President, if this law were directed at men of that type, I should say that we not only ought to give them five years but, if possible, we should give them 10 years in the penitentiary; but men of that type can be reached at the present time. They can be reached under the bribery statutes. They can be reached under many other laws that are upon the statute books at the present time, if we want to get at them. But I am unwilling to vote for a law that is going to say to some court, "You can send this man away for five years because he has given or sold his neighbor a glass of beer or a glass of wine," unless it is amended in such a way as that the evidence must show conclusively that the man is engaged in that business for profit.

Mr. GLENN. Mr. President, I have listened with interest to this debate, and especially to the two leading speeches, made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

I was somewhat disappointed that the particular measure before the Senate was not gone into more specifically and at greater length by those distinguished Senators.

I regard for the moment, at least, the virtues or the defects of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment as not specifically and particularly involved in the particular matter now before the Senate.

There are in the Senate earnest and sincere men who desire to see this act enforced who are not in sympathy with the idea that this body should enact any legislation which might possibly result in the severe punishment of five years' imprisonment and a $10,000 fine for a comparatively trivial offense.

It was stated by the proponent of this legislation that he desired to reach not the casual offender, not the occasional offender, not the young man who obtains a pint or half pint of home-made wine and carries it across the street to his neighbor's house, but that he desired to reach a great evil, namely, commercialized traffic in liquor.

Is the Senate so utterly devoid of legal capacity and of ability to use legal terms and the English language that it can not frame an amendment or a bill stating in better fashion and reaching more effectively the evil complained of and sought to be remedied than does this amendment?

I have a regard and a love for the legal profession and the practice of the law and the accomplishments of that great profession. I say that we are poor, indeed, here this afternoon if we send forth from this body, to reach this great evil, this amendment.

What is the last amendment?

The amendment to the amendment says:

> That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempt to commercialize violations of the law.

What the Senator from Washington desires to reach is the great organizations and directors of commercial traffic in liquor; and he says himself, as does the report of the committee, that the penalty against the casual and the slight violation is already severe enough. Can we not write into the body of this law a distinction in fact and in effect and in penalty between the boy 16 or 17 years of age who walks across the street with a bottle of wine in his pocket, without any desire to profit financially, and the great organized rings of bootleggers who go about this land with murder in their hearts? Can we not distinguish between those two violations in language clear and distinct, and in penalties? I think we can.

What is it that we ask in this last amendment? We say to the Federal courts of the United States, "We ask you in this particular case to take into consideration the facts in arriving at and fixing the penalty."

Are we to assume, then, that the Federal judges of the United States, appointed for life, have not enough intelligence, have not enough discretion, have not enough humanity in their character and in their hearts to discriminate between the casual violator and the great commercialized ringster, unless we ask it here? And if we adopt this precedent and say to the Federal courts in the case of this particular crime and under this particular act, "We pray of you to look into the facts before you fix the penalty," should we not then go back into every one of all the criminal laws of the United States and write a similar provision into each one, and say to the Federal judge, as here, "We beseek you that before you fix the penalty you look into the facts, and that you not punish the first slight violator as extremely as you do the corrupt and the continuous and the great violator." Why not say the same thing as to the violations of the banking act, and of all other acts on the statute books of the United States, if it is necessary and proper to say it in this act? Why not define the crimes covered by those other laws, and distinguish between them?

The Senator from Washington says he does not want to reach, and that it is not necessary to increase the penalty for, the casual violator, that he desires to reach those only who are in the business for commercial purposes. Why not make it a substantive part of the offense and say so in the act, and not do a thing that has never been done, so far as I know, in any State of this Union, or in the Congress of the United States, in any criminal statute that has ever been enacted at any place to punish any offense?

The report of the committee reads as follows:

> These penalties are adequate where the commercial element is not present, but they are absolutely inadequate when applied to professional bootleggers and other large-scale operators. This fact makes advisable an amendment to the prohibition act. Such amendment should not operate harshly upon the casual violator.

This will operate harshly upon him if he is sent to the penitentiary and imprisoned for five years, or fined $10,000. But this report upon which the Senator from Washington relies recommends that this provision which we are asked to enact should not apply harshly to the casual violator. It goes on to say:

> Its object is to reach the professional commercial operators who profit financially by their criminal definance of the law.

Yet in the proposed amendment there is inserted no requirement that before the maximum penalty is applied the commercial element must be present, or that it must be a second or a subsequent offense.

Let us take a few moments to consider this. There are able lawyers in this body, some of whom have devoted 10, 12, 14, or 15 years of careful thought to this subject—men rich in brain and mind and education. Let them hesitate here for a few moments and think of the casual violator, in order that they may write into this law the protection which the committee itself recommends and which the Senator from Washington himself says he is a believer in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. GLENN. Suppose this bill should be enacted into law, and suppose there were an attempt to apply it. It is said that we can rely always upon the discretion of a Federal judge and a Federal court. We all know that we have occasionally on the Federal bench men who are not of the highest character in judgment and in education. Let us think of the young men and the young women in America for a moment, casual violators, who may be sent to prison for five years and fined $10,000. Let us throw a protection and a safeguard around those people. We can do it. If not, we confess ourselves bankrupt in intellect, in legal knowledge, and in legal training.

I suggested an amendment, not upon the floor, but privately, that we insert after the word "offense" in line 9 on page 1—but let me read the bill as it is. It provides as follows:

> That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquor, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

I propose in line 9, after the word "offense," that there be inserted the words "when such offense is committed for financial gain, or constitutes other than a first offense."

In other words, it would change this amendment so that those who do not commit an offense for financial gain——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would not the Senator be willing to strike out the first part, "for financial gain"? Does not the Senator think that would be a very difficult thing to prove, and would he not be willing to insert simply the language with reference to the first offense? Nine times out of ten it would be almost impossible for the Government to prove that a transaction was for the purpose of financial gain.

Mr. GLENN. I do not think it would be very difficult; it might occasionally be difficult, but, for instance, the agents who were mentioned the other day go into a bootlegging place, a soft-drink parlor, find someone selling liquor over the bar, and money changing hands—that is the usual operation; that would suffice to prove financial gain.

Mr. BORAH. In that particular case it would. The Senator is an able and experienced lawyer, and while I admit it would suffice in some simple case, it would be very difficult in a great many. I myself would like to see the first-offense provision cut out.

Mr. GLENN. I think it ought to be.

Mr. BORAH. I am aware that in cutting it out the bill would be weakened to some extent, because there are first offenders who are just as flagrant offenders as are any others. On the other hand, there are many instances in which injustice might be done to a first offender. It strikes me that when we have eliminated the first offender, we have then made the bill sufficiently safe, in view of the fact that the discretion of the Federal judges so far in the history of the United States has been exercised always upon the side of the minimum punishment.

Mr. GLENN. I think I realize the strength in the position of the Senator from Idaho, and I believe he realizes some strength in the position which I take, and if the Senator would join with me in advocating my suggestion, as modified by his suggestion, I would be willing to accede.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon an interruption; I am not entitled to the floor, but I am interrupting in the Senator's time——

Mr. GLENN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED of Missouri. I suggest allowing the measure to stand as it now is, and then to add a separate section applicable to this particular class of cases, so that a man could be indicted and tried for the particular offense we have in mind. Very roughly I have prepared this:

> That whoever shall engage in the business of illegally manufacturing, transporting, or selling liquor for profit shall be fined not to exceed $10,000 or imprisoned not to exceed five years.

That brings it to the question of the offense. They engaged in the business, and they engage in it for profit. That is the class of people we are told there is a desire to penalize.

There is this to be said, even as to that provision, that some boy may be working in a soda fountain somewhere and may sell a bottle of 1 per cent beer, and he might be in the business for profit. So hardship is liable to come.

I agree with the Senator from Illinois—I think I had said practically the same thing—that to write a law that has a general provision that catches everybody, and then ask the court not to apply that law to certain people, is, in effect, to endeavor to distinguish between two offenses in the same indictment and to fix a different penalty under a different state of facts, although the indictment in each instance is the same.

I will add this, with the Senator's permission, that I believe that if a law of that kind were enacted in the form now proposed, it could be defeated on appeal on the ground that one indicted under it was not indicted for the actual offense for which he was punished; that is to say, the court had imposed an additional penalty in his case over the one that he would have imposed if it had not been for the fact of this qualified recommendation of Congress. I am not saying that is a sound position, but it occurs to me at the time as a very dangerous situation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I think the indictment would have to allege that the alleged violator was engaged in the business for profit, because everything you want to prove must be alleged; and, having alleged it, if you do not prove it, you fail. It is an invitation to a judge who does not want to enforce the law not to do it.

Mr. GLENN. It is correct, of course, that the Government would have to allege that, but that is done frequently in Federal prosecutions.

There is a substantial element in this body that is very anxious to see these real criminals, arch conspirators, and constant violators punished. Five years is not too much of a sentence, and they are anxious to vote for that. At the same time they feel sincerely and honestly that the measure is a very dangerous one in the form in which it now is. I hope that some of those who have been active in framing this amendment will consider this matter in order that the evil which is sought to be reached can be reached and punished without undue danger to those whom we ought in a measure to protect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLENN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it becomes necessary under this or any amendment to charge that a man is engaged in the business of selling liquor for profit, in order to obtain a conviction, would it not be necessary to prove not only that he was engaged in the business for profit but that he obtained profit?

Mr. GLENN. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a very difficult thing to prove.

Mr. GLENN. You prove he received the money, when there is an offer to sell liquor for money. That is a very simple thing to prove. Now, when a sale is charged, you have to prove the sale.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BARKLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me a moment, I want to say this: That if you indicted a man, for instance, and charged in the indictment that he was in the business of selling liquor for profit, you would not actually have to prove by direct, positive evidence that he got a profit out of it, but you could prove it, of course, by circumstantial evidence. The fact that the man, for instance, had a place of business, had a large supply of liquor on hand, and that people frequented the place would of itself be evidence upon which a jury could base a conviction on a charge that he was engaged in the business for profit.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am somewhat in doubt about the necessity or the desirability of the amendment in any form, for the very reason suggested by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN]. It may be an invitation to lenient Federal judges to deal too leniently with criminals in cases where they might not otherwise feel justified in doing it. They might use this provision as a justification for light sentences in communities where they thought such an excuse was necessary.

The whole question involves the matter of the best way in which the eighteenth amendment and the law enacted for its enforcement can be observed and enforced. There have been many reasons assigned by those who have opposed not only this bill but the whole policy involved in it, for the violation of the law. It has been asserted by vehement gentlemen that it can not be enforced, that it never has been and never will be enforced. I am inclined to believe that many criminals throughout the country have been encouraged to violate it in order to fulfill the prophecies of men who have from the very beginning announced that it could not be enforced.

There are many reasons probably for the existence of the conditions which have been described during the debate on the pending question. As the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] said earlier in the day, the eighteenth amendment was placed in the Constitution as a result of nearly 50 years of agitation and education among the people on the subject of the evils of intemperance. It was placed in the Constitution in the only way that any amendment can be placed there, by receiving two-thirds of the votes of each House of Congress and the ratification of three-fourths of the States. It so happens that this particular amendment was ratified by a larger proportion of the States than I think ever ratified any amendment of the Constitution subsequent to the first 10.

One of the difficulties in which we found ourselves in the country was due to the fact that when the amendment had been proposed by Congress and had been ratified by the States and had been proclaimed by the Secretary of State as a part of our Constitution, many enthusiastic and sincere advocates of the amendment concluded that the fight was over for all time. They had the amendment and they celebrated throughout the country the death of John Barleycorn and baked their feet at a warm fire, retired to bed, and thanked the Almighty that it was all over. They were aroused very soon to discover that it was not all over because immediately many of those who had opposed the amendment from the beginning inaugurated an organized effort to prove that it could not be enforced. Dozens of organizations all over the country sprang up under various names, all of them more or less well financed and ably organized with instruments of publicity and propaganda, and started out to prove, before the law had a chance, that it could not be enforced.

In order to prove that it could not be enforced they proceeded forthwith to violate it and then use their own violations as evidence of the nonenforceability of the statute or the Constitution. Of course, such evidence is not entitled to credit anywhere; it is not entitled to credit here and it is not entitled to credit in the public opinion of the United States. It is not entitled to credit in any court. It is entitled to no credit where men look with judgment and discretion upon reason and propaganda advanced for or against any constitutional provision or amendment.

It has been complained over the country that the eighteenth amendment can not and ought not to be enforced because it was never submitted to a vote of the people and that the people have never passed upon it as a part of their Constitution. The same reasoning would apply to every other amendment of our Constitution. It would apply to the income tax amendment. It would apply to the nineteenth amendment granting women the right to vote throughout the country. It would apply with equal force to the amendment providing for the direct election of United States Senators. Yet I imagine that if any man should appear here with a commission in his hands from a legislature of any State as evidencing his right to a seat in this body, he would not even be permitted to enter during recess, to say nothing of entering during a session of the Senate.

It is begging the question, however sincere any man may be as to the unwisdom of the policy in the beginning. I am not one of those, for I not only voted in the House of Representatives for the submission of the amendment, but I voted for the Volstead Act which was designed for its enforcement, and I have not yet reached the time when I regret either of those votes or that I would change either of them if the proposition were put up to me as a new one now to be passed upon. So that we have the amendment in the Constitution as much a part of it as if it had been included at the Philadelphia convention presided over by George Washington, when the Constitution was written in the first instance and submitted to the thirteen Colonies.

Various proposals have been suggested as to a form of evasion or modification. There are those who are advocating throughout the country the amendment of the Volstead Act so as to provide for the sale of what is called light wine and beer. Let us see what the legal effect of that would be. The Constitution, in the eighteenth amendment, prohibits the manufacture, sale, or transportation of any intoxicating liquor as a beverage. There may be differences of opinion as to what is intoxicating liquor. For four years in my home State I was prosecuting attorney in a county where the licensed saloon existed, and yet there were then bootleggers by the hundreds and it was my duty to prosecute them. It was always a difficult thing to prove that any given liquor was actually intoxicating. It had to be submitted to the scientific analysis of chemists to determine the actual alcoholic content, and then we had to determine by that content whether in all probability it was capable of intoxicating.

I think every man will admit, whether he is for the policy or against it, that Congress has no power to enact any law that will legalize or attempt to legalize the sale of any liquor that would be actually intoxicating.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Kentucky on the bill has expired. He has 10 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. We know as a matter of common knowledge that wine, in order to be preserved as a beverage and to be fit for use or consumption, must contain in the neighborhood of 10 or 12 per cent of alcohol. We also know as a matter of common knowledge and observation, if not experience, that any beverage which contains as much as 10 or 12 per cent alcohol is intoxicating. Therefore a desirable wine for beverage purposes must contain at least 10 to 12 per cent of alcohol, and if it be true that any such beverage is intoxicating, then the Congress of the United States has no legal power to modify the Volstead Act or to enact any independent statute that would attempt to legalize the sale of a liquor which is actually intoxicating in fact, as wine is and must be.

Let me now consider the question of beer. There has been a good deal of agitation in the country for a beer that would contain 2.75 or 3 per cent alcohol, and there may be room for honest difference of opinion as to how much alcohol is necessary in beer in order to make it intoxicating. But we know that those who desire the beverage will not be satisfied with any kind of an amendment that does not provide for a beverage that will, to use a common expression, have a kick in it. Even the Supreme Court of the United States has declared beer as a matter of law to be intoxicating in affirming a decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, which held that beer as a matter of law is intoxicating. I have no doubt that if there is a court in the United States in any State which has expert knowledge in that respect, it ought to be one in the State of Wisconsin. So I think we might take it as a matter of fact as well as a matter of law that wine and beer are both intoxicating and their manufacture or sale are in violation of the Constitution.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I meant no reflection upon any of the courts of Wisconsin.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I want to inform the Senator from Kentucky that Wisconsin has always been a temperate State, that it has less violations of law than any other State in the Union, that in the enforcement of prohibition Wisconsin is second to none, and that if it were not for the illicit hard liquor from some of the prohibition States we would be less troubled with the enforcement of the prohibition law.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Wisconsin I fear is oversensitive. I did not mean by my remarks to suggest that the court, or its personnel in Wisconsin, by reason of its habits, was more qualified to pass upon the subject, but the State of Wisconsin, or at least one great city in that great State, had become widely known for the character as well as the quantity of its beer, and it ought to have expert knowledge as to what is actually beer in that State and other States.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit an interruption——

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not want this taken out of my time because I have one or two other sentiments I want to utter.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit me, I want to suggest that if we had to-day that which made Milwaukee famous we would not have the vices and crimes which we now have under prohibition.

Mr. BARKLEY. So long as the State of Wisconsin and the city of Milwaukee have the distinguished Senator here in this body there is no need why it should not be famous.

Mr. President, if we are prepared to admit that wine and beer are actually intoxicating not only in fact but in law, no matter how much agitation there may be or how much pressure may be brought to bear, there is no way by which Congress can amend the Volstead Act so as to legalize their sale. The only other alternative suggested by the law's opponents is to bring about what has been described as the Canadian system by having the United States itself engaged in the manufacture and sale and distribution of intoxicating liquor. If the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution forbids any citizen in the United States from engaging in the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor how can the Government itself engage in that thing which it forbids all its citizens to engage in? As a lawyer I do not believe there can be any amendment adopted to the Volstead law that could legally authorize the United States as a Government to do what it denies all its citizens the right, to wit, to manufacture and sell and distribute liquor. But if it could do it, I would be opposed to it because if we have discovered in Philadelphia and in Chicago and here in Washington and elsewhere throughout the United States, as has been charged in this debate, from time to time, and is no doubt true to a large extent, that the police department and the enforcement officers are subject to corruption and bribery by reason of the pressure brought to bear upon them to permit violations of the law, how much more of a saternalia of corruption and bribery would we see in every part of the United States if the Government is going to be the manufacturer and distributor and seller of intoxicating liquor at every crossroads in the country and in every block in every city in the United States, because we can not have it in one place and deny it in another place because the Constitution provides, at least in the taxing clause, where the laws must be uniform throughout the United States.

But when efforts were made in the past to provide that no Government license should be issued in a State where the people had outlawed liquor by popular vote, the courts even held that that could not be done because the Constitution required that taxes should be uniform throughout the United States. If under such a program as that we are to have Uncle Sam standing at every crossroads and on every block in every city and in every community manufacturing and selling and distributing this thing which we call intoxicating liquor, that can not be now sold under the Constitution, we have not seen or heard of any corruption compared to that we should see if the United States itself should go into the liquor business.

So, Mr. President, while I admit the right of every man to advocate the repeal of any law, I do not agree that any man or any set of men, whether they be in office or out of office, whether they belong to an organization or simply be individuals, have the right to encourage the violation of the prohibition law or any other law in order to use their own violations or the violations which they have encouraged as evidence of the fact that the law can not be enforced.

Therefore, I not only favor this bill but I am in favor of any amendment that will strengthen the hands of the United States Government not only in its effort to enforce the law but that will compel those who are responsible for the appointment of public officers to appoint men who will in the performance of their duty stand up like stone walls against every pressure and all propaganda that would seek to induce them to condone the violation of the law so as to create even worse conditions than now exist throughout the United States due to its violation. This question involves the very question of self-government. It involves the question whether the people and their Government are to surrender to the violators of a law which has not yet had a fair chance to demonstrate its full benefits or its enforceability.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I shall not engage in any discussion of the method through which the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted. It would be trite to do that; it would be recultivating soil already cultivated many times. It is sufficient to say the amendment is a part of the solemn law of the land, and will in my judgment remain so during your lifetime and mine.

The only question with which we are dealing to-day is the punishment to be imposed for infractions of the prohibition law; that is to say, the maximum and the minimum permitted under the law, and the exercise of discretion vested in the judiciary of the country in administering the punishment. Mr. President, that question is embodied in the original bill sponsored by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

It proposes to vest in the presiding Federal judge of the court in question the power to impose a fine in any sum from $1 to $10,000, a fine of $1 and one day in jail, a fine of $1 and five years in jail or both, or a $10,000 fine and five years in jail. The punishment may be fixed anywhere within those limits. The amendment now pending undertakes to advise the court how that discretion should be exercised. As a believer in prohibition, and as one who has supported and respected the law, it is against that amendment that I raise my voice.

I do not believe the legislative branch of the Government should advise the judiciary how the vested discretion should be exercised. If a judge is unable to understand the theory on which a law providing a maximum and a minimum punishment is based, he is wholly unfit to serve as judge of a court and to exercise the discretion underlying a law of that kind. If a judge does not understand that he is vested with the discretion of taking into account elements, factors, and conditions that call for mitigation in a given case, and consequently fix the punishment accordingly, he is unfit to wear the toga of his office. On the other hand, if he is unable to understand that the more severe elements of the law are to be employed and brought into play when dealing with professional violators or those who engage in the business upon a large scale, and should differentiate between men in that class and a boy or a first offender, I have no words with which to express the contempt in which I hold that judge so utterly devoid of judgment and discretion.

However, Mr. President, to say—

That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law—it not only ventures to advise the judiciary what should be done, but it also offers an excuse which may be employed by a judge unworthy to be a judge to evade the discharge of his duty under the law of the land by shielding himself behind the advice thus given.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any legal definition of a casual violator of the law? How often would one have to be a violator in order to become an habitual violator, or would a casual violator be a man who unintentionally violated the law, and not one who intentionally violated it; and if he intentionally violated it, is he a casual violator; and should there be any distinction made between him and some other offender who may have been offending for many months but perhaps has not been caught?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I should dislike very much to undertake to define the difference between the two, and yet I doubt if there is a Member of the Senate who does not have in mind clearly the difference between the two classes; neither do I believe there is a judge in the country who would have any trouble in distinguishing between them.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am in sympathy with the Senator's viewpoint on this matter. I am wondering, however, if we are going to insert in the bill a provision that the courts shall be more lenient with the casual violator whether we should not also give the court directions as to who are casual violators.

Mr. BRATTON. That would lead us still further into troubled paths. The Senator from Kentucky and I are in accord with regard to the legislation. It is the unwisdom of embarking upon the policy of attempting to advise a coordinate branch of the Government in the exercise of a discretion vested in that department against which I complain. I think the Congress has discharged its whole duty when it prescribes a maximum and a minimum punishment under the act, and then leaves it to the judiciary to exercise that discretion without any advice or any expression of policy upon the part of Congress.

Mr. President, I do not care to discuss this subject more at length. It has been my observation that under existing law the Federal judges of the country have exercised discretion as between the maximum and the minimum penalties with care and with judicial credit. I do not believe the time has come when it is necessary or even advisable for the Congress to undertake to advise the judiciary as to the exercise of a discretion. That is all the amendment does.

Mr. CARAWAY. If we can not trust a judge, we ought not to put the provision in.

Mr. BRATTON. Exactly; if we can not trust a judge, we should employ methods to get rid of the judge and get a man in his stead who can and will exercise discretion with some degree of fearlessness and fidelity to his trust, and with some conception of the pulse beats of a human being who can administer justice tempered with mercy.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending amendment, and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. The pending amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and so-called regular bootlegging or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to modify the amendment so as to make it read as follows:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquor or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, the only change proposed by my amendment to the amendment is to strike out the words "so-called regular bootlegging" and substitute what seems to be the more correct English, namely, "habitual sales of intoxicating liquor."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, with reference to that amendment, let me say, I have no serious objection to it. It probably is couched in a little more polite and nicer language than I used. I think the language used by me is the common, everyday language, the appellation by which the business is known. However, if it would please any Member of the Senate to have more polite and possibly more correct English employed, I have no objection at all.

I think, Mr. President, I will take this opportunity to say a word with reference to what the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] has just said. I have the same view that he has. I expressed on the floor my confidence in the courts and in the judges, and that we could very safely leave this matter with them, but I have found that in this body, as well as in other bodies, there is much difference of opinion among equally honest and sincere men with reference to what might appear to be the most simple proposition. I found the other day that there are several Senators here who are just as sincerely for prohibition as I am, who are more able than I am, who are better fitted to discharge legislative duties than I am, who would prefer to have some provision of this kind. They were fearful of the action of the judges, or of some of the judges, and so, simply to allay that fear, and to meet that situation in a spirit of concession and compromise—which I do not think does any harm—I prepared this amendment and conferred with probably a half a dozen or a dozen Members of the Senate with reference to it, and with reference to its language, and the friends of prohibition, and some of those who thought that they could not vote for the bill as it was originally reported, were satisfied with the amendment as it is now proposed.

As I have said, personally I have no fear as to the judges and the judiciary of the country, but I can see no harm to come from the pending amendment; in fact, I think the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] earlier in the day pointed out very clearly the distinct advantages that may possibly come from its adoption. That is all, Mr. President, I care to say with reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Washington accepts the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania to his amendment?

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the pending amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following, as modified:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquors or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, unless this bill is amended, in my judgment, it will defeat its principal object.

Fortunately, the Constitution gives each defendant the right to summon a jury. We know to-day that in actual practice many thousands of men plead guilty, so that the Government is not put to the expense or the courts to delay in the trial of thousands of prohibition cases. But if, in the case of each offender who is brought into court for the first time, a discretion is left in the hands of the judge to send him to the penitentiary for five years or impose a fine of $10,000, each defendant will call a jury and the machinery of justice will be clogged.

So the very extreme to which this bill goes will, in my opinion, defeat the primary object of the bill, which is to punish the habitual offender, the man who frequently violates the law, the conspirator, the professional bootlegger.

The word "casual" and the words "slight violation" are new legal terms. If any Senator can tell what a "casual violation" of the law means, I should like to hear it; or if any Senator can tell what a "slight violation" of the law means, I should welcome an explanation.

There is no such thing as a casual violation of the law. There certainly is no such thing as a slight violation of the law.

If the Senate means one thing, and the chairman of the committee reporting this bill says that it does mean a certain thing, that this extreme penalty shall apply to the habitual violator of the law, why can we not write that clearly in the law?

I know of no statute upon our books which is followed by another statute saying to a judge, "You shall construe the preceding words in this way." I know of no statute at the present time that states that what Congress meant was not what it said and advises the judge in the matter of the exercise of his discretion in construing a law.

I agree with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. GLENN]. If we understand that this extreme penalty is to be applied only to frequent violators of the law, we can write it in there. If we desire to exempt from this law the first offender, we can so state; but to state the extreme penalty of the law and then say that this is a thing that Congress does not desire, and follow it by the statement that a judge shall not consider casual or slight violations of the law, I am sure will create confusion in the minds of all the district attorneys in the United States, it will create confusion in the minds of the judges, and it will be a distinct departure from the form of any statute heretofore written by Congress.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator thinks that if we add this interpretation to the law we ought to add also another provision interpreting the interpretation. Is that right?

Mr. HAWES. Yes; and then, right after that, another interpretation interpreting the second interpretation. Then possibly a court may understand what we mean.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, the thing that would be amusing, were it not serious, is that every declaration made here upon the floor that the law is unenforceable comes from some one who does not want it enforced.

Not a Senator on the floor has expressed any doubt about the power to enforce this law who desires that the law should be enforced.

To me it seems to be perfectly idle to say this law can not be enforced. To do so is to argue that America has reached the stage in its development where we refuse to obey the law, and we must accept public opinion in lieu of the written statutes to determine what shall be the rule of conduct in America, and that public opinion must be made by the criminal. It never before was thought in the interpretation of a law that you must first ascertain whether those who oppose law are pleased with it.

For example, I could use grand larceny, and, calling to the stand only those who want to steal, prove that the law providing a punishment for grand larceny never ought to have become the law of this land. I would get just exactly the same kind of testimony, and I would get it from just the kind of sentiment that prompts the declaration here upon the floor that this law can not be enforced—a sentiment born of hostility to restrict one's desire to do the thing the law forbids.

I could call a murderer to the stand, and he would at once protest not only against the law against murder but against the harshness of the punishment of the law if he should be found guilty.

The thing that seems to me to be absurd, although I will not say it, is that we are told that the criminal himself must have the law made so mild that he will be willing to plead guilty, or else there will be no enforcement of the law. In other words, let the bootleggers write the law they want, and they will obey it. Well, that is what you ask us to do here. Let those who do not want to obey the law dictate what the law shall be; in other words, turn over the writing of a criminal statute to the criminals themselves, and then the criminals will be satisfied with it, and will not violate it.

That may be accepted as good sense somewhere, but I venture the assertion that you could take the fact that you believe in that, and get it certified by the Presiding Officer, and get into the home for the feeble-minded anywhere. You would need no other evidence of your competency to have a home provided for you.

I was very much astonished that the Senator who is the author of the bill should have agreed to accept this amendment which tells the judge, "You need not pay any heed as to what penalties the law provides. Make up your mind what will be popular." This amendment will be an invitation to violate the spirit of the law itself, and it will be hailed by every bootlegger in America as a concession by the American Congress to his desire to have a law written that will not punish him severely.

In other words, there is a perfectly understandable sentiment among bootleggers that they will not object to fines. Why, if a man is going to engage in bootlegging, he would rather be fined for so doing, because otherwise every nigger in the community would engage in bootlegging in competition with him; but if you make the fine high, nobody of that kind can engage in it, and he can pay. It would be but a high license.

I sincerely hope the amendment will be voted down, and I hope the bill as reported, with the one suggested amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], will be passed.

We are told that the penalties are too severe—five years in the penitentiary for becoming an habitual, hardened criminal, a man who corrupts society, who does society infinitely more harm than the burglar. He not only takes property, he takes reputation, he takes character, and strips the individual who falls a victim to his trade of everything that commends him to his neighbors.

Let me say that there is not a Senator who denounced this law here who would not be heard to object from here to his home, in whatever city it happens to be, if somebody tried to open a bootlegger's shop next door to him, or a saloon next door to his home, or sold his children whisky; and yet they will stand here and boast that "I do not obey the law," and then they modify that statement, or, rather, qualify it, and they seem to think they add respectability to their acts by saying "Oh, my colleagues are also a lot of dry hypocrites. They are dry-voting, wet-drinking Senators."

It is easy to make that charge. I marvel at the motive that impels a Senator to seek to discredit his colleagues in order that he may thus, as he hopes, pave the way for the return of the legal sale of liquor; that makes him impeach his own honor and other Senators' honor; that makes him seek to lead the people as a whole to think that this is a body made up of sots; and thus try to make the sale of liquor respectable. He could not do it if every Senator here were found drunk in his seat every day. It would not make the sale of whisky any more respectable, nor would it make the American people accept it as such.

I am not bragging about what happened to us last fall. I have tried to forget it, because I want to quit cussing [laughter]; but anybody who thinks America is to return to the legalized saloon has failed to take stock of public opinion in America. Whether or not you like to be made sober by law, it is going to be that way; and I know the law can be enforced.

I would not have believed anybody on oath with the power of this Government behind him who would say, "In my community we can not enforce this law." It is not always possible to secure convictions; men who ought to be punished sometimes escape; but I know the law can be enforced. From a long experience in trying to enforce a law under conditions similar, where a State had been declared dry by act of the legislature, and where the people contended that the law did not represent the opinion of a majority of the people, and therefore they encouraged violations as here by denouncing the law, as Senators are doing as to this law, and thus then, as now, inveigled many into engaging in the sale of liquor. We found that we could enforce the law, and we did enforce it; and this law can be enforced. I do not think it has been enforced as it should have been, but the fault has not been the people's nor has the failure been as pronounced as some claim.

I have seen more drunken men in a day going from this Capitol to the White House—I do not mean in either one of those places, but on the streets between the two—under the old conditions than I have seen in all of America since the prohibition law has been the law of the land.

Yesterday or the day before I heard a charge made on this floor, in an effort to discredit the law, against the girls of America, that they were guzzling beer and whisky. That is not so. If you should make that charge to an individual that "Your daughter is an habitual drunkard," you would be inviting the undertaker to call at your house early the next morning. Why then, should a charge of that kind be lodged against them in mass when no one would so say to them individually? Is it due to a lack of courage? No one would point out the girls who are thus accused of walking the streets drunk. I have not seen any of them. I have seen many young ladies since this has been the law, and, so help me Almighty God, I have not seen one of them drunk. I take it for granted, however, that those who make that charge wish it were true so that it could be offered as an evidence of the failure of this law, and thus aid the return of the licensed saloon.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I do not see the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary present, but I would like to ask some Senator who may be a member of that committee whether the matter covered by this amendment shall be passed on by the judge or the jury? In defining some crimes the word "habitual" is used, and in some jurisdictions the judge will charge the jury that as to what is habitual is a question for them to pass on from the testimony presented on the witness stand under this bill—who passes on that issue? If that is the case in regard to this matter, then this amendment, when read to a jury by the judge—and it would be his duty to read it if requested to do so either by the State's attorney or the defendant's attorney—or if he himself reads it, then who decides the issue, the judge or the jury?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption? Let me say that if this amendment is adopted it will never be read to the jury, because the jury will not have a thing to say as to what is contained in it. If this amendment is put on to this bill, it will be put on, not for the jury, but for the court to take into consideration and only for the court to take into consideration, and the jury will not have a thing to say about it.

Mr. BLEASE. I understand, Mr. President, and I do not know about the other States——

Mr. WHEELER. But this is a Federal law.

Mr. BLEASE. I understand.

Mr. WHEELER. The Federal law is the same in one State as it is in another.

Mr. BLEASE. I do not know about other States, but in my own State almost invariably the defendant's counsel himself will read to the jury the statute under which the defendant is indicted, and if he desires to do so, he can request the court to charge on that proposition, and if the attorney does so request, it is error in the court if he does not comply unless he covers it in his general charge.

I am satisfied that in the jurisdiction of my State either Judge Cochran or Judge Watkins or the third judge, whom I am going to have appointed either just before this Congress adjourns or just after, will read that law and deliver his charge on it. I am glad that on Saturday I brought up this question of severe punishment and it has been so fully discussed.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that in a Federal court, whether it is in South Carolina or in New York, no Federal judge would have any right or any authority to deliver a charge to the jury with reference to this provision of the law, because the practice in South Carolina is identical with the practice—in so far as charging the jury on this matter is concerned—with that in other States.

Mr. BLEASE. They are going to change the law in this country, then, because the Federal judges are the only judges in the world I know of who can charge on the facts. The State judges in South Carolina are confined in their charges to the law. It does not make any difference what the facts are; they can not even give an intimation of their opinion. If they do, it is reversible error.

It should be so in the Federal courts; but in my State—and I presume it is the same in other States—a Federal judge can direct a verdict of guilty or not guilty at any time in the proceedings when he sees fit to do so and take the case out of the jury's hands entirely. It does not make any difference how guilty a man is, if the judge sees fit to do so, he can direct a verdict of not guilty, or vice versa. He says, "If you believe the witness, as I do, you should convict," which is practically directing the verdict.

Mr. BRATTON. No, Mr. President; the judge can not direct a jury to return a verdict of guilty.

Mr. BLEASE. Oh, yes. They do that in my State sometimes. Whether they have a right or not, they do it, and the jury convicts when they say that to them, which is directing the verdict.

Mr. BRATTON. If the Senator will reflect upon that——

Mr. BLEASE. I have seen them do it. I have practiced there too long not to know.

Mr. BRATTON. Direct the jury to return a verdict of "guilty"?

Mr. BLEASE. Yes. "If they believe the witnesses of the Government."

Mr. McKELLAR. It is reversible error, then?

Mr. BRATTON. Anywhere.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no.

Mr. BLEASE. It may be reversible; but you find the court that will reverse one! I have not.

Mr. WHEELER. A Federal judge can not direct the jury to bring in a verdict of "guilty," but he can say to the jury, "In my opinion, the evidence in this case shows that the defendant is guilty."

Mr. BLEASE. What is the difference?

Mr. BRATTON. That is a different thing. That is commenting on the evidence.

Mr. McKELLAR. He can not direct a verdict of "guilty."

Mr. BRATTON. In some States, a State judge can not comment on the evidence, but a Federal judge can; but nowhere in this country can a Federal judge direct a jury to return a verdict of "guilty."

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, it is like the story of the Irishman who was in jail. Of course, it is an old story. A lawyer went to him and said, "Pat, what are you in jail for?" He told him. The lawyer said, "They can't put you in jail for that." The Irishman replied, "Begorra, I am in jail." [Laughter.]

I know what I have said to be a fact. I have practiced criminal law for 40 years in United States courts, in the State supreme court, in magistrates' courts, in mayors' courts, in trial justices' courts, and in every other kind of court, and I know as much about criminal law, so far as South Carolina is concerned, as any man in it.

Mr. BRATTON. I did not mean to say that the Senator did not know all about the law of the land——

Mr. BLEASE. No; not of the land; I do not know anything about practice outside of South Carolina.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLEASE. That is the reason I love to stay down there. I know what I can do and what I can not do and not be convicted.

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator's position, if I properly interpret it, is that the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is an attempt to divide or classify the acts which are denominated criminal, so far as punishment is concerned, but without specifically providing for or defining such punishments. In other words, acts are placed in different categories without legislation defining them, but conferring upon the courts the authority, if not making it their duty, to allocate acts alleged to be criminal to different categories, the result being that the courts, in effect, make the law by prescribing the punishment.

Mr. BLEASE. Absolutely.

Mr. KING. In my opinion, the constitutionality of this amendment, if it should be enacted into law, may be challenged; Congress, by the Volstead Act, has defined certain acts to be criminal. This proposed amendment recognizes that under some circumstances these crimes take on different degrees of criminality, calling for different punishment. In other words, the same act may constitute a much graver offense if committed under certain conditions. This would seem to call for a legislative enactment classifying such acts, and prescribing different punishments therefor. By this proposed amendment it is sought to make the courts legislative bodies. Congress should not shirk its duty, and at the same time attempt to infringe upon the recognized authority of the courts.

Mr. BLEASE. I thank the Senator. That is my idea, and I am glad that I called attention to this matter last week. I am glad the debate went over, and I am glad that the friends of the measure have at last seen that if they had passed it in its original shape they would have provided a means for acquitting more guilty men than of convicting them, as I said here Saturday last would be done if too severe punishment is provided.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am going to support this amendment, and I think it ought to be adopted. The question has just been raised by the Senator from South Carolina to the effect that some Federal judges direct the jury's verdict in a criminal case. If the judges do that anywhere, they are judicial tyrants. No Federal judge has the right to state to a jury what its verdict should be in a criminal case, and I do not think any Federal judge has the right to comment on the testimony to the extent of saying that under the testimony he believes the defendant to be guilty. And I do not believe a Federal judge ought to do that.

Greenleaf on Evidence lays down the proposition—and it is sound—that the judge's function is one thing and the jury's function another; that it is the province of the judge to charge the law, and the province of the jury to find the facts; that the judge has no more right to invade the province of the jury than the jury has to invade the province of the judge.

Mr. President, we have a system of judicial tyranny when a Federal judge arrogates to himself the right to direct the jury to go into the jury room and convict a man upon the testimony submitted.

I admit that in civil cases, when a case is clearly proven, sometimes the judge will tell the jury, "If you believe these facts and they are not disputed, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict"; but when a judge says to a jury, "You must convict this man," or "The testimony shows to my mind that this man is guilty," the judge is usurping authority that he does not have; and if we have any Federal judges doing that, they ought to be removed. The jury system is one of the bulwarks of this Nation. We have to protect it in its integrity, and when the humblest citizen appeals to his right of trial by jury, he has a right to be tried by 12 men, without any coercion or intimidation by any judge on the bench.

Mr. President, I want to say just this as to this amendment: I am heartily in favor of it, because if you drag into a case a boy or a girl, a man or a woman, who had not violated any law previously, but who was a citizen of good repute in the community, instead of giving him or her the same punishment that you would give to an old offender, you should let the judge, when the testimony shows that state of facts, to say to that person, "You have never been convicted before, and that is in your favor. You bear a good reputation in this community, and that is in your favor. You are going to have the benefit of it. Congress had that in mind when it passed this statute. Now, I am going to let you off with a small fine. You profit by this mistake, and do not be caught doing such a thing any more."

Then we would be doing something that would encourage the citizen to refrain from violating the law. But if we drag him in and put a fine on him that we would put on a hardened bootlegger, we make a criminal out of him, where, on the other hand, if we pursue the course suggested by this amendment, we take the man or woman out of that class and encourage them to leave such associates and be separate from them.

Mr. President, I do not understand the attitude of some of the Senators on this side in opposing this amendment. It is in the interest of law enforcement. If we put a penalty in the law so harsh that a judge or a jury will listen to the testimony when he and they know that if a conviction is had they have to impose a penalty of five years, they will say, "In this case this man is a poor man; his family needs him; it would be an outrageous thing to deprive them of his presence and his labor," and they will not convict him.

So those of you who want to wipe out the amendment are preparing to set up an arrangement by which these people will go free instead of being convicted.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. This provision does not change the minimum penalties now carried in the statute. Is it not a fact that the mere passage of a law fixing a minimum and a maximum penalty serves notice on the judge that he is to act in his discretion in applying the penalties according to the gravity of the offense?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is; but where we have a 5-year proposition here——

Mr. BARKLEY. But there is nothing mandatory in it.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the amendment simply suggests to the judge what he may do if he is called upon to invoke that provision, as he might be. He might be a fanatic; I do not know, of course; but I would like for the defendant's lawyer to be able to show that Congress here said that there are mitigating circumstances to which he may look and that he can extend to this poor fellow or poor woman the benefit of the provision, and he can put a light fine on them and exempt them from service in the penitentiary.

I think those of you who favor law enforcement and prohibition had better line up behind the amendment instead of voting it down. You are playing right into the hands of the wet forces, not only in this body but in the Nation.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of parliamentary privilege. I have already spoken once on this amendment; but since I spoke on the amendment an amendment to the amendment was accepted by the Senator from Washington. I would like to have a ruling of the Chair as to whether I have the privilege of speaking on that particular amendment as it has been amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PHIPPS in the chair). The Chair will state that the amendment now pending is an amendment as modified. Therefore it is not a new amendment. The Senator is not privileged under the agreement to speak again on the same amendment.

Mr. BRUCE. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendment has been modified.

Mr. BRUCE. And substantially modified.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maryland may proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I do not feel that I can consent to that.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that I think we can save time by doing it.

Mr. JONES. But we have a unanimous-consent agreement and have been acting under it. There will be another amendment proposed and the Senator from Maryland can speak on it.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit to the Senator from Washington that the amendment on which the Senator from Maryland spoke is not the amendment now before us. It has been modified. There might be a different argument made as to the modified amendment than was made as to the amendment before it was modified.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a point of order. I want the Senator from Mississippi to hear this. At the time the Senator from Pennsylvania offered his amendment and before the Senator from Washington accepted it, if the Senator from Maryland had risen and stated "Before that amendment is accepted I want to be heard upon it," he would then have been in order; but when the amendment was accepted without protest from anyone I really think that in the parliamentary status of the matter the Senator from Maryland would not be permitted to speak. However, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to have him speak for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRUCE. Under those circumstances I could only have contested the right of the Senator from Washington to accept the amendment. The Senator knows that through my own untimely generosity I have from the beginning completely cut myself off from any real opportunity of expressing my views in relation to the merits and demerits of the bill except in such piecemeal form that it is almost impossible for anything I have said to have had any effect. I incautiously agreed to the limitation of debate as respects the bill and then subsequently an appeal was made on behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that his time be extended, the suggestion being first made by me and then by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]; so the result was that the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Idaho had an almost unlimited opportunity to discuss the bill but no other Member of the Senate has had such an opportunity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Maryland permit the present occupant of the chair to inform him that there will be another amendment pending upon which the Senator will have time to speak? In accordance with the advice of the parliamentarian the Chair holds that it is not proper for the Senator from Maryland again to speak on the pending amendment, but there is an amendment to follow upon which he will have an opportunity to speak.

Mr. BRUCE. When I was discussing the second amendment, how could I possibly discuss the merits of an amendment that had already been agreed to?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, may I say that personally I have no objection to the Senator from Maryland speaking, but we are proceeding under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. BRUCE. I think after I have been as generous as I have been to the Senator from Washington he might not begrudge me five or six minutes' time; but I do not care.

Mr. JONES. I do not begrudge the Senator any time. I was going to withdraw any objection so far as I was concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maryland may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. COUZENS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington as modified.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment may be reported. The reason why I make the request is that I purpose to offer a substitute for it while I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Insert at the end of section 1 a new proviso, as follows:

Provided, That it is the intent of Congress that the court, in imposing sentence hereunder, should discriminate between casual or slight violations and habitual sales of intoxicating liquors or attempts to commercialize violations of the law.

Mr. BLAINE. I offer the following substitute for the amendment just reported:

Provided, That only when the offense embraces the illegal manufacture for sale, sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, or exportation for sale, shall such penalty be imposed.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, that is not a proper substitute for my provision. It might be offered as an amendment to the main section of the bill, but I do not think it is a proper substitute for my amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. The alleged purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is to make an exception in cases of dealing in liquors for commercial purposes. That is exactly the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. JONES. No; that is not the purpose of the provision.

Mr. BLAINE. The only difference is that the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is language that has never been employed in any legislative body, while the language employed in the amendment which I have offered is language that is familiar to the courts and to legislative bodies and is the language of proper legislation. I submit that it is clearly a substitute and exactly upon the same proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair is informed by the parliamentarian that the proposed substitute of the Senator from Wisconsin is in order as a substitute. For the information of the Senate the clerk will again report the proposed substitute.

The CHIEF CLERK. As a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] proposed to insert at the end of section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That only when the offense embraces illegal manufacture for sale, sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, or exportation for sale, shall such penalty be imposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not suppose the Senator from Wisconsin intended that his amendment should have that effect, but it quite obviously will abolish the penalties except when the liquor was possessed or transported or imported or exported for sale.

Mr. BLAINE. The purpose of my amendment can be obtained from the language of the amendment itself. The object of the amendment is to impose the higher penalty when illegal liquor is manufactured, transported, imported, or exported for the purpose of sale.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that would not leave the penalties existing under the present law. These would become the exclusive penalties.

Mr. BLAINE. I must disagree with the Senator on that point because the penalty to which reference is made through the word "such" is a penalty providing for an increased fine and increased imprisonment and not the penalties provided by other provisions of the law. Let me illustrate: We have a great many statutes in the various States, for instance, providing for burglary. There may be burglary in the nighttime or burglary in the daytime; it may be burglary committed with the use of dangerous weapons. But the States have been adding to, or, rather, enlarging the effect of those provisions by providing that the offense of burglary when explosives are used to commit the offense shall be punished by a penalty double the amount of the penalty where the burglary is not committed with the use of dynamite. My proposed substitute is along the same line and carries out the same theory and is in harmony with modern legislation.

I submit that the difficulty with the whole situation is that the bill is unhappily drawn. In my opinion it could be much improved upon if it were rewritten, but I am taking the bill as it comes to us and I am applying the rule exactly as it has been applied by the States in reference to the illustration I have just made. In the indictment or in the information it would be necessary to charge the illegal manufacture or the illegal transportation or the illegal exportation or the illegal importation was made for sale. The jury must pass upon that question, and the question of the penalty would not be left to the judge except as the jury had found the offense to be.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, there are just one or two additional observations that I desire to make on the pending bill. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said that as time went on he might be willing to give his assent to the adoption of some other method of dealing with the liquor problem than prohibition. But I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact, if it has not already been called to its attention, that never has any proposition of any kind been made to this body looking to the modification of the Volstead Act or the eighteenth amendment that it has not been denounced by the Senator from Idaho as "nullification"; as if it were not the free right of every American citizen to question the wisdom of any constitutional or statutory provision whatsoever.

I also take this occasion to point out how utterly impracticable it is to claim that every constitutional provision should be religiously observed. As I have often said, it is just as possible for a constitution to make a fool of itself as a statute, and frequently I have had to recall the profound remark of Edmund Burke that the worst of all tyrannies is the tyranny of a bad law. The Senator from Idaho read the eighteenth amendment word by word and then said dramatically, "There it is." Suppose that I should rise and were in an equally histrionic manner to read the provisions of the Federal Constitution that relate to the functions of the Electoral College. Does not every Member of the Senate know that those provisions are an absolute dead letter, that the presidential electors are nothing but the mere mouthpieces of the two great national parties, and that when they meet at the capitals of the 48 States of the Nation they meet simply for the purpose of mechanically registering the will of those parties?

So I might with another impressive gesture read aloud the provisions of the Federal Constitution which bear upon the old fugitive slave law. Senators will remember those provisions:

No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.

It may be true that Abraham Lincoln was personally faithful to these provisions of the Federal Constitution in connection with the fugitive slave law, but every man who is familiar with the history of this country knows that before the Civil War flamed up those provisions of the Constitution had been practically nullified by the people of the free States. Slavery had become irreconcilable with their economic growth; what is more, it had become irreconcilable with the moral progress of humanity. The consequence was that the fugitive slave law throughout the Northern States of the Union became an impotent thing though abstractly as much entitled to popular obedience as any other provisions of the Federal Constitution. Well, therefore, might I say, to use the violent language of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], that the people of the free States were traitors to the Federal Constitution.

Then the Civil War came and the wild and guilty fantasy was formed that the recently emancipated slave might be safely entrusted overnight with the franchise. The result was that the positions of the North and the South were transposed and the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments either by virtue of legal devices or overawing moral influence were reduced to nullity. To-day those provisions of the Federal Constitution are as sapless as the dead limbs of a living tree. And such the eighteenth amendment will become, if not sooner modified or repealed. It is an unenforceable thing, unenforceable as are the provisions of the Federal Constitution relating to the Electoral College; unenforceable as were the provisions of the Federal Constitution relating to the fugitive slave; unenforceable as are the provisions of the Federal Constitution relating to negro suffrage in the South.

Yes, the southern people were traitors after the Civil War when they dealt with the constitutional guaranties of negro suffrage as they did, if the Senator from Idaho is to be believed, and the northern people were traitors before the Civil War when they dealt with the constitutional guaranties of slavery as they did, if the Senator from Idaho is to be believed. Now we, North and South, are traitors because we venture to declare unenforceable this thing of prohibition which Dr. Horace W. Taft, the brother of Chief Justice Taft, and the head, as Senators know, of a famous boys' school in Connecticut, has recently affirmed to be rotting out the moral foundation and the political and social structure of the United States.

So long as I breathe I for one shall continue to call aloud for the modification of the eighteenth amendment. While I deem it my duty to supply the Prohibition Unit with all that is reasonably necessary for the enforcement of that amendment, that belief is not in the least inconsistent with my resolution so long as life shall be spared to me to do everything in my power to bring about the substitution of some rational system of liquor control for a system of liquor control that has had no effect except that of discrediting human law, debasing human morals, and mildewing human joy and happiness.

The Senator from Idaho says to us, "Yes, in time I may be with you." Within what time? I ask. Will it be when there shall be twenty-five or thirty thousand speakeasies in the city of New York instead of the 15,000 that exist in that city now, according to Mr. Mills, the recent prohibition administrator for New York, a number 100 per cent in excess of the number of licensed saloons that existed in New York City prior to the adoption of the eighteenth amendment? Will it be when there shall be not 15,000 "blind pigs" in the city of Detroit, as now, but twenty or thirty thousand, as against the 1,600 licensed saloons that existed in that city before the adoption of the eighteenth amendment? Will it be when arrests for drunkenness in towns like Roanoke, Va., and Ashland, Ky., are not 500 and 900, respectively, as now, but 1,000 and 1,800 per 10,000 inhabitants? Will it be when every prohibition officer in the land has been corrupted? Will it be when the percentage of deaths from alcoholism in this country since the enactment of the Volstead Act shall have increased from 500 per cent to 600 per cent, 700 per cent, or 800 per cent? The fact was brought out only a few days ago by the Department of Commerce that in Baltimore, the city near which I live, deaths from alcoholism have risen from a death rate of 2 per cent per 100,000 inhabitants in 1921 to a death rate of 11 per cent per 100,000 inhabitants in 1928.

The Senator from Idaho himself admits that prohibition has been the parent of graft and of lawlessness. All he pleads for is further experimentation with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The time of the Senator from Maryland has expired.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I have no desire to attempt to make answer to the rather vehement denunciation of the bill by the Senator from Maryland. I do think it is important, however, that I should invite the attention of the Senate for just a moment to the provisions of the substitute amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

I want to express my accord with what was suggested by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] a little while ago when he questioned whether or not any penalty would be left in case the Senate should adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, I wish to say to the Senate that from my examination of the subject matter it seems to me it would be dangerous to add any language of that kind to the bill, not altogether by reason of the objections suggested by the Senator from Montana, which I think may be valid in and of themselves, but largely on account of an additional reason to which attention has not as yet been called.

The Senate will bear in mind that the pending Jones bill is a penalty bill. It defines no crime at all; it merely prescribes penalties to be invoked where the law referred to has been violated. The crimes to which the penalties are to be applied are those defined in section 3 of Title II of the national prohibition act, and those crimes are set forth as follows:

> No person shall on and after the date when the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States goes into effect, manufacture, sell, barter, transport, import, export, deliver, furnish, or possess any intoxicating liquor.

There is no such thing, therefore, in the national prohibition act as "transportation for sale"; there is no such thing as "possession for sale" or "importation for sale" or "exportation for sale." Unfortunately, as I view it, for the suggestion which comes from the Senator from Wisconsin, he does not use language which limits its proposal strictly to the penalties with which we are concerned in the pending bill, but by reason of the language which he uses he reaches back and alludes to the offense itself, for he says if I caught correctly the language which was stated to the Senate:

> Provided, That only when the offense embraces the illegal manufacture for sale, sale, transportation for sale, importation for sale, or exportation for sale, shall such penalty be imposed.

Mr. President, except for the one act of sale, which is made a crime by the national prohibition act and which is also defined as a crime by the amendment, it occurs to me that there would be by the exception proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin no penalty imposed. Only in case of sale would a penalty be imposed, for in the other cases the penalty would be for offenses which are not defined by the law. I invite the attention of the Senate to that suggestion.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield gladly for a question.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator appreciate that the offense of manufacturing, the offense of transportation, the offense of importation, and the offense of exportation are all inclusive and as well include possession, sale, use, or whatever purposes to which the illegal liquor may be put?

Does the Senator appreciate that the offenses already defined are inclusive of just what I have stated and that my amendment proposes, in the imposition of the penalty, to qualify those offenses by the words "for sale"? The amendment does not create a new offense, but simply restricts the imposition of the penalty with reference to an offense that already exists.

Mr. STEIWER. I would say that the Senator in his effort to restrict has restricted something that does not exist. I can not conceive, as he intimated, that the offenses prescribed in the statute all include the idea of sale. They certainly do not. The manufacture of liquor, the transportation of liquor, or any of the illegal acts in connection with intoxicating liquor are in themselves substantive crimes under the definitions of the national prohibition act.

Now let me add one further thought.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield for a question; yes.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not want to make an argument. I will take the one word "manufacture" and limit my statement to that. The manufacture of illegal liquor includes the manufacture for sale, the manufacture for possession, the manufacture for use.

It includes any purpose to which the liquor may be devoted, so that manufacture is all inclusive of all these other purposes. That is the larger offense, and it embraces all other offenses within itself. I think the Senator has failed to take note of that fact.

Mr. STEIWER. On the contrary, I have noted that fact; but I can not concede that that would change the effect of the proposal. In the case which you suppose the offense is the illegal manufacture, not manufacture for sale. The intent to sell would not be alleged in the indictment and might not appear in the case. There could then be no penalty. Moreover, I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana is entirely sound. The penalties prescribed by the pending bill are prescribed in all-inclusive language. The language of the bill is, "wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed." Therefore there are no other penalties. The greatest possible care should be taken when we seek to place limitations upon the penalties prescribed, for if in any case we take away the penalty, it seems to me that without any question at all no other penalty would exist, and the crime would remain without penalty.

Let me add this observation in connection with the whole matter:

I am perfectly willing to see the original amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington adopted, although I see no very real necessity for it. That amendment merely declares to be the duty of the court that which courts already perform. It is the thing which courts always will do. I anticipate no difficulty by reason of excessive penalties being applied to the "beardless youth," so called, or to first offenders. The history of the enforcement of the prohibition law does not give rise to a fair presumption that anything of that kind might happen.

The information before the subcommittee was to the effect that in the year 1927—we had no figures for 1928—the average fine imposed throughout the United States under the national prohibition act was one hundred and twenty dollars and some cents. The average jail sentence was between 33 and 34 days.

I became curious after the discussion started here in connection with the pending bill. I knew no case where an innocent youth, where a high-school girl, where a first offender of previous good character had been given the maximum penalty of $500 for the transportation of liquor. I appealed to the Treasury, and I appealed to the Department of Justice, and neither the Treasury Department nor the Department of Justice could tell me of one instance where any first offender, any "beardless youth," so called, or any child of high-school or college age, had received the maximum penalty for the first violation of this law.

I then asked the Department of Justice to make some inquiry about the matter; and Mr. Jones, the assistant to the Attorney General, telephoned to five United States attorneys situated not too far away. He reports to me with respect to this question of invoking the maximum penalty upon a child or a first offender, as follows:

The district attorney at Baltimore reported that he knew of none.

The district attorney at Philadelphia reported that he knew of none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time on the amendment has expired. He has 10 minutes on the bill.

Mr. STEIWER. Very well.

The district attorney at Newark, N. J., knew of one instance in which the maximum fine of $500 had been imposed, but in that case the defendant was put upon probation and undoubtedly the purpose of the judge in imposing the maximum penalty was to give greater force to his probation order.

At Pittsburgh the district attorney knew of no instance.

At Cincinnati the district attorney knew of no instance.

These cases were selected at random, and were selected because they were reasonably close at hand; and they confirmed the thought I had had. They confirmed the thought of the subcommittee that there had been no instance where a Federal judge appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Attorney General and confirmed by this body had gone so far afield from his duty as to impose a maximum penalty upon some one whose offense really had been trivial.

I desire to ask this question, Mr. President: If no Federal judge over a period of 10 years' time has seen fit to impose, for the transportation of liquor, even the maximum penalty of a $500 fine, why should we be worried here for fear some judge would impose a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment under the same circumstances? It seems to me that we are borrowing a good deal of trouble, and that there is no great necessity or solid ground for the adoption of any of these proposals that have been made for the purpose of limiting the application of prescribed penalties.

As I stated, Mr. President, the author of the bill desires to add as an amendment his suggestion that the courts may do just what the courts have done and just what the courts would do without the amendment. The only objection I see to that is the possible implication that the court does not know its duty; and yet that can not be a serious or grave objection, for, as a matter of fact, the legislative body has a right, if it desires, to limit the discretion of the court with respect to this law or with respect to any law. So it is that we create maximum penalties; and so it is that in the national prohibition act for subsequent offenses we have created minimum penalties, and we have said to the court, "You can not go under this amount, and you can not go over this other amount." I see no particular impropriety in adding to that, if we desire to do so, the admonition or declaration to the court that the penalties should be in proportion to the offense.

All things considered, I hope that the proposal of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] will be rejected by the Senate.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am supporting the pending amendments to the national prohibition act because they will undoubtedly be of great assistance in bringing about more effective enforcement of our liquor laws.

I do not share the opinion of those who say that prohibition can not be enforced. It can be enforced, and we have demonstrated that fact in Kansas, where we had prohibition for more than 40 years before the enactment of the national law. We are now passing through the experimental stage of enforcement in the Nation that we had in the early days of enforcement in Kansas under the State law.

In the beginning, many Kansas business men were not in sympathy with prohibition because they thought it would "hurt business." Other good citizens honestly thought the move was unwise; but they have long since recognized the benefits of prohibition, and the question is no longer an issue in the State. An overwhelming majority of our people consider prohibition as one of the greatest blessings ever bestowed on the State through legislation.

Mr. President, I say just as emphatically that prohibition can be enforced in the Nation, and we have already made progress in that direction. It may take as much as 20 years to make enforcement effective; but, even if it does, they will be years well spent, and from which posterity will reap untold benefits.

It is the wet and lawless cities more than any other part of the country that are the plague spots which need cleaning up and that need the sharp prod of the law; and enforcing prohibition will help rather than hinder that work.

Kansas has had prohibition for half a century. It spent many years in experimenting and pioneering in this reform, gradually perfecting the Kansas law. Earnest enforcement of the law in Kansas dates back 20 years, after its increasing benefits could no longer be denied.

Some of the eastern and big-city enemies of prohibition say if the prohibition law were made more liberal they would be satisfied, and the more liberal law would be obeyed. Kansas has been through all that. The truth is that no law in any way regulating the sale of liquor has ever been obeyed anywhere by keepers of saloons or of public houses.

For years prohibition was not enforced in Kansas, nor even halfway enforced; but even then the benefits began to show. The people became converted to the dry cause, and got in earnest about prohibition. They passed a bone-dry law. They began ousting from office city and county attorneys and mayors who were lax or were wet sympathizers. For 25 years prohibition has been a fact in Kansas, and now it is a permanent part of its State and National creed.

There is still illicit selling of liquor in Kansas. It will continue in a sporadic manner so long as there are people who cling to the idea of the social drink, who think that a social event is not complete without something that sparkles, even though it is tinctured poison bottled in the barn; but the sale of liquor has been reduced to the minimum.

Kansas does not want and would not tolerate modification. Liquor is an outlaw within her borders. She is 47 years removed from the thought of legalizing the saloon. Conviction of violators is easier than in the past because public sentiment has been crystallized. Kansas officials and private citizens are agreed that prohibition is the State's best business asset.

If Kansas could enforce prohibition with wet States all around it, as it had to do then, New York or any other State can.

"One of the most astonishing transformations in economic history is the progress made in industry in the United States during the last five years," wrote Secretary Hoover in the 1925 annual report of the United States Department of Commerce. Mr. Hoover mentioned prohibition as one of the chief causes of that transformation, and few big manufacturers in the United States will disagree with that statement.

Mr. President, I think we can lay a considerable share of this Nation's abounding good fortune to eight years of national prohibition superimposed on many more years of prohibition by the States; to the tremendous increase in our industrial efficiency resulting largely therefrom; to the rise in the last eight years of a new and hitherto lacking nation-wide thrift, which seems but another outcome of this same cause, and which, as Mr. Hoover points out, finds us in this year of our Lord the best housed, the best fed, the best clothed people that ever inhabited the earth.

If the opponents of prohibition succeed in bringing back the sale of wine and beer, the lawbreaking saloon will as surely come back as that water will run down hill.

The Province of Ontario, Canada, legalized 4 per cent beer. Within 60 days or less the brewers of this beer were violating the law. Ontario found the drinkers were no more content with 4 per cent beer than they were before. So it would be in the United States. Instead of a comparatively few bootleggers breaking the law, we would have thousands upon thousands of saloons; and if each saloon had one policeman to watch it the law would still be violated as regularly and without question as it was when that odoriferous institution was with us.

Mr. President, we need go no further back than the recent election to discover that the great majority of the people of this country—not any particular section, or class, or party, but just the mass of the people—believe in the eighteenth amendment and in the enforcement of its provisions. To my mind, the national election of 1928 constitutes a mandate to the Government of the United States to make the prohibition amendment effective; not to attempt to repeal or evade it.

I have seen various experiments tried to regulate the drink evil—high license, local option, State dispensaries. Prohibition honestly enforced has by far proved the most effective remedy, and national prohibition was the logical outcome after half a century of experimenting.

I wish to repeat, it is not a change back to the free use of intoxicating liquor that we need, but fair and square prohibition enforcement.

Prohibition is not now so much a question of laws or changes in laws. It is rather a question of law observance and law enforcement.

The all-important job ahead for American citizens at this time is to educate ourselves to observe the Constitution and obey the laws of our country, and to make the fight necessary to see that the Constitution is observed and the laws enforced on all alike.

Prohibition enforcement now is a challenge to public officials—Federal, State, and local—from one end of the land to the other. It is a challenge also to the loyalty of the common man to his Government. We have never had a greater opportunity to do a finer service for our country than to-day—by showing through speech and action a decent respect for its laws and its Constitution.

Prohibition has not had a fair trial. The big cities have not made an honest effort to enforce it It can be enforced if Federal, State, and local officials will get back of it in an honest-to-God way.

The American people have a right to disapprove of a law and to seek its repeal or modification in a lawful way. If the people do not want prohibition, they may remove the amendment by the same means they used to adopt it. If a majority of the people of the country desire the Volstead Act changed, they have a legal method of accomplishing this result through electing to the House and Senate Members who will vote to change it. Liquor has never obeyed any modifying law. It will never obey any law but a bone dry law honestly and vigorously enforced.

I believe prohibition is gaining in spite of the difficulties of enforcement. The eighteenth amendment will never come out of the Constitution. The Volstead law will not be weakened. In years to come the people of the United States will have more and more cause to rejoice that they voted prohibition into the Constitution and made it the law of the land and stood by it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], as modified.

Mr. BLAINE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], in the nature of a substitute, for the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who has been called from the city on account of a death in his family. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas] owing to the death of a near relative. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

I desire also to announce that the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "nay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], as modified.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote as to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I do not know how the Senator from Florida would vote upon this matter if present, and therefore I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BINGHAM (when Mr. METCALF's name was called). The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], if present, would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If present, he would vote "yea" on this question.

So Mr. JONES's amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Washington has stated that the amendment just adopted makes no legal change in the situation, I desire to offer the following amendment: In line 9, after the word "offense," insert the words "after the first offense." The effect of the amendment would be that the very severe penalties provided by the bill shall not apply to first offenders, but after the first offense they may apply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "offense," insert the words "after the first offense," so the clause would read:

> The penalty imposed for each such offense after the first offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely desire to express the hope that the amendment will be voted down. A similar provision is contained in a bill which has been on the calendar in another body for some time. This would be a very substantial change and would probably prevent any action during the present session. I hope the proposed amendment may be voted down.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I have not given serious thought to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut, but it impresses me that if it is adopted there will be no punishment provided in the law for a first offense.

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, yes, there is a penalty provided in the law for the first offense. The amendment which I have offered does not change it at all in that respect.

Mr. BRATTON. I am not sure about that.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from New Mexico that the maximum penalty now provided for the first offense remains, and the penalties here provided would apply only to second and subsequent offenses.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, may we have the section read as it would read if amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> That wherever a penalty or penalties are prescribed in a criminal prosecution by the national prohibition act, as amended and supplemented, for the illegal manufacture, sale, transportation, importation, or exportation of intoxicating liquors, as defined by section 1, Title II, of the national prohibition act, the penalty imposed for each such offense after the first offense shall be a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BINGHAM. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair as on the former vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as before with respect to my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. BINGHAM (when Mr. METCALF's name was called). The junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] is detained from the Senate by illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas, 31, nays 51, as follows:

YEAS—31

Bingham	Edge	Norbeck	Schall
Blaine	Edwards	Norris	Tydings
Blease	Gerry	Nye	Wagner
Borah	Glenn	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Broussard	Gould	Pittman	Warren
Bruce	Hawes	Ransdell	Watson
Copeland	Johnson	Reed, Mo.	Wheeler
Couzens	Moses	Reed, Pa.

NAYS—51

Ashurst	Fess	McKellar	Smoot
Barkley	Frazier	McMaster	Steck
Bayard	George	McNary	Steiwer
Black	Goff	Mayfield	Stephens
Bratton	Greene	Neely	Swanson
Brookhart	Hale	Oddie	Thomas, Idaho
Burton	Harris	Overman	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Harrison	Robinson, Ind.	Trammell
Caraway	Hastings	Sackett	Tyson
Curtis	Hayden	Sheppard	Vandenberg
Dale	Heflin	Shortridge	Walsh, Mont.
Deneen	Jones	Simmons	Waterman
Dill	Kendrick	Smith

NOT VOTING—13

Fletcher	Keyes	McLean	Shipstead
Gillett	King	Metcalf
Glass	La Follette	Pine
Howell	Larrazolo	Robinson, Ark.

So Mr. BINGHAM's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now offer the following amendment: In line 2, section 2, page 2, after the word "penalty," insert the words "for the first or any subsequent offense," so that the whole section would read:

> This act shall not repeal nor eliminate any minimum penalty for the first or any subsequent offense now provided by the said national prohibition act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I myself have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, this amendment affords me the last opportunity that I shall have to say anything with respect to the pending bill in the course of the present discussion. My life as a Senator is on the point of expiring, and I wish to pronounce a curse on that bill with my last dying breath. It is but another fatal step in the progress of an intolerable tyranny. It violates every settled principle of criminal jurisprudence. It wipes out every accepted distinction between first and second offenses, and makes no attempt to draw any distinction between major and minor offenses, notwithstanding the fact that offenses under the Volstead Act range all the way from the possession of a half pint of liquor by an individual who has purchased it simply for his own use to the sale of a vast store of liquor by some bootlegging ring of organized criminals with a capital of a million dollars. It leaves it in the power of any Federal judge—and all of us know to what extremes a Federal judge might at times be driven by the fanatical spirit of prohibition—to impose a fine of $10,000, or a term of imprisonment of five years, or both, even upon some Member of the Senate who might be found—as I have seen many of them—in a mere social situation that happened to involve a violation of the Volstead Act.

The next step, as I predicted the other day, will be to make every violation of the Volstead Act a felony; that is to say, to place every such violation in the same class as murder, as rape, as arson, as other truly flagitious crimes.

Already, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] stated last Saturday, no fewer than 187 individuals competing for the Durant prohibition prize have expressed the view that capital punishment was not an excessive penalty for infractions of the Volstead Act.

Then, the next step for which Members of Congress will be herded up by the Anti-Saloon League will be to enact some such law as that vile, abominable, inhuman, brutish law which is in force in the State of Michigan and has already placed behind the dark portals of the penitentiary of that State for life three of four individuals who had been guilty of relatively petty offenses under the Volstead Act.

Then, as I have also predicted, the last step will be to violate the sanctity of the home, through the help of faithless servants, estranged relations, or malicious neighbors.

Ah, then, indeed, there might be a lack of that liquor which the human race has been drinking ever since the base of the Alleghenies was laid; but there would be no lack of that red liquor which flows in tragic moments from the human veins. In the graphic language of the Scriptures, then, indeed, there would be a "vineyard of red wine" and it would not be a California vineyard merely. The test would then be decisively made as to whether the old, immemorial, cherished traditions of American liberty were still alive. It was said of the battle of Chevy Chase that the child unborn might well rue the hunting of that day, and there is not a Senator here, with a few exceptions, about to give his support to this bill who will not in the next 6 or 7 or the next 8 or 10 years bitterly rue the weakness that induced him to do it.

Already I am hearing more than one sane, well-balanced man or woman give expression to the thought that if the hateful oppression of prohibition can not in any other way be earlier terminated, it may be terminated finally by popular revolution. Of course—

> That way madness lies.

However, I mention it at least as an evidence of the rising tide of bitter detestation that is conducting at the present time public opinion in relation to prohibition we hardly know whither.

As for me, nothing remains for me to do but impotently to cast my vote against this crude, illogical, and monstrous bill, feeling as I do, so that I am at least faithful to the manly injunction:

> Charge once more, then, and be dumb,
> Let the victors when they come,
> When the forts of folly fall,
> Find thy body by the wall.

[Mr. BRUCE asks that the fact be noted that the above lines, including the dependent clause in the last sentence of the above speech, beginning "feeling as I do," were not actually spoken but added afterwards.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I regret to see the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE] take such a morose, vindictive, and mournful view of this situation. The Senator is exceedingly lonesome here to-day. The Senate is going to pass this measure. The Senator will have to endure it, and when he departs in a few days from the Capital City, leaving behind his association with those who vote for prohibition and for prohibition law enforcement, he can follow the suggestion of the doggerel which runs:

> Leave this city's legislative hum,
> From its fashions and forms cut loose;
> Go where the cat climbs the catnip tree
> And the gooseberry grows for the goose;
> Where the partridge drums his drum
> And the wood chuck chucks his wood,
> And the dog devours the dogwood plum
> In primitive solitude.

[Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). On the passage of the bill I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "yea." The junior Senator from New Hampshire is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). Upon this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. If he were present, I am advised that he would vote "yea," and I would vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. BINGHAM (when Mr. METCALF's name was called). If the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF] were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CARAWAY (when the name of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas] is detained by a death in his family. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JONES. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. LARRAZOLO] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is necessarily absent. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 65, nays 18, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 213) to provide for extending the time in which the United States Supreme Court Building Commission shall report to Congress.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 5094) making it a felony with penalty for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. VINCENT of Michigan, Mr. SCHNEIDER, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. BOX were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 39 to the bill.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3881) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park; that the House had receded from its amendments numbered 1 and 2 to the bill; and that the House further insisted on its amendment numbered 3 to the bill.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 58), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, by Charles H. Niehaus, presented by the State of Kentucky (said statues being donated to the State of Kentucky by Isaac W. Bernheim), to be placed in Statuary Hall, are accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of these statues of two of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for their distinguished services to the country.

2. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Kentucky.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 8736) to provide for the inspection of the battle field of Brices Cross Roads, Miss., and the battle field of Tupelo, or Harrisburg, Miss., and it was signed by the Vice President.

PROPOSED NICARAGUAN CANAL

Mr. EDGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 117, Order of Business 785, authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will await until the motion is put, I will have the bill laid temporarily aside for any Senator who desires me to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 117) authorizing an investigation and survey for a Nicaraguan canal, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, with amendments.

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the introduction of a joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUPREME COURT BUILDING COMMISSION

Mr. MOSES. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution, which I send to the desk, may be introduced and read; and I invite the attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the submission to the Congress of preliminary plans and estimates of costs for the construction of a building for the Supreme Court of the United States," approved December 21, 1928, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the submission to the Congress of preliminary plans and estimates of costs for the construction of a building for the Supreme Court of the United States," approved December 21, 1928, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 4. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1, any individual who, on March 3, 1929, is a member of the commission by virtue of a committee chairmanship or ranking minority membership as above specified, shall, despite the expiration of his term of office as a Member of the Senate or House of Representatives, continue to serve as a member of the commission until death or resignation. In the event of the death or resignation of any such member, the provisions of section 1 shall be applicable with respect to successors of such member."

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. DILL. I think it had better go over.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona is recognized.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me say to Senators, if they will bear with me a moment, that in plain language the joint resolution simply provides, and if adopted its effect will be, that the able senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], notwithstanding the expiration on March 4, next, of his term as a Senator, will be eligible to membership on, and will continue to be, a member of the commission which is to examine, supervise, and adopt plans for the construction of the building for the Supreme Court of the United States.

If this joint resolution does not become a law, then under the rules of seniority, I would become a member of this commission; but I am possessed of no talents that can ever bring me into even the most courteous competition when measured and weighed with those talents of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and I hereby gladly and cheerfully waive in his favor such privilege of priority as I might have on this commission.

If this joint resolution shall become effective, the Senator from Missouri will then be eligible to continue the excellent work he has already begun in this behalf. Its passage will mean that he may be called to Washington, where we may have the pleasure of seeing him, once in a while; and let me say that for many months past he has, in cooperation with Chief Justice Taft, rendered valuable services regarding the proposed building for the Supreme Court of the United States.

I earnestly hope that I may be permitted to waive whatever right, or privilege, or priority I may happen to have to serve on this commission, in favor of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, the Senator can do that to-morrow as well as to-day. I think the joint resolution ought to be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the hurry of the moment, I omitted to say that no compensation of any sort or nature whatever is proposed to be paid or will be paid to the members of this commission. In fact, I am sure that the Senator from Missouri would decline to accept any compensation if such were offered. I make this additional statement because Senators near me have called attention to the fact that I omitted to say that no compensation whatever is carried in the measure; and I now renew my request for immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. DILL. I object.

Mr. DILL subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the session I objected to the consideration of a joint resolution presented by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. While I think it is a bad precedent to set, in the light of the fact that the Senator from Missouri is such an unusual Senator and has rendered such an unusual service in the Senate, I am willing to withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CELEBRATION OF CANALIZING OF THE OHIO RIVER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution No. 51, creating a committee to represent Congress at the celebration of the completion of the canalizing of the Ohio River, appoints as members on the part of the Senate the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION COMMISSION

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. HAWES] as the members on the part of the Senate of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission created under section 2 of the migratory bird bill approved February 18, 1929.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania what the conferees were able to do with regard to the appropriations for carrying out the 5-year program for the Army Air Corps.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. We were able to get the agreement of the House conferees to an increase of $1,000,000 over the amount allowed by the House. That will enable us to buy all of the pursuit planes called for by the program; it will enable us to buy all of the attack planes; it will enable us to buy all of the observation amphibians; and those, I might say, are the extremely technical types of planes. It will also enable us to buy about 12 out of the 75 observation planes for which the House appropriation failed to provide.

We needed 75 more planes than the House allowed to come up to the full program, and also certain cargo planes. We have not been able to get any of the cargo planes. As I say, the increase over the House figures is a million dollars; and the House allowed the full amount estimated for by the Budget.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that once more the House of Representatives has not only been unwilling to provide enough money to carry out the 5-year aircraft program which the people of this country who are air minded and who are interested in aviation believed Congress meant when it passed the bill three years ago, and believed Congress would provide money to carry it out, but the House would not even go as far as the Senate desired to go in meeting the program. This means that the aircraft program for the coming year will be 85 planes short of meeting the requirements of the 5-year program and also will be about $2,000,000 short in providing hangars, shops, fields, and runways for the technical equipment to enable the Air Corps to carry out the aircraft program as laid down by the act of 1926.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. President, may I inquire what action was taken with reference to the so-called Robinson amendment making an appropriation for moneys expended in repairing damages to roads and bridges in Missouri, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas in 1927?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes, Mr. President. That was amendment No. 60. It was decided by the conferees to change the language of that amendment to conform to the language of the appropriation made last year for the benefit of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts, and with that change the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS. The amount is unchanged, is it?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Yes; the total amount remains as it was. It was necessary to make a slight readjustment in the different items.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the Niobrara amendment?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska calling for river-bank protection at Niobrara, Nebr., and the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] calling for similar bank protection at Yankton, were both accepted by the House with these changes. The estimate of the engineers indicated that the total cost of doing the work would be $250,000. The committee was unwilling to go beyond the precedent established in the Mississippi Valley of having the Federal Government pay one-third and local interests two-thirds, so that it was provided in the amendment that the Federal Government should pay one-third, and as one-third of $250,000 is $83,000, the amount was fixed at $85,000 to provide for that.

I may say to the Senator that the conference continued until this afternoon, with those two amendments the last to be agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. May I inquire of the Senator what provision is made, if any, about the division of the payments between local authorities and the Federal Government?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The local authorities are to pay two-thirds and the Federal Government one-third.

Mr. NORRIS. Instead of just the reverse?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Instead of the reverse. The conferees took that action because it had been established as the proportion in the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the conference report should go over until to-morrow, would there be any delay in the final disposition of the matter?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. No, Mr. President; but the Senate has to act first, and there are 12 amendments which must be taken to the floor of the House. The conferees have reached a final agreement; but under the rules of the House 12 of the amendments must be specifically reported and adopted there, and they can not act until the Senate shall have first acted.

Mr. KING. The idea I had in mind was that the House probably would not reach it for action until to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The House will probably spend a large part of to-morrow on its commemorative services. I do not know whether they intend to transact legislative business later in the afternoon or not.

Mr. KING. When did the conferees intend meeting again?

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The conferees have no occasion to meet again, because our agreement with the House conferees is complete.

Mr. KING. I understood that there were a number of matters in disagreement——

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. Which are still in conference.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. The disagreement is only technical. Under the House rules the House conferees must get consent before they can make a formal agreement, but the conferees, subject to that agreement, have composed all the differences between the two Houses.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will not press for a vote this evening.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. I am perfectly willing to let it go over, if the Senator desires.

Mr. KING. I will be glad to have the Senate take it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Will the Senator be ready to have it taken up immediately after we meet to-morrow?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report will lie on the table.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its amendments Nos. 1 and 2 to the bill (S. 3881) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park, and further insisting on its amendment No. 3.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate agree to House amendment No. 3.

The motion was agreed to.

GRAND VALLEY RECLAMATION PROJECT, COLORADO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4710) authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Grand Valley reclamation project, Colorado, which was, on page 1, line 11, after the word "Colorado," to insert:

Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that the construction and operation of the power canal or canals or any other feature connected therewith will result in seepage or other damage to irrigated lands, he is authorized and directed to include in such contract or contracts provisions and conditions necessary for the prevention of such loss or damage, or to approve agreements between the parties in interest with respect thereto.

Mr. PHIPPS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I would like to know something about this matter.

Mr. PHIPPS. I will be glad to explain it to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask that it may lie on the table until tomorrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

YUMA AND YUMA MESA AUXILLARY PROJECT

Mr. PHIPPS. From the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15918) to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize credit upon the construction charges of certain water-right applicants and purchasers on the Yuma and Yuma Mesa auxiliary project, and for other purposes," and I submit a report (No. 1839) thereon.

The Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation has approved a bill similar to this, Senate bill 5196, introduced by the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. I ask for the consideration at the present time of the House bill, which has the approval of the Senate committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let it be reported.

The bill was read by title.

Mr. KING. The Senate has not passed a bill of that character.

Mr. PHIPPS. No; the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation reported favorably Senate bill 5196, and I have moved to substitute the House bill, which has already passed the House. All the bill provides is that when money recovered from the Imperial Valley irrigation district for its proportion of the Laguna Dam expenditures is received, it may be credited to the Yuma enterprise as against operation or maintenance or construction charges. At the present time the money may only be credited as against construction charges, but the settlers on the reclamation project are entitled to that repayment just the same whether or not they have paid out their construction charges in full. When they have done so the credit would go against the operation and maintenance. The bill has the approval of the department and of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to substituting the House bill for the Senate bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUES OF HENRY CLAY AND DR. EPHRAIM M'DOWELL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 58), which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, by Charles H. Niehaus, presented by the State of Kentucky (said statues being donated to the State of Kentucky by Isaac W. Bernheim), to be placed in Statuary Hall, are accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of these statues of two of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for their distinguished services to the country.

2. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Kentucky.

Mr. SACKETT. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution may be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the concurrent resolution is considered and agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR CARONDELET, MO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (H. R. 17024) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo., which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAWES. I ask to substitute this bill for Senate bill 5774, and for the present consideration of the House bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill (S. 5774) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Carondelet, Mo., will be indefintely postponed.

ST. JOHN RIVER BRIDGE, MAINE

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of House bill 16270, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the St. John River between Fort Kent, Me., and Clairs, Province of New Brunswick, Canada," approved March 18, 1924.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved March 18, 1924, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Maine and the Dominion of Canada to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. John River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, between Fort Kent, Me., and Clairs, Province of New Brunswick, Canada, be, and the same is hereby, revived and reenacted: Provided, That this act shall be null and void unless the actual construction of said bridge shall be commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFERENCE OF EXECUTIVE MESSAGES

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to an order of the Senate heretofore adopted, the Chair refers to their appropriate committees sundry Executive messages.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL TO-MORROW

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its work to-night it take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BUSINESS OF EVENING SESSION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Kansas if it is not the understanding that to-night, after the radio bill shall have been disposed of, if it is disposed of before 11 o'clock, we will then take a recess, and that no other measure whatever will be taken up?

Mr. CURTIS. The understanding was that to-night's session is to be devoted to the radio bill.

Mr. KING. Exclusively.

Mr. McKELLAR. And to nothing else.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state that, so far as I am concerned, no other request will be made to-night, and as I understand it, under the unanimous-consent agreement, nothing else can be done to-night.

Mr. REED of Pennsylvania. Mr. President, if unanimous consent is asked to-night to take up something else, is it understood that the unanimous consent will be refused?

Mr. CURTIS. I think so, because of the unanimous-consent agreement. Several Senators have announced that they would not consent to other business being transacted to-night.

Mr. KING. I want it to be understood distinctly that when that unanimous consent was granted several days ago, coupled with it was the statement, and the statement was made by the Senator from Kansas upon an interrogatory which I propounded to him, that no other business would be taken up to-night. I would not have consented to the meeting to-night except for the agreement which was entered into, so that it would be a violation of the unanimous-consent agreement which was entered into if any other measure were taken up to-night.

RECESS

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being until 8 o'clock to-night, under the order previously made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana in the chair). In accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on the 15th instant the Chair lays before the Senate the radio bill, Senate bill 4937.

THE FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4937) continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the powers and authority vested in the Federal Radio Commission by the radio act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, shall continue to be vested in and exercised by the commission until March 16, 1930; and wherever any reference is made in such act to the period of one year after the first meeting of the commission, such reference shall be held to mean the period of three years after the first meeting of the commission.

SEC. 2. The period during which the members of the commission shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum is hereby extended until March 16, 1930.

SEC. 3. Prior to January 1, 1931, the licensing authority shall grant no license or renewal of license under the radio act of 1927 for a broadcasting station for a period to exceed three months and no license or renewal of license for any other class of station for a period to exceed one year.

SEC. 4. The commission is authorized to appoint a general counsel and pay him a salary of $10,000 per annum, and not to exceed three assistants to such general counsel, at salaries of $7,500 each per annum. It may appoint such other legal assistants as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there is no amendment to be proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which is now on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senator from New York moves to strike out section 1 of the bill as printed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield in order that one of the members of the committee may explain the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I would be very happy to do so.

Mr. WATSON. I have no doubt the Senator from New York will be glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I shall make very few remarks in regard to the measure. The report which accompanies the bill is so complete that a reading of the measure and the report, I think, will satisfy every Senator as to the reasonableness of the course we recommend.

There are Senators who are opposed to any commission. There are Senators who are opposed to this particular commission administering this particular agency. There are other Senators who believe that the administration of the agency always should have been left with the Department of Commerce and never taken out of it. All phases were represented in the membership of our committee, and yet, after much deliberation, we resolved upon the course represented by the introduction of the measure now before the Senate.

The commission expires by limitation on the 16th of March next, and, therefore, there are two courses open to the Senate. One is to continue the commission for another year as the measure proposes. The other is to let the commission die by limitation and permit the Department of Commerce to take over its administration. The objection to the latter course is that the Department of Commerce is not prepared to take over, in full, the administration of the measure at this time.

There are many things yet to be done by the commission. I am well aware of the fact that there are Senators who are opposed to the personnel of the commission, because the commission has failed to do this, that, or the other thing, which the Senators wanted done or thought ought to have been done. But the Senate the other day confirmed the reappointment of the three members of the commission, Judge Robinson, Mr. Lafount, and Judge Sykes. The President has sent in two other names which the Committee on Interstate Commerce are now considering. Therefore, we have believed under all the circumstances that the only wise course for the Congress to pursue is to continue the commission for another year until they shall have completed in very large measure the work which lies before them.

Mr. President, I have no further explanation to make at this time.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, in opening my remarks regarding the bill now before the Senate I want to take just a moment to call attention to the fact that radio has made such remarkable advancement in this country and its use has become so popular that on inauguration day for the first time in the history of this Capitol this Chamber will be wired and supplied with microphones so that the inaugural ceremonies may be carried out to the millions of listeners in the homes of the American people. I think that is a very fine thing to be done and I believe will meet with the hearty approval of the people of the country who have come to look upon radio as one of their principal means of securing first-hand information.

Mr. President, this bill does four things. In the first place it continues the original jurisdiction of the commission for another year. By that I mean that under the bill the commission continues for another year to exercise original control of all matters affecting radio applications and radio licenses. If the bill is not passed or if that provision which the Senator from New York seeks to have stricken from the bill is stricken out, then the commission will become in the main an appellate body. The commission does not die as such. The commission is a permanent body as provided by law, but its duties would be irregular and its sittings would be indefinite. Owing to the fact that the commission is now engaged in doing much of the work it was expected it would do during its first year of life, the committee have thought it wise to continue it for one more year with the original jurisdictional powers.

The second provision of the bill provides that the members shall receive annual compensation of $10,000 each per year rather than $30 per day when engaged in the work of the commission.

The third provision states that the commission shall grant only short-time licenses, that is, 90 days for broadcasting licenses and one year for other licenses.

Section 4 provides that the commission may employ general counsel and pay a salary of $10,000 a year for the general counsel, and may employ three assistants at not to exceed $7,500 each per year.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If the bill is not enacted into law before the 4th of March, what will happen to the jurisdiction of the commission?

Mr. DILL. On the 16th of March the duties of the commission would become what are termed appellate. If the Senator will bear with me, I will talk about that at a little later point in my remarks. I want now to discuss the other provisions first and then take up that phase of it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Who will have the duties which are not appellate? Will they vest in the Department of Commerce?

Mr. DILL. The Department of Commerce will have the so-called duties of original consideration of all these matters.

Mr. COPELAND. Administrative.

Mr. DILL. The Senator from New York suggests administrative, but I do not know just why we should call some of those duties administrative. The very first act of any body when an application comes in for a license is not an administrative duty but it is a judicial decision to determine whether or not the granting of that license is in the public interest, convenience, and necessity; so that it would not be an administrative duty, and the administrative officer attempting to perform it might find his decision objected to by somebody, because the law is so broad that anybody may object, and then it would go for review to the commission as an appellate body.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is, the first original jurisdiction would have to be delegated to the Department of Commerce? It would not be possible for the Secretary of Commerce to handle all those matters, and it would of necessity be delegated to some subordinate?

Mr. DILL. Of course a subordinate would perform the duty.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Then there would be an appeal to the Radio Commission?

Mr. DILL. Of course. The Secretary of Commerce could refer any of these matters to the commission in the first instance if he desired to do so.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator wishes to make a full reply to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DILL. I want to discuss that a little later. That is the reason why I am not going into it now in detail. I shall be glad to answer fully a little later.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that amateur licenses are now issued by the Department of Commerce itself?

Mr. DILL. I think so; and the ship licenses can be issued by a clerk in the Department of Commerce or under the commission, one just as well as the other. If the commission's operations are once completed, then much of this work can be done in the Department of Commerce.

I want to take up the bill first in an inverse order, because as to the last three provisions I think no one will object. I want to speak first of the necessity as I see it of having the commission given authority for hiring counsel at a salary of $10,000 a year.

At the present time the attorneys of the commission are employed under the classified personnel service. When we passed the radio act in the first place we thought we had excluded attorneys and engineers, but a ruling of the Comptroller General held that they came under the general law and therefore must be selected in accordance with its terms.

The commission found that it could not pay to exceed $6,500 for general counsel. At the present time there are 14 cases pending in the courts. Three of them are cases which have been taken to court on points of law from the commission's action, and the other 11 cases are appeals to the District Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Why does not the Department of Justice take care of those cases in the courts?

Mr. DILL. The Department of Justice has not the attorneys particularly trained in this subject, I may say, and the law specifically provides that the commission may employ attorneys. It is thought that it is well for the commission to have attorneys in its own service directly connected with it. If I may enlarge a little later on that feature I think the Senator will see the reason for it.

Some of the cases now pending in the District Court of Appeals go to the very heart of the radio law. The most important probably is the case of the General Electric Co. of Schenectady, station WGY, in which they claim in their brief that because of having had the right to use the ether by license of the Department of Commerce and of the commission, the commission is without power to take any of their time away from them. In other words they have, according to their claim, secured a property right in the air, a vested right, if you please.

Those who are familiar with the statute will recall that it specifically provides that no license should grant any right or interest in any wave length or in the use of the ether except for the term and under the conditions provided in the license. The law requires them to sign a waiver under oath that they do not claim any interest in any wave length or in the use of the ether. Yet, despite that, they come into court represented by such counsel as Charles Evans Hughes, former Justice of the United States Supreme Court; Mr. Hogan, of the Washington (D. C.) bar, and associate counsel, and make the contention with great insistence that they have secured a right in the air, and that the commission has no right to take them off the air except for violation of the law. Of course, if that contention should be upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States, it would mean that effective regulation by Congress would be destroyed. The committee believes that it is important that the commission have power to pay a reasonable fee in order to secure the services of attorneys—the commission can not hope to get attorneys who are the equals of the men I have mentioned—of a high order of ability, who could present the Government's side of the case. So I say it goes to the very heart of the radio regulation itself.

At the present time I understand there are something like 10 or 12 assistant attorneys in the department, some of whom have never had any general legal experience at all, but who are about the best the department can get for the small salaries which they are allowed to pay. Therefore I think anyone who has the interest of radio regulation at heart will agree that the commission should have authority to pay a reasonable salary in order to get attorneys who will give their entire time and attention to this work.

The third provision of the bill, to limit the time of these licenses, certainly is not to be disputed, because nobody knows what the radio wave lengths are going to be worth or the use we may want to put them to in future years. In order to prevent the freezing—if I may use that word—of the radio situation, it is thought well to limit the commission to licenses for broadcasting purposes not to exceed 90 days, and for other purposes not to exceed one year. Under the law as originally passed, the broadcasting licenses might be issued up to three years and other licenses up to five years. So we have provided in the bill that until January 1, 1931, the commission shall grant only short-time licenses.

Then, the second provision of the bill that the compensation shall be $10,000 yearly, it seems to me is very desirable, because whether this commission be appellate for another year or whether it have its original powers, it should be assured of a stable salary, because it will be here practically all the time. I think it would be much better to pay on that basis than on the basis of daily pay when it is engaged in the work of the commission.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. As I recall the Senator's position on this subject when previous legislation was before Congress, he had given some thought to the question of the commission being self-supporting?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator had considered the suggestion of levying a charge or fee upon those who receive licenses from the commission which would be sufficient to pay for the salaries of the commissioners, their clerks' salaries, and their attorneys' salaries. Has the committee, of which the Senator is a member, given any study or thought to that phase of this question?

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that it has been discussed in a general way, but we have not attempted to work out any plan.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. What is the commission now costing the Government?

Mr. DILL. It cost about $300,000 last year, as I remember.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Has there been no return of any kind?

Mr. DILL. There has been no return of any kind. I may say to the Senator that one of the reasons why nothing has been done has been that for short-term licenses it is rather difficult to work out a proper fee. I will say further to the Senator that I think the time has come when legislation should be enacted providing for a fee, and a substantial fee, especially from the broadcasting license holders for the use of the wave lengths.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am glad to hear that comment from the Senator.

Mr. DILL. I believe that everybody who gets a license should pay for it, even the amateurs, although I think the amateurs should be charged only a nominal fee; but certainly the great broadcasting stations that are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to build their plants and hundreds of thousands of dollars to put on their programs, and then collecting from advertisers hundreds of thousands of dollars more, ought to pay a very substantial license fee; and I think they would be willing to do so.

I may say that I have it in mind to introduce and to have passed, if possible, a resolution calling upon the commission to recommend to Congress at the coming session a scale of fees which they think would be appropriate for our consideration, with the view of putting such a scale into the law.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I am very much pleased to hear the Senator's observation and to note that he has been giving special attention to that phase of this question.

Mr. DILL. We did not think it was wise to attempt to amend the law in these respects at this short session of Congress.

Now, I want to come to a discussion of what seems to be the one disputed part of the bill, particularly the part of the bill that is disputed by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and that is as to the reason why the commission should continue as a body with original jurisdiction.

The Senate will recall the history of the commission. When it was created we failed to pass the deficiency appropriation bill, and for the first eight months the commission had no money and could get no help except such as could be borrowed from different departments of the Government. Two of the members of the commission died. So, at the end of the first year they had really had no chance to do any particular work on the situation with which they were confronted. Last year when we were able to appropriate sufficient funds for them to form an organization, there was such dissatisfaction in Congress with what had been done that we passed what was known as the equalization amendment, or the Davis amendment, providing that there should be an equality of radio transmission and radio service in the different zones and that service and wave lengths and power should be divided among the States and cities according to population. That entailed a large amount of work upon the commission; and on November 11 of this year they put into effect a new allocation; they have tried to comply with the Davis amendment, and they think they have done so reasonably well. In doing that they changed the wave lengths or the power or the time of operation of 94 per cent of all broadcasting stations. That naturally caused a considerable upset and considerable dissatisfaction. There have been a great many appeals to the commission for changes in allocations. I am informed there are 70 cases of appeal now pending. It would seem unwise when they are in the midst of correcting their own allocations that this work should be thrown onto some new subordinate officials of the Department of Commerce and taken away from the commission that is so familiar with it.

It would seem only proper and sensible to have the commission complete the work in the broadcasting field in which it is now engaged, because if this work should go to the Department of Commerce an entirely new division must be set up there so far as broadcasting is concerned, and the Secretary of Commerce will find it necessary to put men in charge and build up a system such as has taken some months, in fact a year or more, to build up in the Radio Commission. Until the establishing of a standard, of a policy, in the broadcasting system of this country is completed it would seem exceedingly unwise to take from the commission its original jurisdiction in the handling of the radio stations of the country.

In addition to that, there are a great many problems that have arisen during the last year in connection with the short wave lengths, that is the wave lengths that are used for transcontinental broadcasting, point to point work, and that are used for international communication and for transoceanic communication. Until about a year or 18 months ago it was thought very few of the short wave lengths were worth anything, but the experiments of amateurs have demonstrated what engineers could not discover, namely, that they can be mastered and can be used. As a result there is a veritable scramble for licenses for short wave lengths, and the commission has been engaged for some time—and it has not as yet completed its work—in the allocation of the short wave lengths, the transcontinental, the transoceanic, and the international wave lengths.

In addition to that, there is work to be done in agreeing with Canada and Mexico and Cuba, particularly as to the division of the short wave lengths, for stations on the same short wave lengths will interfere with one another just as much as stations on the broadcasting wave lengths. Only recently the representatives of the Radio Commission went to Canada, where they gave long and tedious consideration to this whole question. They have not fully agreed with the Canadian representatives, and it may be that there is a difference of opinion as to whether or not what has been tentatively agreed upon shall finally be approved. They are in the midst of it; they are working on it and here again it would seem unwise to take from this body which is in the midst of this work these particular duties and to place them in the hands of some new set of men such as it will be necessary to have in the Department of Commerce.

Then there should be regulations provided for the various classes of service and for the various uses of wave lengths. There is need for regulation to govern broadcasting, to govern apparatus, to govern the amateur, to govern experimental licenses, and to govern ship licenses. That is work of a legislative character. The commission has not been able to do it because the broadcasting problem has pressed upon it until the members of the commission have not had time to think of anything else; but they are beginning to get from under it, and we believe that another year at least will get them completely out from under the burden of the work in which they are now engaged. Certainly the men who have engaged in the handling of these details are better fitted to write the regulations which are needed than are any new men who are subordinate officials in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. We are to have a couple of new men, are we not?

Mr. DILL. Yes; there are to be two new men on the commission.

Mr. COPELAND. Two new men out of five.

Mr. DILL. Yes; but the three men who are there have gone through the hard years' work of the past, and will necessarily be of great assistance and great help to the new men who are to come in, which is far different from training them in the intricacies of this whole subject without any particular assistance, which they would not be able to get in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him in that connection, catching the significance of the remark made by the Senator from New York?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. After the committee had heard all of the evidence of which it could avail itself, the conviction of the committee was that this body even as now composed, with only three of those originally on it and with two new members, was better qualified to meet the problems which the Senator has so well outlined, rather than have the work delegated to a department whose duties were not specifically given over to the study and regulation of this business.

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. I merely want to make one further remark. I do not know that I shall have anything further to say; but it seems to me that the tremendous public interest and the already indicated use of the radio in our industrial, commercial, and social life is such that we must have an independent organization in our Government which will devote its entire time to this particular art, just as we have an Interstate Commerce Commission to look after our transportation on land and water.

Mr. DILL. I may add to what the Senator has said that the men who would take over these duties in the Department of Commerce would be subordinate clerks at salaries from three to four thousand dollars a year, while the members of the commission are independent in their position; they are men given authority under the law, and are paid substantial salaries, all of which of necessity makes them more effective and more able to do the work that is to be done.

Then, I wish to call attention to another thing along the same line the Senator from South Carolina mentions, and that is that the commission during the past year has worked up a very complete filing system for handling the applications and the licenses. It has its clerks divided into different departments; it is organized to do this work. If this work goes back to the Department of Commerce, in addition to all the other new duties upon that department, it will have the duty of setting up its own system of handling these licenses.

Then, another great problem that is yet to be solved by the commission is the problem of chain broadcasting. Chain broadcasting has reached greater proportions in this country than anywhere else in the world——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. DILL. Just a moment—and it is invaluable to the American people. So far as I know, nobody wants to destroy chain broadcasting or prevent its use in the radio field.

On the other hand, there is a great deal of objection to allowing a great many stations that are given what is known as a cleared channel to use, without any interference from any other station, the right to put the same program on the air at the same time with high power when those particular cleared channels should be used by individual stations for individual programs.

The commission has made a regulation on the subject of chain broadcasting for the purpose of preventing that sort of thing, but it has not seemed satisfactory. The commission has not been willing to attempt to enforce it, and has postponed its enforcement from time to time until it could get to the matter and actually give its time and attention to the study of those regulations so as to make them more fully serve the needs of the country.

In my judgment, that is one of the most important things yet to be done in broadcasting, namely, the formulation of regulations that will allow chain broadcasting to continue and give this local service all over America, and at the same time keep the high-powered stations and the cleared channels for the individual programs instead of having the chain programs on these cleared channels. For instance, in the case of the inaugural ceremonies, the two chain companies will broadcast from here on about 100 stations in the United States alone, in addition to the short-wave lengths by which they will be sent all over the world.

So I do not want anyone to think from what I am saying that I am condemning chain broadcasting, that I want to hinder it or hamper it; but I do think the commission should make it fit into the broadcasting scheme so that it will continue to serve the needs of local communities and at the same time not make it so that a great number of cleared channels will contain the same program on the chain, as is the case to-day.

Just what plan can be worked out I do not attempt to say, but I submit that that kind of a question is one to be worked out, not by subordinate clerks in a great department like the Department of Commerce, which has so many and varied activities, but by men who have studied the question, who have familiarized themselves with all the details of it, and who, because of that familiarity and because of the power they possess as commissioners, are best fitted to do that work.

I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

I notice that the life of the commission is continued until March 16, 1930. Will the President have to reappoint these commissioners?

Mr. DILL. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Or will they simply hold over in their positions by virtue of this act or by virtue of some other act?

Mr. DILL. They hold over by virtue of the statute law we now have. This bill does not change their terms of office. It only changes what is termed the "original jurisdiction," by which they take charge of all the questions that come up in radio when they are first presented; and after the end of the first year those questions would come to the Department of Commerce.

If there are any other questions, I shall be glad to answer them.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to ask the Senator another question.

Are the dates or the periods of licensing changed at all in this bill?

Mr. DILL. No. Before the Senator came in I explained that section 3 provides that they shall not license broadcasting stations for more than 90 days, nor other stations for more than 1 year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is that the law now?

Mr. DILL. That is the present law—for one year. The statute provides for licensing broadcasting stations for not to exceed three years, and other stations for not to exceed five years; but we have thought it well to limit them to short-term licenses for a time, at least until the radio art is more fully developed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the Senator already explained section 4?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why is it that a general counsel is required?

Mr. DILL. They now have what they call a general counsel at the head of the legal division. In the first place, the commission is constantly in need of advice of a legal nature on almost every question that comes before it; and I may say to the Senator that there is no radio jurisprudence in the world. There is no radio law anywhere. In every other great country in the world to-day that has radio the government either directly controls radio or indirectly controls it through some corporation which it controls. Here in America we have tried to allow radio to be free and to be developed by private individuals, and we are developing right now in the courts the first radio jurisprudence to be found in the world. There are very few attorneys who know much about it, and what they do know is more or less based on their own theories.

Owing to the fact that there are 11 cases in the appellate court here in the District, there are 3 other cases pending, and those cases are being handled by attorneys of the very highest order in this country—I mentioned before the Senator came in former Justice Hughes appearing in one case and Frank J. Hogan, of the District bar, and men of that type—it was thought that the commission should have enough money to employ the best attorneys that could be gotten for such a salary as is suggested here. It may be that they will not need the three assistants, but it was thought well to give them that power. Let me say to the Senator that under the present law they are spending really more than this in small-salaried attorneys, some of whom really should not be kept if this bill is passed.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator indicate to the Senate why he thinks that within a year the work may be done sufficiently that we shall not need to continue the commission any longer?

Mr. DILL. I think that within a year the allocation problems of radio will be pretty well settled. I think the chain-broadcasting regulations can be formulated. I think many of the short-wave length complications can be straightened out.

Of course, the Senator knows that personally I have always believed in a permanent commission, and I still believe that would be better; but, taking the viewpoint even of those who agreed in the beginning that we ought to have the commission to settle the policies, I think that within a year the policies should be reasonably well settled; and let me point out to the Senator and to the Senate the difference that will exist once the regulations have been formulated on all the different branches of radio and once the principles have been laid down in the broadcasting field and in the various other fields of radio as to the Department of Commerce then handling it.

They will have this set-up, this whole work before them, and when new questions come up they can be decided in accordance with the principles that have already been laid down by the commission; while if these duties went to them now the work is not sufficiently complete, and they would then be setting up their own ideas, and the commission, of course, would be called to review them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator believe, though, that such progress will be made in radio, and so many new questions will arise from time to time, that it will be absolutely necessary to continue a permanent commission? I believe that is what will have to be done for a long time; and it seems to me that we ought to make it permanent as soon as possible and get the best kind of a commission.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator that I rather think if that is to be done the Congress would probably prefer to enlarge the powers of the commission to include all communications, including telegraph and telephone as well as wireless.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps so.

Mr. DILL. There are bills pending now for the creation of what is called a communications commission, which would include the Radio Commission, and it may be that the next Congress will see fit to do that; but, at any rate, it seems to me the present status is such that it would be very unwise to upset the whole situation by throwing back on the Department of Commerce work that it is not prepared to do, because it has largely disbanded the force it had for handling radio before the commission existed.

Mr. FESS. I may state to the Senator that that is the general conclusion of every member of the committee.

Mr. DILL. I think that was the conclusion of the committee. There are some members of the committee who rather disliked to continue the original jurisdiction; but after the hearings, and after considering the whole matter, they thought that at present it was unwise to attempt to let the powers revert to the department because of the commission being in the middle, as it were, of many of the tasks to be performed.

Mr. President, I desire to insert in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Louis G. Caldwell, the general counsel of the Radio Commission, which he wrote me at my request, and with it a statement of the legal questions now pending before the commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1929.

Hon. C. C. DILL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR DILL: Inclosed you will find a copy of that portion of a report which I have under course of preparation covering pending cases which are being handled by our legal division. In addition to the data shown by the inclosed copy, the following information may be of service to you:

The three cases other than those pending on appeal, namely, the White, Denemark, and American Bond & Mortgage Co. cases, all involve the validity of the radio act of 1927 with respect to whether it is a proper exercise of the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce; whether the act is in violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution, in that it permits or requires the taking of private property without due process of law, or the taking of private property for public use without just compensation; and whether the standard of "public interest, convenience, or necessity" is too vague and indefinite to be valid. In addition, in all three cases the claim is being made that the orders of the commission are invalid both for an alleged lack of due process, noncompliance with the statute, and for reasons analogous to those usually urged in attacking those of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission. In the White and Denemark cases the stations concerned were reduced each from 500 watts to 100 watts after hearing on application for renewal of licenses. In the American Bond & Mortgage Co. case the commission, after hearing, refused a renewal of license with respect to a station with maximum power of 20,000 watts which had previously been licensed with 5,000 watts.

Of the 11 cases pending on appeal, the first two were potentially very dangerous, but apparently are not being pushed by the appellants. They both involve a very delicate situation in the transoceanic high-frequency band, with complications of international law and the obligation of the United States under the International Radio Telegraph Convention of 1927. In addition, they both involve the question as to whether any private interest is entitled to any of the limited channels in this band.

The fourth, fifth, and sixth cases, which are really one, you are, of course, familiar with. In addition to the question of the claim of property right submitted, they involve nearly every conceivable interpretation of the statutory provisions covering appeals and the nature and extent of the jurisdiction of the court of appeals under the act.

The seventh case has to do with the claim of station WNYC in New York that it is not subject to Federal jurisdiction or, if it is, that it is entitled to preference by reason of the fact that it is municipally owned and operated. The act is being indirectly attacked in this case.

The eighth case involves the right of the commission to forbid the operation of portable stations in the broadcast band. Here again the claim is made that the commission has no right to refuse to renew licenses because of supposed rights previously acquired, the portable stations having been in operation prior to the enactment of the radio act of 1927, and having continued to operate under licenses from the commission until July 1, 1928.

The ninth, tenth, and eleventh cases are being treated as one, since they were consolidated for hearing before the commission. While no brief has been filed it may be expected that these cases will be as important as any of the others since they involve the action of the commission in limiting station WENR, a 50,000-watt station in Chicago, controlled by the Commonwealth-Edison interests, to two-sevenths time. There is every indication that every possible point will be raised and that in addition the court of appeals will be called upon to pass on the principles which must guide the commission in its determination of controversies between broadcasting stations.

Do not hesitate to call upon me for any additional information you may need.

Yours very truly,

LOUIS G. CALDWELL,
General Counsel.

II. REPORT OF PENDING CASES

There are at present pending 11 appeals from decisions of the commission in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and 3 other cases in which the commission is interested by reason of the fact that the validity and construction of the radio act of 1927 and the validity of orders of the commission are involved.

The three cases, other than appeals, are, as follows:

(1) Clinton R. White v. George E. Q. Johnson, United States Attorney, et al. (U. S. D. C., N. D. Ill., No. 8566). In this case the bill of complaint was filed September 12, 1928. Motions on the part of plaintiff for temporary injunction, and on the part of defendants to dismiss the bill were argued in Chicago on September 28 and October 1, 1928. The bill was dismissed as against the members of the Federal Radio Commission for want of jurisdiction. Extensive briefs were filed by both sides. On October 16 the court overruled the plaintiff's motion for temporary injunction and also overruled the motion to dismiss as to the remaining defendants. The plaintiff appealed from the court's order to the court of appeals of the seventh circuit. Printed transcript of record was filed December 17, 1928, and appellant's brief was filed January 28, 1929. An extension of time for filing defendants' brief has been obtained, and it is due on March 10, 1929. Upon the filing thereafter of a reply brief by appellant the case will be ready for oral argument which may be expected to take place early this spring. The case is, of course, still pending on the merits in the trial court, and an informal agreement has been made with attorneys for the plaintiff for the hearing of the case on the stipulation of facts which should not be difficult to agree upon. Answers were filed in behalf of defendants on January 2, 1929.

(2) Emil Denemark (Inc.) v. George E. Q. Johnson, United States Attorney, et al. (U. S. D. C., N. D. Ill., No. 8575): In this case the bill of complaint was filed simultaneously with that in the case just described, presents the same issues, and was argued at the same time in Chicago before the trial court, with the same results. No appeal, however, was taken and the case is still pending on the merits in the trial court. Answers were filed in behalf of defendants on January 2, 1929.

(3) United States v. American Bond & Mortgage Co., et al. (U. S. D. C., N. D. Ill., No. 8704): In this case the United States filed its bill of complaint on October —, 1928, and a motion was immediately made on the part of the Government for a temporary injunction, and on the part of defendant to dismiss the bill. The defendants filed an answer and the motions were argued on November 9 and 10, 1928. Extensive briefs were filed by both sides. The motions have not yet been decided but it is expected that a decision, accompanied by a written opinion, will be forthcoming in the immediate future. An informal understanding has been had with defendants' attorneys under which the merits of the case will be heard on a stipulation of facts. A draft stipulation has already been prepared and we are now working to put it in final form.

The 11 cases pending on appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia are as follows:

(1) International Quotations Co. v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4828: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed on September 6, 1928, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on September 26, 1928. No further step has been taken by appellant in the case, with the result that no record has been printed and no briefs filed. It is planned to make a motion to dismiss on the part of the commission in the immediate future with a reasonable prospect of success.

(2) Bull Insular Lines (Inc.) v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4832: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed September 18, 1928, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on October 14, 1928. The appellants filed with the court a petition for taking additional evidence and an answer to the petition was filed in behalf of the commission with the result that on October 27, 1928, the court denied the petition. Appellants then filed a motion for rehearing on the petition and a motion was filed in behalf of the commission in opposition to the motion, with the result that the court postponed a determination on the motion until a hearing on the merits. No printed record or briefs have been filed and the case is, therefore, subject to a motion to dismiss which it is planned to make in the immediate future.

(3) Technical Radio Laboratory v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4835: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed September 19, 1928, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on October 9, 1928. Appellant filed a designation of the portion of the record to be printed October 31, 1928, and the commission did likewise on November 8, 1928. On December 11, 1928, appellant moved that the commission's designation of record be stricken and that the record be ordered diminished. The motion was not passed upon since by stipulation there was a final designation of record and a joint motion for leave to file an additional statement of facts was granted. Neither the printed record nor brief have yet been filed.

(4) General Electric Co. v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4870: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed November 9, 1928, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on December 1, 1928. On November 9, 1928, the court granted appellant's motion for a "stay of proceedings." Written motions were filed in behalf of the commission on November 28, 1928, to set aside this stay order, to dismiss the appeal, and to strike appellant's notice of appeal and reasons therefor, to require appellant to elect between this appeal and No. 4880. Printed brief was filed by the commission on December 1, 1928, and by appellant on December 3, 1928. The case was argued orally December 3 and 4, 1928. During oral argument a further motion was made by the commission to require appellant to elect between this appeal and case No. 4880. Determination of the motion was postponed by the court until determination of the case on the merits. Appellant filed a printed brief on the motion on December 13, 1928, and a printed brief in reply thereto was filed by the commission December 22, 1928. The printed transcript of record was filed January 10, 1929, and a brief on the merits by appellant on February 8, 1929. A further brief on the merits on behalf of the commission is in course of preparation and will be filed shortly.

(5) People of the State of New York v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4871: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed November 9, 1928. The commission's statement of facts and grounds for decision was combined with that in case No. 4870. A written motion to dismiss was filed in behalf of the commission November 28, 1928. The case was argued, together with No. 4870, on December 3 and 4, 1928, and although the court denied this appellant the right to participate in the oral argument it permitted the filing of a printed brief. The briefs filed in behalf of the commission in No. 4870 have also covered this case. During oral argument the attorney general of New Hampshire was denied the right to take part in the oral argument, but was also permitted to file a brief.

(6) General Electric Co. v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4880: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed November 30, 1928, presumably to cover defects in the first appeal pointed out by the commission's motion to dismiss case No. 4870. The oral argument on December 3 and 4 was directed to this case as well as No. 4870 and No. 4871. The commission's various motions directed at case No. 4870 were also directed to this case and the briefs filed since then, both on the motions and on the merits, have covered this case as well as the other two.

(7) City of New York v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4898: In this case the notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed January 2, 1929, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision January 21, 1929, together with a motion to strike the notice of appeal and reasons therefor. On January 24, 1929, an answer to the motion was filed by appellant and on January 26, 1929, the court postponed a determination of the motion until a hearing of the case on the merits. On February 9, 1929, appellant filed a petition to adduce additional evidence, the commission filing an answer thereto on February —, 1929, and the motion has not yet been determined. Neither a printed record or briefs have been filed in this case.

(8) C. L. Carrell v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4899: In this case notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed January 4, 1929, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision January 22, 1929. Negotiations are under way for a designation of record, but no printed record or briefs have been filed.

(9) Great Lakes Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4900: In this case notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed January 5, 1929, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on February 1, 1929. Negotiations with appellant's attorneys for designation of record are under way.

(10) Wilber Glenn Voliva v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4901: In this case notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed January 5, 1929, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on February 1, 1929. The case is being treated as one with Nos. 4900 and 4902.

(11) Agricultural Broadcasting Co. v. Federal Radio Commission, No. 4902: In this case notice of appeal and reasons therefor was filed January 5, 1929, and the commission's statement of grounds for decision on February 1, 1929. This case is being treated as one with cases Nos. 4900 and 4901.

Only one other matter remains to be noticed. On November 2, 1928, a bill of complaint was filed by the San Angelo Broadcasting Co. (Inc.) v. Members of Federal Radio Commission, asking for an injunction, and a motion was immediately made for preliminary injunction in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. Shortly thereafter, on November —, 1928, the case was dismissed without prejudice.

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who fixes the rates that are paid for radio service?

Mr. DILL. The rates for radio service are fixed by those who own the radio stations. The law does not give the commission any power to control in any way rates for broadcasting.

Mr. BLEASE. I should like to ask the Senator what his opinion is about that, as to whether Congress should make some regulation?

Mr. DILL. I think that eventually a commission—if not this commission, some commission or some authority somewhere in the Government—should be given power to regulate the rates of radio communication and radio broadcasting, just as we regulate railroad rates. I do not know that that time has come yet. I myself have not thought that it has come yet, because I thought the radio stations should be allowed to make some money, to encourage them to build up a high standard of programs.

Mr. BLEASE. Personally, it does not affect me, because I do not own a radio. I never listened in to one but one time, and it was in such bad shape that I got disgusted and quit. I like to see a man when he is talking to me. It is like going to hear preaching: If I have to sit in a church and can not see the preacher, I would rather be at home. I do not care very much about hearing them then; but I know that down in my section of the country it is just simply open-handed, cold robbery for a man to try to own a radio and get decent connections. I know that we have to depend on Charlotte, and they treat us just as they please.

It seems to me that if the American Congress is going to take any action at all on the radio proposition, as my friend suggests, they should have absolute control through some authority of the prices charged, and the people should have a fair deal.

I am not charging anything against anybody; but I do know that in the last campaign there was favoritism shown, and I do know that there were occasions when the price for listening in on a speech was so exorbitant that it absolutely deprived certain people from the privilege.

If we are going to take charge of the air that God Almighty has given to people, and control it, I think we certainly ought to fix it so that every man in this country, however humble he may be, may, if he can raise the price, at least have the privilege of listening to what is being said or what is going on over this country.

I am told that it is a great comfort to a great many people to have radio. I hear a great many people bragging about how much they enjoy it. That is all right; I have not any objection; but I do know and repeat that some of these stations charge outrageous prices.

I have never wanted to make a speech over the radio because I do not like it. I am like the old nigger preacher down in my country—and that is the only time I ever heard of anything in the world on which my views coincided with the views of a darky. They asked him to come up and preach a sermon over the radio. He said, "No, sir, boss; I don't do that." They said, "Why not?" He said, "I don't speak to no congregation that I can't take up a collection from." [Laughter.]

I do not want to speak to any congregation that I can not look at, and have them look at me. I think I am the only Senator in this body who voted against this radio proposition. I knew it was going to be a curse when it started, and that is what it proved to be, especially to the Democratic Party through the favoritism and exorbitant prices charged in 1928.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that if the inventions in radio continue to develop as it appears now they will, it is not at all beyond the realm of probability that within a very short time people will be able to see him when he talks on the radio, because television is developing very rapidly.

Mr. BLEASE. Then I will be so old I will not want to be seen. [Laughter.]

Mr. DILL. I do not think the Senator will be very much older than he is now. Let me add also, in reply to the Senator's suggestion that he voted against this bill, that if this bill or some other bill like it had not been passed by Congress, every radio wave length in the United States would to-day be privately owned, because the courts would have declared, in injunction proceedings, that certain wave lengths had been acquired by those who used them because of their use of them.

Mr. COPELAND. That they had obtained vested rights.

Mr. DILL. Vested rights would have been recognized by the courts, and while this law is not perfect, and while it has not done everything which it was hoped it might do, it has done as much as legal language can to save to future generations the use of radio for whatever purposes the people may want to use it for.

If the courts uphold the law, then it will have protected the people to the extent of making it possible for the Radio Commission or the Department of Commerce, or whatever Government official may be given the authority, to use this great art in the interest of mankind at any time that those in charge desire to do so, regardless of what may have been done in the past.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, before the Senator concludes what he has to say, I think he ought to give the Senate to understand that, according to the testimony given to the committee, the development of the engineering features of dealing with the radio medium, the ether, and the peculiarities of transmission, has only begun. An exhaustive knowledge of the possibilities of radio has not yet been in any way approached.

In addition to that, the development of receiving sets and transmission sets, according to the testimony given to the committee, is yet in its infancy. It has gone far enough, even empirical as it is, to demonstrate that radio will eventually take the place, perhaps, of our telephones, our cables, and our telegraphs, because it has already been demonstrated that it is more efficient, not subject to certain disturbances and obstructions to which the physical means of transportation are subject, and we are right now upon the threshold of possibly the most efficient means of communication throughout the world and in local communities ever known to mankind.

If the Members of the Senate could have sat in and listened to those who have been day by day studying this problem, as we had given them the responsibility of doing, they would have reached the conclusion that it would take all the time of the very best talent, the best electrical engineers, the best administrative geniuses, so to regulate this thing in its infancy that when it was developed it would be developed for the use and benefit of the public.

If we are derelict in our duty now and allow this marvelous discovery, this art, to be used, as unfortunately some of the great public utilities are now being used, the public will lose the ultimate benefit of what, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, promises to be the greatest educational and industrial aid organized society has ever seen.

Mr. DILL. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I do not want to take any more time of the Senate, unless there are some questions somebody wants to ask.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would like to ask the Senator whether, under the measure now being considered, the Radio Commission have any censorship over what is to be broadcast, in the way of advertising, for instance?

Mr. DILL. Under the law the commission are expressly forbidden from exercising the power of censorship. In actual practice, of course, they have some influence, in that they may declare that certain kinds of programs are not in the public interest as much as certain other kinds of programs, for that reason granting a license or a preference in wave length or power or time or operation to those whose programs they think are most in the public interest. To that extent it might be considered that they were exercising a certain censorship; but they are expressly forbidden in the law from exercising it directly.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would like to ask, then, if the Senator does not think that ultimately, in the development of broadcasting, some such authority will be given the Radio Commission of necessity, in order that it may be regulated to some extent.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I shall need to be confronted with very grave abuses before I shall ever want to give to any governmental official the power to censor radio programs. I think about it as I think about other things, such as free speech and free press; while it may be abused, it is a right that should not be interfered with except when the law of libel or slander or obscenity or treason is involved.

I think there may be some control given over the advertising feature of radio, but as to actual censorship of what men may say or the kind of music they may play, I should never want that to come, unless it was absolutely necessary.

Mr. FRAZIER. It was to advertising that I particularly referred.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator, touching advertising, that the fact that there is advertising over the radio is what makes it possibble for people to listen in to the wonderful programs they do hear without paying anything for that privilege. I have yet been unable to think of any method that would be less burdensome to the people, when they hear a magnificent program over the air, than the statement that "This program is presented by General Motors, the manufacturers of certain kinds of automobiles," or "This is done by the manufacturers of Palmolive Soap," or "This is done by the Anglo-Persian rug manufacturers." It seems to me that slight announcement is about the lowest expense that the radio listener could hope to be put to for the receiving of these magnificent programs.

Mr. FRAZIER. Just one more question. There has been a good deal of complaint about the chain programs, where a large number of stations are hooked up together, it being said that practically the whole dial is covered, and the ordinary radio set can not get any other program than the chain program that happens to be on. Is there any method being worked out by the radio engineers that will result in the broadcasting chain of stations being able to broadcast any programs over the same wave lengths from all the stations?

Mr. DILL. There are claims by some engineers that the same wave length can be used and stations can be synchronized—that is the term they use; that is, that they may use the same frequency and broadcast the same program on that frequency all over the country. However, that has not yet been proven satisfactory enough to be relied upon as a general method.

I may say to the Senator that there are proposals to the commission by which a program will be broadcast over a short wave length and rebroadcast with very small power, in local communities, on the original wave length. That proposal, I say, is pending. I read in the press that some such proposal had been approved by the commisison for a New York company, and the Federation of Labor in Chicago has asked for permission to use a short wave length by which it can broadcast its program on a short wave length, to be picked up by small stations in small towns all over the United States, and rebroadcast on the same broadcasting wave length that was being used by the big stations in Chicago. Personally, I hope that some of those plans may be tried; and if they can be worked out, it would result, indeed, in a great saving of wave lengths.

Coming to chain broadcasting, about which the Senator asked, the commission has attempted to work out regulations, but they have not been able to get regulations that seem satisfactory. The main trouble is this: The stations that are granted high power and what is called a cleared channel, with no other station on that frequency, are, of course, good stations, and they put on good programs. But when there is a general program, such as the President's address, or the General Motors' great program which they may put on, these big stations which have secured the preferred rights want the chain program the same as the little stations do, and the problem is how to enable the stations in all sections of the country to have them and still not take all the cleared-channel stations and the high-powered stations into the chain.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think, if some system could be worked out by which the programs could be broadcast over the same wave length and on the same frequency, it would be better.

Mr. DILL. There are two stations in Massachusetts that are connected by wire, just a few miles apart, which are synchronized perfectly, I understand, and experiments have been tried in Ohio and Michigan particularly that I know of, and in one or two other places, and some of the reports indicate that they have resulted quite satisfactorily, but other reports indicate that they have not been satisfactory. There are many experiments along that line, and I think the commission is very anxious that something may be developed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Ordinarily, I think the radio programs run anywhere from 6 o'clock in the morning to midnight, or to 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning, depending on the geographical location of the broadcasting station. About 18 hours per day, I suppose, would cover the ordinary range of programs. If each advertiser should be allowed about an hour, that would mean, of course, that only 18 different concerns in the country, or, if they should occupy half an hour each, it would mean that 36 separate organizations would have the right to broadcast over either a single station or over a chain of stations.

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. What I want to ask is this: Is there real competition among the private concerns that seek to have the advantage of the use of the radio for advertising purposes, or is it a question of "first come, first served"? How is that regulated?

Mr. DILL. Is the Senator referring to the National Broadcasting and the Columbia Broadcasting chains or to individual stations?

Mr. BARKLEY. I speak of the broadcasting chain of stations and of the private concerns that use them for advertising purposes.

Mr. DILL. As I understand it, those who own a station, or those who own the chain system, select whom they see fit to select, and they make the price pretty high. I do not think there are so very many more demands for the time than there are hours available.

The Senator is now pointing to the great future difficulty in radio, namely, this: Why give one unit of a business a radio station by which it can advertise itself, and not give every other branch of the business a similar right? In other words, why give one newspaper in the city of Washington a radio station and not give one to every newspaper? Why give one Washington newspaper the right to use time on a radio station, and not every newspaper? All of which leads us to the conclusion that eventually, necessarily, radio is likely to become a public utility, where "first come, first served" will be the rule. But we have not yet reached that point. It is not thought that it would be wise to have legislation along that line at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those who have radios, of course, have observed from time to time the tendency of all programs to be hooked up on what are called national hook ups, or chain broadcasts. However desirable the programs may be, and however enjoyable they are, if that tendency continues until the whole country is hooked up under one program, it will not only shut off independent stations that might want to put on other programs, but it will deprive the people who enjoy diversity of radio entertainment of the right to tune in on some other station and get a different program.

Mr. DILL. Of course, if that condition should develop, the commission has power to stop it, the commission has power to remedy it, the commission has authority to control it; but the commission has been very liberal in allowing stations a free hand, because the art is new.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the infancy of this industry and this method of communication, and the limited number of hours a day, I was wondering whether we might in the future approach a time when of necessity, if the combination of stations is to continue, it might not shut out hundreds, and perhaps thousands, of concerns that have just as much right to have their advertising done in this way as others have.

Mr. DILL. If a monopoly in effect is allowed to be effected by a few great interests having control of the great high-powered stations, the public demand will be such as to drive Congress to pass a law by which they will become a public utility, so that there can be no monopoly.

Mr. HEFLIN. The suggestion made by the Senator from Kentucky with reference to the general hook up and that it may disturb, upset, and break up the programs of various communities all over the country in the various States is a correct one. They go ahead and arrange their programs and then they are notified later that there is to be a general hook up of somebody on a certain evening, and the local program must be postponed. It is a hardship on those people, and there ought to be some way in which such matters could be regulated.

Mr. DILL. The commission has full power to do that, but it has been so busy on the allocation question and the problem is such a complex one that they have not yet been able to work out a solution that seems just and fair, because in every community there is a tremendous population that demands a big chain program practically every night. For instance, when inauguration day comes there will be practically no one in the country who will not want to hear that program.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true.

Mr. DILL. When there is a great program of General Motors, for instance, or when Will Rogers or Al Jolson and other great entertainers are on the air, every station wants to be in on the program. There are two sides to the chain-program matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. They ought to be compelled to give notice far enought in advance so that those localities would not go ahead and arrange their programs and then have them upset by some order coming from the commission here in Washington.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. With reference to the observation made by the Senator from Alabama may I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that in the chain program the local station, as to which the Senator is complaining that it does not get notice in time, does not have to take the program if it does not choose to do so, and then it may conduct its own local program if it likes? In other words, there are many independent companies in the chain system who take the service and who may refuse the service if they like, so it is not an interference with the conduct of their particular station except by the free will of the local station.

Mr. HEFLIN. I myself have witnessed a situation where I was trying to listen in to a local program from the Polytechnic Institute of my own State, and one of these general chain hook-ups on the outside got into the air and the confusion was so terrific that I could not tell which was which and whether there was any head or tail to any of it.

Mr. WAGNER. That is a matter of regulation. That is where the regulation is not as effective as it might be.

Mr. DILL. It has not yet come, in fact.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Did the Senator express himself as favoring a permanent commission?

Mr. DILL. I said it had always been my own view that there should be a permanent commission, but that the Senate and the House of Representatives compromised on the theory that the commission should be a body of original jurisdiction only until the policies and the problems relating to the beginning of radio regulation were worked out, and that I believed most of them would be completed in another year.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator this question. If the Congress sees fit to pass the pending bill extending the life of the commission for one more year, are we to have a bill brought to us next year providing for the extension of the commission for still another year or to make the commission a permanent one?

Mr. DILL. Of course, I can not answer the Senator's question. I may say to the Senator that the bill originated in the House, and it was members of the House committee who were most opposed to a permanent commission. I would not have been particularly disposed to press the bill, but when I came to study the situation I felt that there was great need for it this year. My own opinion is that the proper step to take is to create a communications commission in both wire and wireless, that will have powers similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission in railroad matters, as they will come up later.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator were to undertake that, he would bring down then a tremendous group opposing it on the part of the telegraph lines and the telephone lines.

Mr. DILL. Yes; I do not doubt that.

Mr. COPELAND. My own attitude toward the bill now pending would be greatly modified if I had an assurance that we would not have a repetition of this bill.

Mr. DILL. I want to say to the Senator that no man can foresee what may happen with radio in the future. The field of television has just begun to be developed. There may be such problems developed in the next year in television that anything I might say now would not fit the situation. It is now being proposed as a probability that television will make it possible to send by radio a photostat of pages of great newspapers such as are published in New York City, which in turn will make it possible to issue the paper almost simultaneously in all the great cities. That is not yet perfected, but the Senator can see that there is a field which would present new problems not yet met.

There is to-day a new problem being presented by newspapers which own radio stations and which are using radio as a means to sell advertising in the columns of their papers. That is a new question which has just come up within the last 30 or 60 days. How the commission should deal with it is as yet undecided. I may say to the Senator that unless new problems are developed, the questions demanding the original attention of the commission such as I have discussed here to-night will be pretty well settled within the year and there would not be a year from now an upset in the situation such as I have described.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator has given great thought to this subject and he has brought some very valuable information to the Senate from time to time. I want to ask what he thinks about the advisability of arranging for some board or some authority in the States to cooperate with the Federal authority here in Washington. For instance, in the State of Alabama, we will say, the people are constantly making suggestions about the radio and how it ought to be run, and they are making complaints about the discriminations that are practiced upon them. Ought there not to be some commission in the States that would have jurisdiction over the radio which operated wholly within the State?

Mr. DILL. The trouble about the proposal is that we can not keep the radio waves or radio impulses within a State. There is no known substance that will stop a radio wave when once it starts out from the broadcasting instrument. It can not be confined within a State. Only three days ago we read in the newspapers that a little station down in Arkansas using 7½ watts—the ordinary station uses 500 to 10,000 watts—was heard all over the country late at night, showing that even with small power the wave may go out great distances.

It might be that a commission such as the Senator suggests, authorized to advise the Federal commission as to conditions in that State as to reception and transmission, might be very helpful, but I am doubtful as to giving it authority. There is no station that operates within a single State, unless it might be the State of Texas, and there the station would have to be in the center of the State, and I doubt whether it would work even there.

Mr. HEFLIN. Would it not help work out the system by having a commission of that kind in each State to cooperate with and which could make suggestions to the Federal commission? As the Senator has said, this is a new subject and we are just groping along gradually, and things are developing every day that we did not know about the previous day.

Mr. DILL. I think such State commissions might well learn things about the stations in their respective sections of the country and report to the Federal commission, but to give them power would cause such a conflict of activities on the part of the different States that I think it would be a very serious mistake to do it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Still, if people in the State want to broadcast within the State from some State station, they might not want to be disturbed by some outside station, General Motors, for instance, who want to broadcast a nation-wide program.

Mr. DILL. The only way to do that, of course, would be to have a central power controlling it to see that nobody interfered on that particular wave length. The State organization could only control within the State and could not stop somebody in another State.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator from South Carolina raised a very important question about the price to be paid for radio service. We have got to come to a consideration of that question. There is no doubt about it. I had some experience in the last campaign about getting radio service. I heard of others who had the same trouble. If you want to make a radio speech you are told what a tremendous amount of money it will cost to do it, and in many instances the parties who desire to have the speeches radioed abandon the idea because the price is so tremendous that they do not feel they could afford to pay it. If it is not regulated and some authority lodged somewhere, the radio will soon be in the hands of those who are able to pay tremendous fees for the service, and those who are not able to pay those fees will be denied its use.

Mr. DILL. I said to the Senator from South Carolina that I thought the time would come in the not far-distant future when a commission would be given and should be given power to control all rates for the service of the radio.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest to the Senator that I know a Senator who complained about the treatment that I have mentioned. He said that he was thinking of introducing a bill and that he believed that Congress ought to pass a bill to require the radio broadcasting station, where it permitted somebody to hire its services in the closing hours of a campaign and pay a tremendous price for it to broadcast the views of a candidate, to permit the opposing candidate to answer free of charge. It is getting to be a serious question—but, of course, the radio service is young.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I will yield the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington answer an inquiry before he takes his seat?

Mr. DILL. Very well.

Mr. KING. I want to ask the Senator whether the apprehension which he and others, including myself, felt when the bill was under discussion a year ago have been realized, namely, that a monopoly has been obtained of interstate radio communication and trans-Atlantic radio communication?

Mr. DILL. I will answer the Senator in this way. What may seem to have developed into a monopoly may have occurred; that is, there may be some things which have happened which would indicate that; but so long as the licenses are issued for only 90 days for broadcasting and one year for other stations, no monopoly can be very dangerous whenever the Government officials want to break it up, because they can take away those licenses entirely and absolutely destroy any monopoly of the air that may be created.

That brings me to the more important question of having the Government's side of the radio law presented to the courts in such a way that the courts will understand that side of it clearly and if possible be induced to protect the people's rights on the air by maintaining this law in its entirety.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator and therefore I was very happy to see the provision for suitable legal aid in order to defend the rights of the people as well as of the Government, but many complaints——

Mr. HEFLIN. In line with the suggestion the Senator is making, will he permit me to interrupt? Had the Senator finished his statement?

Mr. KING. I had not.

Mr. HEFLIN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. KING. Complaints have come to me that the telegraph or telephone companies are securing advantages to which they are not entitled, advantages in interstate communication and advantages which give them privileges denied to others in connection with transoceanic communication.

Mr. DILL. I think certain agreements between certain great companies engaged in different branches of manufacture of parts of radio and parts used in radio broadcasting and radio receiving and the electric business generally have created a virtual monopoly, but a monopoly in the air as such is impossible so long as we maintain the right to withdraw a license from anybody at the end of the license period. I may say in that connection that the Department of Justice is now engaged in an investigation of the Radio Corporation of America because of charges to the effect that it is acting in violation of the antitrust law.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. DILL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Last spring I received a communication signed by a number of operators in which they called my attention to an order which was promulgated by the Radio Commission, which proposed to cut off 164 stations throughout the United States. I would like to ask what was the result of the promulgation of that order, and to what extent did they go in denying the right of those who operated the stations in question?

Mr. DILL. I do not know exactly how many of these stations were cut off, but a great many of them were permitted to continue on the air for part time. Some of them did not ask for renewals; some of them quit voluntarily, and a great many of them were curtailed in their time. Of course, the greatest need in the radio field to-day is to get rid of some of the stations so that there will not be so much interference in the air. As to which stations shall be taken out and which stations shall be favored is indeed a great problem. But whatever mistakes may be made they can all be rectified so long as the right to give these licenses to whomsoever the commission sees fit continues under the law.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether the hearings recently conducted by the committee of which he is a member demonstrated that the situation had improved during the past year?

Mr. DILL. I think the reception conditions have improved. I think that there has been an improvement in general throughout the country.

Mr. KING. Were attempts made, as it was stated they would be made, to invoke the aid of the courts by injunction or otherwise to give to some of the big corporations, some of which are denominated monopolistic, vested rights in the air?

Mr. DILL. The Senator was probably not here when I explained the cases that are pending.

Mr. KING. I was not.

Mr. DILL. Particularly WGY, the General Electric station, at Schenectady, is claiming it has a property right in the air. When the commission undertook to take it from the air after 9 o'clock at night because of allowing a station on the Pacific coast to begin broadcasting at 6 o'clock in the evening—a difference of three hours—it claimed that it had a property right in the air. It is setting up that claim in the court here, and if the claim shall be maintained of course it will destroy effective radio regulation.

Mr. KING. Has anything occurred by judicial decision or otherwise to lead to the belief that they will be accorded vested rights in the air?

Mr. DILL. There has been no decision that would indicate that. The briefs in the case are very interesting. They are based on two theories: One is that because of priority of use, as in the appropriation of water or by public utilities generally, they have acquired a priority right as against anybody else desiring to do the same kind of work; and that they have invested their money, and that they can not therefore be interfered with. That contention follows a certain line of reasoning in cases set out in the briefs. On the side of the Government the other theory is set up, namely, that they are mere tenants by permission of the Government, just as a man who is given permission by a city council to sell fruit on the street for, say, a 90-day period at a time, when the city council decides that it is time for him to clear the street and let somebody else be there, can not claim a priority because he has been there in the past and has spent money to build up a position; or just as a man who is permitted to put a fish wheel in a river in order to catch fish for a long period of time, when Congress wants to use that river for navigation he must give way, although he has expended money on the fish wheel.

Those are the two theories which are being presented now in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. Whatever decision may be rendered there, the cases will probably go to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. I will ask the Senator if there was any testimony before the committee with a view to showing that there was no necessity for perpetuating the Radio Commission, or indicating a better way of dealing with the situation than of continuing the commission for another year?

Mr. DILL. Yes; I will say that Mr. Manton Davis, the attorney for the Radio Corporation, appeared before the committee and opposed the continuation of the commission's original power for another year. Mr. Caldwell, a member of the commission who is now retiring from it, also opposed the continuation of the commission. Those gentlemen gave as their reasons that they thought the work could be done better by the Department of Commerce. Outside of that, I do not recall anyone who appeared urging that the commission should not continue with its original powers.

Mr. KING. There was no contention that the Government should not keep its hands upon this great instrumentality?

Mr. DILL. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the questions the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has asked are similar to those I intended to ask. I had intended to inquire, if preference rights are obtained now in the early stage of radio development, will they become vested rights, or after a while will it be possible to get those having preference rights out of the air and to abandon their works entirely? That is a serious question. If we can not check them and curb them and control them and put them out, then these rights in the air are going soon to be lodged in the hands of those who are now trying to monopolize them.

Mr. DILL. I may say to the Senator the only way they can acquire such rights will be by a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States to that effect. In the contemplation of the law they have no such rights, and they never can secure them unless the Supreme Court declares that the law is null and void and that they do have such rights. Otherwise, they never will obtain them because they are required every time they apply for a license to sign a waiver under oath that they abandon as against the Government claim to ownership to any wave length or use of the ether.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did this company sign such a waiver?

Mr. DILL. Yes; they have always signed it.

Mr. HEFLIN. They claim they have a vested right.

Mr. DILL. They claim that they can not be taken out of the air and some one else put on the air, because they have been there and spent their money and acquired a property right.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is a very important subject, Mr. President, and now is the time for us to take control and keep control.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to this bill which I should like to have the clerk read, and then I should like to have the amendment lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill, on page 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

> The commission shall, either through one of its members or an agent authorized by it, hold hearings at the place where is located any radio station or stations whose rights under the license granted it or them are questioned, claimed, or challenged by any other person, firm, company, corporation, radio station, or operator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am reluctant to say anything on this subject. I suppose I am the only Member of the Senate who makes use of the radio every week, and in my case several times a week. In view of that situation, I should not care to say anything until I explain that the fact that I do this broadcasting is not related in any way whatever to my opposition to the pending bill. I modify that to the extent of saying that my contacts have been such, however, that, perhaps, I have come to have some first-hand information regarding the problem which I would not otherwise have. My engagement to broadcast is not directly with any broadcasting concern or radio corporation.

My employment is with a New York concern which has its arrangement with a broadcasting company about the use of the air. So I have no direct contact or relationship with any corporation in the broadcasting or radio business. I think it is only fair to myself that I should say this, and I am sure the Senate will take it in the spirit in which I present the fact.

In the next place, I want to bear very grateful testimony to the fact that the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], and my colleague on the committee the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] and other Senators upon the committee who have served the country through a number of years most valiantly and usefully in working out the intricacies of this new problem. I can not find it in my heart to express any criticism of the Senator from Washington, who has just taken his seat. I know how earnestly he has pursued the study of this subject and how well informed he is regarding it. I can say the same thing of the Senator from Indiana and other members of the committee. I do not, however, share the view they have expressed here tonight. Neither do I feel that the matter has been presented to the Senate in its entirety.

I do not think the Senate understands how much of this work is now being done by the Department of Commerce. I shall undertake in the course of the evening—I have now 1 hour and 33 minutes—to place before the Senate, in one way or another, rather detailed information regarding the radio problem, in order that the Senate may be advised when it comes to vote, and may vote wisely upon this important question.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Does the Senator from New York intend to discuss the bill until 11 o'clock?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from New York intends to do that, if it shall be found necessary to amplify the subject and place it fully before the Senate.

Mr. NEELY. In that event a quorum should be present.

Mr. COPELAND. I beg the Senator from West Virginia not to call for a quorum as yet.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia can not call for a quorum unless the Senator from New York shall yield for that purpose.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not yield for that purpose as yet.

Mr. NEELY. I submit that the absent Members should be summoned to hear the instructions which the Senator from New York is about to impart.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I fully share the sentiment of the Senator from West Virginia. I find in this matter, as in all others, except those pertaining to coal, he is a well-informed Senator and a very wise man.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia, with unfeigned embarrassment, admits the truth of the "soft impeachment" which has just fallen from the eloquent lips of the Senator from New York; but, in a more serious vein, the Senator from New York realizes that the Senator from West Virginia knows more about coal than he knows about any other subject in the world. The knowledge of coal possessed by the Senator from West Virginia is exceeded only by that of the Senator from New York relative to the science and practice of medicine, about which the Senator ably broadcasts every morning, for the benefit and delight of our wives and children. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator from West Virginia permit the Senator from New York to proceed, in order that we may not have to stay later than 11 o'clock?

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky for the first time in his life is unkind. Why does he remind me of the self-evident fact that the Senate prefers the "song of Apollo" to the words of Mercury?

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much obliged to the Senator from West Virginia. I can not understand how a State served so well as it has been for six years in the Senate by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, by his eloquence and by his advertising of the coal produced in that State, should have refused to send him back to the Senate. It is incomprehensible beyond words and unspeakably shortsighted. The State of West Virginia should have continued the Senator here to the end of time; and I wish from my heart that he could have 200 years in the Senate, because he has dignified and instructed it through all these years.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. NEELY. For the Senator's generous wish, which he has so very graciously expressed, I am truly grateful. Let me add that if the Senator's annual dinners are to be similar to the one which he permitted me to enjoy at Wardman Park Hotel last Saturday night, and over which he and his charming wife presided with unsurpassable hospitality and grace, I share his wish and increase the time limit from 200 years to the much greater number that measured the span of Methuselah's life. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington if this is an illustration of what is called chain service?

Mr. WHEELER. This is just plain, ordinary filibustering.

Mr. HEFLIN. This is a mutual admiration society.

Mr. COPELAND. I should say this is mere persiflage.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any way by which this could be broadcast back to West Virginia?

Mr. COPELAND. There ought to be a way to send it down there.

Mr. NEELY. The constituents of the Senators from Alabama and Kentucky ought to have the benefit of any intelligent broadcasting that is done in the Senate? [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. All the coal of West Virginia and Kentucky should be cast upon the heads of the people of West Virginia because they did not continue the Senator here. [Laughter.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I protest against throwing West Virginia coal—the best in the world—at all those who voted and helped to elect the Republican ticket in the recent campaign. It would waste too much coal. Furthermore, those who live under the next administration will, without being stoned, suffer more than they deserve.

Mr. COPELAND. As I was about to say, I suppose I have as little in common with the President elect as any man can have; but I must admit the justice and truth of the dedication of this book.

I hold in my hand a book entitled "The Law of Radio Communication." It was written by Stephen Davis, who for a long time was the Solicitor of the Department of Commerce. Prior to his connection with the Department of Commerce he was an associate justice of the Supreme Court of New Mexico, and while occupying that position he came to the attention of Mr. Hoover. Mr. Hoover was impressed by his ability, and brought him to Washington to serve as Solicitor for the Department of Commerce; and Judge Davis was delegated by Mr. Hoover to take charge of radio matters. He was the contact officer between the Secretary of Commerce and the radio division of the Department of Commerce. In this book which Judge Davis has written, the Law of Radio Communication, I find this dedication:

> To Herbert Hoover, whose wise guidance in the formative stages of radio communication contributed so greatly to the development of this new service to the American people.

I am firmly of the opinion that this radio problem should be in the hands of an executive department. If you had taken pains to read, as I have——

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a minute? Before he leaves the discussion of Mr. Hoover, will he let me read Mr. Hoover's opinion about this matter?

Mr. COPELAND. About the bill?

Mr. DILL. No; about the question of having this matter in the hands of an administrative officer.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. DILL. When Mr. Hoover appeared before the House committee on the radio bill, he said:

> I have always taken the position that unlimited authority to control the granting of radio privileges was too great a power to be placed in the hands of any one administrative officer, and I am glad to see the checks and the safeguards which are imposed upon that power under this bill.

Then, in answer to a question asked him by one of the Members, he said:

> A very large problem that is going to arise is the problem of contests between cities and between States as to the erection of broadcasting stations and between individuals, contests between different public journals, and between educational institutions and private concerns as to who shall enjoy this privilege.

That is, the privilege of radio broadcasting.

> Now, the wisest person in the world is not wise enough to determine that problem, in my view.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is that the statement of President-elect Hoover?

Mr. DILL. That is the statement of President-elect Hoover.

Mr. NEELY. Is that Mr. Hoover's answer to a question?

Mr. DILL. Yes.

Mr. NEELY. He seems to have replied more responsively to that question than he did to Senator BORAH'S questionnaire relative to the Volstead Act.

Mr. DILL. He was not in a campaign when he said this.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think Mr. Hoover was perfectly right in what he said on the occasion referred to by the Senator from Washington. In this book on the radio industry——

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is not going to read that book, is he?

Mr. COPELAND. If need be; yes. In this book on the story of the development of the radio industry we have outlined all the difficulties mentioned by Mr. Hoover, and every man here realizes that there were great difficulties; but they have been solved, and wisely solved, by the Radio Commission.

Before referring to the testimony of Mr. Caldwell I must speak of the tribute paid to him by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. The Senator from Ohio said (p. 153):

> I confess, Mr. Caldwell, you are quite convincing in your statements here.

And regardless of the criticisms which have been passed upon various members of the Radio Commission, I do not think any person informed on the subject of radio can question the fact that Mr. Caldwell, who is now retiring from the Radio Commission, brought a high degree of scientific knowledge to the solution of radio problems, applied that knowledge to the solution of those problems, and through his work the American people incurred a debt which it can never pay.

Mr. Caldwell, who has served so well and ably upon the Radio Commission since its inception, is very strong in his conviction and in his statement that there is no further use for the Radio Commission as an administrative body.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. DILL. The Senator recalls that Mr. Caldwell was opposed to the creation of the commission as an administrative body, and naturally the Senator would not expect him to be otherwise now.

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly the Senator from Washington has no bricks to throw at Mr. Caldwell for the work he did as a member of the commission.

Mr. DILL. I do not care to enter into that. Since Mr. Caldwell is leaving the commission I am not going to spend time discussing that, except to say that I think the country is very fortunate that he has left.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Washington feel that by reason of Mr. Caldwell's leaving the commission and two inexperienced men being brought upon it the commission will be improved in its methods of administration?

Mr. DILL. I do. I think anybody would be an improvement over Mr. Caldwell so far as the service of the public is concerned.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course I am in utter disagreement with the Senator from Washington, and I believe that at least the great majority of the men in the Senate and in the country take an entirely different view from him. I believe that Mr. Caldwell will be remembered as a man who has served his country well and is entitled to the respectful regard of the Members of the United States Senate.

At any rate, it is very apparent from the uncontradicted statement of Mr. Caldwell found on page 147 of the hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, United States Senate, on continuing the Federal Radio Commission, under dates of February 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, 1929, that from 80 to 85 per cent of the business of reallocating the broadcasting band is now finished. It would not be fair for the Senate to disregard or overlook the fact that a large part of the work of radio supervision is now done, and has been done, and will be done, by the Department of Commerce.

Let us see.

At the present moment the Radio Division in the Department of Commerce consists of 135 people—135 in the Department of Commerce—administering and directing a large part of the radio supervision of this country. Do not get it in your heads for a moment that the Radio Commission has been doing everything in relation to the radio business, because that is not the case. The Department of Commerce has 135 persons employed every day in this work, while the Radio Commission, in comparison, has a staff of only 82 persons.

Further, that does not tell the whole story. The staff of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce includes 65 trained radio men who are competent radio experts, while the Radio Commission itself has only four trained radio men.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, under whom do these Government employees work who are in the Department of Commerce? Are they in any way under the supervision of the Radio Commission?

Mr. COPELAND. A few of them have been loaned to the Radio Commission, but I may say that almost without exception they are under the Department of Commerce itself.

Mr. HEFLIN. And they are working independently of the commission?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. So that we have two branches or institutions of the Government that are seeking to administer this law?

Mr. COPELAND. We have; and that is one reason, I may say to the Senator from Alabama, why I oppose this bill. I think this power should be centralized in one department of the Government, in order that all the problems may be solved and good service given to the people of this country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why the Radio Commission should not be authorized to draft such experts and others as they may need who are in the Department of Commerce, and then compel the Department of Commerce to cease duplicating the work which the Radio Commission will perform?

Mr. COPELAND. That is the answer: We will have to do one or the other. Either we must take all of the work out of the Department of Commerce and put it all in the Radio Commission, or else we must stop the Radio Commission and put all their activities in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. KING. Or else permit the Department of Commerce to be the administrative branch only, and empower the commission to sit as judges to settle any controversy which arises, and limit the activities of the Radio Commission to those of an appellate court?

Mr. COPELAND. That is what is planned. Outside of the first paragraph of this bill, I think it is a splendid bill. Originally, we intended that the commission should die after a year as an administrative body and be continued merely as an appellate body. Then, last year, we extended its life for a year; and under this bill it will be extended for another year. My criticism of the bill, however, is that it is a mistake to do that. We ought to put all of the administrative work and this detail work in the Department of Commerce, and have the Radio Commission continued as the appellate body. I have not anything but praise for the rest of this bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me interrupt just there. I am on the committee, and we have been giving this a great deal of thought and a great deal of study. Let me tell the Senator from Utah what the situation would be now if we just had the commission as an appellate body—and that is what the Radio Corporation of America wants; they are opposed to the present commission, so do not make any mistake about that; they are opposed to it because of the fact that the Radio Corporation of America has not been able to come in through the Radio Commission and grab up all of the channels that there are in the United States. They have been rather frank in making their statements. They would like to do away with the commission entirely and have no regulation of radio, as their counsel says. They would like to be in the same identical position the railroads were in before we had the Interstate Commerce Commission, and then, they said, "After we have got it all established, you can come in and regulate it." In other words, after they have grabbed up everything there is to be grabbed up in the United States, then they are perfectly willing that we should have a commission to come in similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission and regulate them, after they have everything they want.

I have not agreed with everything the commission has done, but they have done remarkably good work, and they have tried to prevent one concern getting charge of all the channels throughout the world. That is the fight that is being waged at the present time, as to whether or not one concern is going to be able to get everything, and they feel that if we do away with the commission they can perhaps go up to some clerk, or somebody else up there in the Department of Commerce and get much more than they could have gotten if they had not had a commission.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator, with the permission of the Senator from New York, that notwithstanding the alleged inefficiency of the Radio Commission—and as to that I have some views—I think it has functioned better than the Department of Commerce has functioned, and I would prefer to trust the Radio Commission, notwithstanding these charges which have been made, than to trust the Department of Commerce in this matter, at least for the present.

Mr. WATSON. That is the only question.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the only question, and I think that was the view of practically all the members of the committee.

Mr. KING. I think if you would abridge the work of the Department of Commerce and compel the discharge of one-half or more of the employees you would be serving a very useful purpose.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit, is there any conflict now between what the two instrumentalities consider as their function and province in the matter?

Mr. WATSON. No; there is not, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. There is not?

Mr. WATSON. There is perfect coordination. The Department of Commerce has a radio bureau and they have a number of experts; they make investigations largely of all radio communications from ship to shore and shore to ship. They go into the details of radio transmission and report back to the commission, so that there is perfect coordination and always a mutual understanding.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then this part of the service that is in the Department of Commerce is not doing something independently of and in conflict with the commission at any time?

Mr. WATSON. It is not.

Mr. HEFLIN. The commission is the head of the service?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. And if anybody has any complaint to make, he makes it to the commission?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. And this instrumentality in the Department fo Commerce can not do something the commission does not want to have done?

Mr. WATSON. They never attempt to do it, because they report to the commission; that is to say, if somebody is violating the provisions of a license, and they make an investigation and find it out, they report to the commission, and the commission alone has authority to discipline that indivdual. Likewise, the Navy has radio, and the Army has radio, and they all coordinate. There is no conflict of any serious character. I will say that much, though I did not intend to say another word about it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I could not let the statement of the Senator from Montana pass unchallenged. I know the men in my city of New York who are connected with the Radio Corporation of America. They have not done me the honor to explain in detail their plans and ideas, but anybody who can read the English language and read the hearings held by the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body will find full answers given by Colonel Davis to every question asked by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. And it is not fair for him to make the statement that he has made about the desire of the Radio Corporation of America to go to a clerk in the Department of Commerce and to foist upon the people of the United States any scheme which that corporation may have in the way of corralling all the wave lengths, and to have all the radio privileges of the country. Now I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say that you do know, if you have read the testimony given by Mr. Davis both in the House committee and in the Senate committee, that he did make the statement, in substance, as I recall it, that they felt that they should have gone ahead and not had a commission to carry on the work which this commission has been carrying on; and he did make the statement, just as I said a moment ago, that he felt that it would have been better if they had left it as the railroads were left, unhampered by any commission, as he put it. Of course, he did not say, "I would like to be able to go up here to this Department of Commerce and be able to grab off all these things," of course not, but I am saying that from his testimony before the House committee, and from the testimony that was taken before the Senate committee, one could not come to any other conclusion except that they felt that, because of the fact, as they said, that they thought they had developed the radio more than anybody else, they ought to be able to come in and get more of the channels and the wave lengths than they had obtained.

Mr. DILL. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. DILL. May I add, the Radio Corporation and its representatives, and Mr. Caldwell, are the only people who appeared before either the House or the Senate committees who wanted the original powers of the commission discontinued. The Radio Protective Association and the various men interested in radio throughout the country, all of them, both in the House and the Senate hearings, wanted the commission continued because they wanted it to complete the work it was originally intended to do.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Montana said in the hearings, just as he has made the charge here:

> Let me ask you this: Is it not a fact that your chief opposition to the Radio Commission is because of the fact that they did grant some licenses to a concern which you felt ought to be granted to you? Is not that true?

That was what was hurled at Colonel Davis, the attorney of the Radio Corporation, and hurled at me to-night.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not hurling at the Senator; I am just telling him what took place in the committee. Of course, the Senator from New York, although he is not a member of the committee, can tell the Senate much better what went on before the committee than the members of the committee itself.

Mr. COPELAND. I would like to ask the Senator from Montana did anything go on in the committee that is not in this record?

Mr. WHEELER. No; nothing went on that is not in that record; but the Senator has not the House committee record there, has he?

Mr. COPELAND. No; I have the Senate committee record.

Mr. WHEELER. Why does not the Senator get the House committee record, too?

Mr. COPELAND. Before the debate is over, I will have printed in the RECORD of the Senate proceedings the hearings before the House committee.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator may think he will, but he will not be able to get it inserted unless he reads it in.

Mr. COPELAND. That is fair enough. Of course, I will have time. I have enough to read before 11; but I can take that up the next time we debate this measure.

Mr. WHEELER. Why does not the Senator say, why does he not be frank with the Senate and say, "I am not trying to enlighten the Senate as to anything about this, but what I am just trying to do is to filibuster so we can not have this Radio Commission continued"? Why is he not frank with the Senate?

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator from Montana think that it is proper to impute motives of that sort to another Senator?

Mr. WHEELER. I am not imputing anything to the Senator. I am simply saying that from the Senator's attitude here I say to him that he ought to be frank with us and simply say to us that he is filibustering, because when he says that he is going to read these long hearings into the RECORD, what other purpose could he have excepting that he would be filibustering against the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, we have been in this Chamber to-night for 1 hour and 55 minutes. I have been on my feet 32 minutes, and a large part of that time has been taken up by the Senator from Montana. If there is any filibustering going on, it is the filibuster of the Senator from Montana and his associates.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not filibustering; I am just trying to get the Senator to tell us something. He has repeatedly said that he was going to tell us something and enlighten us. What I want him to do is to go ahead and really enlighten us.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, what answer did the witness ever really make to that question that was "hurled" at him by the Senator from Montana? [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Alabama. With his assistance I can read what this witness said. I will first repeat what the Senator from Montana hurled at him.

Mr. WHEELER. Did the Senator see me hurl it at him?

Mr. COPELAND. I have seen what the Senator has hurled around the Chamber to-night. I assume he did not do it in any more respectful manner to the witness in his committee than the manner in which he has done it to his colleague.

Mr. WHEELER. The trouble with the Senator is that he was not before the committee; he did not hear the questions asked or how they were asked, and yet he tries to give the impression to the Members of the Senate that we took this poor, unfortunate lawyer for the Radio Corporation and hurled questions at him and treated him very badly before the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. That able, distinguished lawyer who was down here was perfectly able to take care of himself before that committee, and he was not abused.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, in order that I may salve the injured feelings of the Senator from Montana——

Mr. WHEELER. It is not necessary to salve my feelings at all. I do not need any salve from the Senator. If I needed any salve I might come to him, but I do not need that kind of salve. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. Then, Mr. President, in honeyed terms, and in sweetness of spirit, the Senator from Montana said:

> Let me ask you this: Is it not a fact that your chief opposition to the Radio Commission is because of the fact that they did grant some licenses to a concern which you felt ought to be granted to you? Is not that true?

The answer then was:

> On my soul, Senator, that is not true. The question of the difficulty of getting action on the many things which from time to time we have constantly had to take up with the commission.

Then in sweeter phrase the Senator from Montana said:

> Well, you feel that you would get much better treatment when it is over in the Department of Commerce, is not that true?
>
> No, pardon me; I did not put the emphasis in the right place.
>
> Well, you feel that you would get much better treatment when it is over in the Department of Commerce; isn't that true?

Mr. Davis said "Faster action."

Mr. HEFLIN. What?

Mr. COPELAND. Faster action, quicker action.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. COPELAND. With pleasure.

Mr. DILL. That is exactly what the Radio Corporation wants; it wants faster action, so that there will not be a chance to distribute these wave lengths, and have other people's rights considered. They want the Department of Commerce to act faster.

Mr. COPELAND. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. DILL. Because Mr. Davis said so.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, I see. Well, now, let us see what he did say.

Mr. DILL. I only heard what the Senator read from his statement.

Mr. COPELAND. I will read some more. To resume and to repeat, the following occurred:

> And now with respect to the distinction between administrative and judicial action. The rule of precedure laid down by the law is that every action shall be taken according to public convenience, interest, and necessity. Some one might say that that is a judicial function. Indeed, as I answered yesterday to some Senator—indeed yes, but every administrative function involves in some measure the application of a judicial point of view. Whether it is to be done or not, how it is to be done, and so forth, all in some measure involve judicial action. But we have had hearings, we have discussed at great length from time to time, and the commission, in my mind, has done its level best, and it has done its diligent best to expedite matters. But its inability despite its diligence, to expedite matters has handicapped America in this art and is impairing America's position throughout the world in this art.

Mr. President, the question before us is, after all, not a question of whether Colonel Davis and the Radio Corporation of America have unworthy thoughts and ambitions. The question is what is best for the country to do with the further administration of the radio problem. Upon this matter I wish to have read the testimony of Mr. Caldwell, who appeared before the committee, and I will ask the clerk if he will kindly turn to page 144 of the hearings and read beginning about the middle of the page where the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. SACKETT] asked a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. Reading from hearings before the Committee on Interstate Commerce on Senate bill 4937, at page 144:

> Senator SACKETT. I simply want your views upon the question that the committee has before it of the extension of this act for a further term of the commission, whether you are in favor of that, or whether it would be better for the industry to turn it over, as the law now provides, to the Department of Commerce. I want you to give your views and reasons, leaving it to you to make such a statement as you see fit.
>
> Senator WHEELER. I think you ought to ask him that question not only with respect to the industry, but as to the general public.
>
> Senator SACKETT. Well, I mean to cover the whole ground, Senator. I do not mean to limit it at all. I did not want to examine him; I wanted him to make a statement giving us the benefit of his views.
>
> Commissioner CALDWELL. Well, Senator, to give you a conscientious answer to that question requires me to disagree with some of my very good friends—the author of this bill, Senator WATSON, and my associates on the commission.
>
> Senator FESS. There is no violence in that. Go ahead. We want to hear your views.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Why, yes; we disagree here all the time.
> Senator FESS. Yes; constantly.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Go right to it.
> Senator GOFF. Disagreement is the spur to progress.
>
> Commissioner CALDWELL. To answer your question directly, I feel that the bill should not be passed, and that radio administration should go back to the Department of Commerce. My reasons for this view are several. First, as you know, the administration of radio is a highly technical function, and it should be in the hands of competent experts. Our experience on the commission has shown that only men who understand the problem thoroughly themselves will find within themselves the courage and the determination to take some of the difficult steps that are necessary in the public interest.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, any Senator must see that that is a fact.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. EDWARDS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, from past experiences I am satisfied that we might just as well stop now, and I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow, pursuant to the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 20, 1929, at 12 o'clock meridian.

TUESDAY, February 19, 1929

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God be merciful unto us and bless us and cause His face to shine upon us, that Thy way may be known upon the earth, Thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee. O let the nations be glad and sing for joy, for Thou shalt judge the people righteously and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise Thee, O God; let all the people praise Thee; then shall the earth yield her increase and God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us and all the ends of the earth shall fear Him. Amen.

PRESENTATION OF STATUES OF HENRY CLAY AND DR. EPHRAIM M'DOWELL

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, on the 3d of March next Representatives of the State of Kentucky will unveil the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell in the Hall of Fame. I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 58

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statues of Henry Clay and Dr. Ephraim McDowell, by Charles H. Niehaus, presented by the State of Kentucky (said statues being donated to the State of Kentucky by Isaac W. Bernheim), to be placed in Statuary Hall, are accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of these statues of two of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for their distinguished services to the country.

2. That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Kentucky.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the customary resolution that is passed whenever such statues are put in Statuary Hall?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand, there are two statues from each State?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And there is none from the State of Kentucky now?

Mr. KINCHELOE. None except the two that were put in the Hall yesterday and are to be unveiled on the 3d of March.

Mr. TILSON. Has the gentleman examined the precedents to know that this resolution is in the usual form?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; I will say that I followed the resolution adopted in the case of the statue of Andrew Jackson, which resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman followed Andrew Jackson, it is all right.

Mr. KINCHELOE. That is mighty good authority to follow.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRACTICE OF THE HEALING ART IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I present, for printing under the rule, conference report on the bill (S. 3936) entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art and to protect the public health in the District of Columbia."

REPEAL OF THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer a petition from the Senate of the State of Massachusetts, which I desire to have read into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent for the reading of a resolution of the Massachusetts Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS. Reserving the right to object, what does the resolution deal with? What is the subject?

Mr. TINKHAM. It is a resolution asking for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. EDWARDS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BUILDING FOR THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 213) to provide for extending the time in which the United States Supreme Court Building Commission shall report to Congress and consider the same.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the submission to the Congress of preliminary plans and estimates of costs for the construction of a building for the Supreme Court of the United States," approved December 21, 1928, is amended by striking out "March 1, 1929," and inserting in lieu thereof "the first day of the first regular session of the Seventy-first Congress."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT]?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ELLIOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

PAVING GOVERNMENT ROAD, ROSSVILLE, GA.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, by authority of the conferees I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3881) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park, and I move that the report of the conferees be disagreed to and that the House recede from its amendments Nos. 1 and 2, and insist upon amendment No. 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN] calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3881) to provide for the paving of the Government road, known as the Dry Valley Road, commencing where said road leaves the La Fayette Road, in the city of Rossville, Ga., and extending to Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park, constituting an approach road to said park, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, and 3, and agree to the same.

W. FRANK JAMES,
J. MAYHEW WAINWRIGHT,
JOHN J. McSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

FRANK L. GREENE,
W. H. McMASTER,
SMITH W. BROOKHART,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
LAWRENCE D. TYSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The amendments of the House were to change the figures in the bill as to the amount to be provided for the construction of the Dry Valley Road. After full and careful consideration it was determined the Senate figures should be carried in the authorization, and it was so agreed.

W. FRANK JAMES,
J. MAYHEW WAINWRIGHT,
JOHN J. McSWAIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, the understanding is that the conference report is to be disagreed to. Then the report having been disagreed to, the House is to instruct its conferees to recede as to House amendments Nos. 1 and 2, and insist upon amendment No. 3. The conferees misunderstood their instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, under the circumstances, the conference report having been presented, the procedure should be to vote down the conference report.

The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was rejected.

Mr. McSWAIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its amendments Nos. 1 and 2 and insist upon its amendment No. 3.

The motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, and ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report on the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 20 and 40.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendment numbered 39.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

REED SMOOT,
HENRY W. KEYES,
WM. J. HARRIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15089) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1930, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and embodied in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

On No. 20: Includes the position of Superintendent of the Five Civilized Tribes within the competitive classified civil service, as proposed by the House.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

On No. 40: Omits the specific reference to continuance of construction of the Transmountain Road in Glacier National Park, proposed by the Senate, in the paragraph appropriating for construction of roads and trails in national parks and mountains.

DISAGREEMENT

The committee conferees have not agreed to the following Senate amendment:

On No. 39: With reference to condemnation of privately owned lands in national parks.

LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, the statement which has been read makes it clear what the two amendments are and what the conference report agreed upon accomplishes. Unless there is some request for time I will ask for a vote on the report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment 39: Page 10, line 3, after the word "purchase," strike out the following language: "(39) or by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888 (U. S. C. 1302, sec. 257), whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior acquisition by condemnation proceedings is necessary or advantageous to the Government."

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRAMTON) there were 110 ayes and 0 noes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that no quorum is present because I desire a roll call on this because of the assurance that I gave the Senate conferees.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is this the amendment that we had the discussion upon on the floor the other day about the condemnation of private lands in public parks?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is the item. I have assured the Senate conferees that I would bring it back and get a roll call as an expression from the House.

Mr. EDWARDS. Does this include church property?

Mr. CRAMTON. It includes all lands privately owned in national parks. Of course, it will be three or four years before it is all consummated.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Why did not the gentleman take this course in regard to the $24,000,000 appropriation for prohibition?

Mr. CRAMTON. I suggested a way by which the gentleman could get it, but he did not want to do it that way.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will yield further, as I remember the debate on the floor, the Government already has the right to acquire land by private negotiation.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Government has the right, wherever authority is given to acquire land, to resort to condemnation if it is more advantageous to the Government.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. The gentleman says that he promised the Senate to have a roll call. The Speaker has announced the vote as unanimous—110 in favor.

Mr. CRAMTON. Here is the situation: This is one of the great appropriation bills that ought to be law as soon as possible, and everything is in agreement except this one item. In the Senate there is quite an opposition to the House position. We felt that an expression through a roll call would be helpful to satisfy the Senate as to the attitude of the House.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. There is no exception with reference to church land?

Mr. CRAMTON. No; the House voted that down.

Mr. BANKHEAD. One more question: Is the gentleman going to give the House an opportunity to express its position on the $24,000,000 appropriation for the enforcement of prohibition?

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will recall that I advised gentlemen how to get that vote, but they did not see fit for some reason to follow my advice.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman said that this was one of the great appropriation bills that ought to be gotten through with as soon as possible, and I did not know but the gentleman might feel the same anxiety with reference to the other bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I have that anxiety. I feel that I must keep my agreement in conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects to the vote and makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair has counted. There is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan to further insist on the disagreement of the House to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 304, nays 28, not voting, 95, as follows:

[Roll No. 28]

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS—PERMISSION TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MORIN. Mr. Speaker, beginning on Thursday next, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs of the House be permitted to sit during sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that, beginning next Thursday and until the end of the session, the Committee on Military Affairs may have the privilege of sitting during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUDGE FRANCIS A. WINSLOW

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 425, providing for an investigation of Francis J. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 802) providing for an investigation of Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York

Whereas certain statements against Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York, have been transmitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives to the Judiciary Committee: Therefore be it

Resolved, That LEONIDAS C. DYER, CHARLES A. CHRISTOPHERSON, ANDREW J. HICKEY, GEORGE R. STOBBS, HATTON W. SUMNERS, ANDREW J. MONTAGUE, and FRED H. DOMINICK, being a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to inquire into the official conduct of Francis A. Winslow, United States district judge for the southern district of New York, and to report to the House whether in their opinion the said Francis A. Winslow has been guilty of any acts which in contemplation of the Constitution are high crimes or misdemeanors requiring the interposition of the constitutional powers of the House; and that the said special committee have power to hold meetings in the city of Washington, D. C., and elsewhere, and to send for persons and papers, to administer the customary oaths to witnesses, all process to be signed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives under its seal and be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or his special messenger; to sit during the sessions of the House until adjournment sine die of the Seventieth Congress and thereafter until said inquiry is completed, and report to the Seventy-first Congress.

SEC. 2. That said special committee be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ such stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as they may deem necessary, and all expenses incurred by said special committee, including the expenses of such committee when sitting in or outside the District of Columbia, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman of said committee: Provided, however, That the total expenditures authorized by this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this resolution which is presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] in fact sets up a special investigating committee for the purpose of investigating a Federal judge. According to the rules of the House, and it has been decided a great many times, a resolution setting up a special investigating committee must come from the Committee on Rules, because it proposes a change in the rules of the House. I have no desire whatever to block an investigation of a Federal judge in the city of New York, if the preliminary investigation made by the Committee on the Judiciary satisfies that committee that it ought to be done, but as a matter of proceeding in the House and as a matter of precedent it does not seem to me that we ought to go further in setting up these special investigating committees by individual committees of the House every time any one of them has a proposition before it, which it thinks should be investigated. I know of several other committees that have similar propositions, and they think they should have the right to set up these investigating committees. If the House feels that they should have that right, then we should give the right to all of them. Otherwise, I do not think that we should begin adopting resolutions such as the gentleman has presented at this time.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. Does not the gentleman think there is a distinction when it comes to resolutions of this character, because of the function the House performs under the Constitution in respect to the impeachment of a Federal judge? It seems to me it rests upon a different foundation.

Mr. SNELL. If there were real impeachment charges, then it would go direct to the committee, and no one else would have anything to do with it, but all this resolution does is it set up a special investigating committee, and it names those who are to compose that committee. The Committee on the Judiciary has nothing more to do with it than I have after this committee is set up. This special committee does not report to the Committee on the Judiciary; it reports direct to the House as any other special investigation committee. If direct impeachment charges were made, of course, it would go direct to the Judiciary Committee, and that would be all there was to it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] first by saying that this will not set up a special investigating committee. This resolution is exactly the same as was passed by this House under exactly similar circumstances in the English case, except that probably inadvertently in the copying of it a few words were omitted. On the strength of that resolution the committee in the English case charged with the duty of investigating was able to subpœna witnesses and proceed in a regular and orderly way to ascertain whether or not the charges that had been made on the floor of the House were well founded.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Not until I am through. In the English case exactly the same procedure was followed. The House referred the resolutions to the Committee on the Judiciary. They made a preliminary examination, which was a preliminary step in the procedure. That committee heard any witnesses that were willing to appear before the committee. They had no power to compel anyone to appear before the committee. We have not the right, unless the House gives it to us, to subpœna witnesses and call on them to testify under oath. That authority being given, and the committee, recognizing that it was proceeding under the Congress and that the Congress would die on the 4th of March succeeding, took charge and this investigation was started but, of course, would die with the Congress. A resolution exactly the same as this was adopted by the House for two purposes, first, to give the committee power to make an investigation, and, second, to give the committee all the necessary machinery and prolong its life beyond the period of its extinction through the adjournment of the Congress.

Now, then, in addition to that the committee was instructed to report back to the House. That meant through the regular channels, which would be by the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary reporting to that body, and it to the House. This subcommittee was not a special investigating committee. Now, I desire to say to the gentleman that it would appear to me and the other members of the committee with whom I have consulted that those words in the fourth line were, perhaps, unintentionally omitted. If you insert after the word "to," page 2, "report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House," that would make it completely subordinate by reporting back to the Committee on the Judiciary. Line 16, add the same words—to report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the Seventy-first Congress.

Now, I want to say on the general principle that if this were the rule of the House then these resolutions ought not to have been referred to us. They ought to have been referred in the first instance to the Committee on Rules. I want to say to my friends of the House and everybody that such a procedure as this will be marked with regret by those who assent to it making it the practice of the House. Whenever a man on the floor of the House presents such statements as cloud the reputation and standing of a judge of the district court of the United States he puts against that man what is equivalent to impeachment. I care not by what name you call it, impeachment or charges, it is an impeachment of the integrity and mars the usefulness of the judge himself. The matter ought to be proceeded with. It will be a sad day when these matters have first to go to the Committee on Rules where it would be said by the public it was only a subterfuge to delay a procedure which was started by charges made on the floor of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. In the resolution for the investigation of Judge English were the members of the committee named?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I understand this committee is made up of the ranking members on each side of the table?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the understanding.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That was not the procedure in reference to the English committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was true with the exception of Mr. DYER who because he was engaged in another committee was not put upon the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There were some other men on the English committee who were not three of the highest ranking Members.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can not recall any. Mr. WELLER was one. This was a matter referring to the investigation and it was suggested that another oustanding member of the minority of the committee, Mr. DOMINICK, should be placed on the committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Another question. The gentleman understands I am not opposed to the investigation, but I prefer to have direct impeachment, but is it not true the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] some years ago introduced a resolution referring to the southern district of New York, and that resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules. Did the gentleman from Pennsylvania protest against that procedure?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no knowledge whatever about it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. There was no such resolution. It is different entirely.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman partly misunderstood my position. I have no objection to the Judiciary Committee having this investigation.

The only question that I am raising here is that this special investigating committee—I believe that is all you are asking for——

Mr. GRAHAM. With the amendment——

Mr. SNELL. With the amendment—is simply a special investigating committee that should be brought about in the regular way in accordance with the rules of the House, which provide for the introduction of a resolution setting up those facts and having it referred to the Committee on Rules. I can assure the gentleman now that if the members of the Judiciary Committee came before the Rules Committee and would say, "We have made a preliminary investigation and are satisfied we should go on with it," you would have no trouble in getting the rule. The only thing I object to at this time is the method of procedure. I know it is wrong and not in accordance with the rules of the House, and it is my business as far as possible to protect them.

Mr. GRAHAM. Is it not a fact that at least three, and I think four, matters of investigation came to our committee without going to the Rules Committee and were acted upon by our committee to the final determination of the whole question?

Mr. SNELL. I do not know that that happened. If it did, it was contrary to the rules of the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did the gentleman protest against that?

Mr. SNELL. I did if I knew it.

Mr. GRAHAM. I say this does not establish a precedent for any other committee. It is connected with the subject of impeachment. This, under the Constitution, stands upon a different basis; and as the Committee on the Judiciary is the proper committee to be charged with the investigation of these matters, this ought to go to them. The delay in this matter is doing injury to the administration of justice, and possibly preventing the examination which would disclose the truth and tell us whether or not action should be had in this case.

Mr. SNELL. I might be misunderstood if I objected, from the fact that the man comes from my State, and some people might think I was opposed to an investigation, although I never met the man. I do not object to this, but hereafter I shall object to such a resolution, no matter where it comes from, and I want the House to know it.

Mr. SCHAFER. Reserving the right to object, if this resolution is referred to the Rules Committee, would we be assured that there would not be a pocketing of the rule as in the case of the retirement bill?

Mr. SNELL. That would depend somewhat upon the conditions surrounding it. The chairman of the Rules Committee is always willing to meet the obligations as they come.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the record in any recent cases of this kind show whether this committee has taken up a preliminary investigation without referring it to the committee?

Mr. GRAHAM. No. In one case the communication came to the Speaker of the House, and the Speaker referred it to the Judiciary Committee. We investigated that case thoroughly, and laid the impeachment charges on the table because they were not sustained.

Mr. CELLER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—and I shall not object—may I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary this question: Does the chairman of that committee believe that Congress is a continuing body, with the right to appoint a subcommittee of this sort, to subpœna witnesses and conduct examinations after March 4?

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly. If this joint resolution, which is the action of both Houses, is passed, then this committee will retain its powers, notwithstanding the adjournment of Congress.

Mr. CELLER. Does this resolution have to meet with the assent of the Senate?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. It must have the consent of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer two amendments. On page 2, line 4, speaking of the subcommittee and its report, after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the Committee of the Judiciary of."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 4, after the word "to," where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the Committee of the Judiciary of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM. And on line 17, after the words "report to," insert "the Committee on the Judiciary of."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOMINICK. You ought to add the words "of the House," so that it would read "the Committee on the Judiciary of the House."

Mr. GRAHAM. We have done that.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GRAHAM. There is no right to object now.

Mr. WINGO. I want to get some information. Does the gentleman's amendment provide for a report to a committee of Congress, and not to Congress itself?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. The other resolution contained exactly the same language which was adopted by the House. The report came back to the Judiciary Committee, and from the Judiciary Committee it was reported to the House, and we got authority for impeachment.

Mr. WINGO. I understood the resolution as it was read provided for a certain investigation after the adjournment of Congress?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. My thought was that the subcommittee of this House should report to the House, and the Speaker would report that to the committee, and the Judiciary Committee would report back. I think it would be irregular to have a special report made to the committee and not to the House.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not a special committee. I have cured that beyond question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 17, after the word "to" where it occurs the second time, insert the words "the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of."

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the text be read now as it will be when the amendment is adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

To sit during the sessions of the House until adjournment sine die of the Seventieth Congress, and thereafter until said inquiry is completed, and report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of the Seventy-first Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up the House Resolution 321.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 321

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 15430, a bill continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the bill, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the resolution just reported makes in order the consideration of House bill 15430, introduced by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE], chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I shall not attempt to enter into a detailed discussion of the provisions of the bill at this time. The main purpose of the bill is to extend for another year the life of the Federal Radio Commission. The radio act became a law in 1927. A Radio Commission was established, to which was given original authority in all matters relating to the radio, to the licensing of stations and to all of the many other complicated matters that have come up out of the marvelous development of the radio in the last few years. The life of the commission in the original act was for one year, during which time it should exercise original jurisdiction and power in these matters. A year ago the work of the commission not having been completed, Congress passed an act extending its life for another year. That act will expire on the 23d of this month, and unless this bill is enacted into law before that time, this commission will lapse so far as the original jurisdiction of the commission is concerned. There seems to be a general opinion among those who have investigated the radio situation that this commission has rendered very fine service. It had before it problems that were impossible to handle in a manner satisfactory to everybody. The work of the commission, of course, in many instances, has been criticized, but it seems to be the consensus of opinion generally that taken as a whole the commission has dealt in a reasonably satisfactory manner with the great problems that have come before it.

Another feature of the bill is the fact that the commission is authorized to employ counsel to represent the commission in matters presented to the courts. A salary of $10,000 per annum is provided for the counsel so appointed, with two assistants at $7,500 each. This has been made necessary by the very important matters of litigation that the commission has to handle. Some of the ablest lawyers in the country appear in the courts on the other side, and the committee reporting this bill has thought it proper that provision be made so that the commission might have adequate counsel.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. Would it not be quite as essential to hire eminent counsel to balk the efforts of those who are fighting this bill, whether you pass this bill or whether you do not pass the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Oh, yes; it is necessary to have counsel.

Mr. CELLER. So that would not appear to be a cogent argument for the continuation of the commission, would it?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Well, that provision is included in this bill and, of course, it is a new matter. I was simply explaining the provisions of the bill to the House. When the bill comes up, as it will presently, for consideration by the committee, the members of the committee who have had charge of this legislation, who understand it, and who can discuss all the features of the radio problems from a technical standpoint will explain those matters.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have a telegram from Mr. A. M. Kelly, chairman of the National Food Products Protective Committee of New York City, with reference to a very important phase of radio advertising. He has asked that I bring this to the attention of the House, and I therefore ask that the telegram be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the telegram.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 18, 1929.

Hon. EUGENE BLACK,

House Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to bill to extend the administrative powers of the Radio Commission, to be submitted to the House to-morrow, we earnestly request that you direct attention on the floor to conscienceless efforts now being made through radio broadcasting to create a vast child market for cigarettes among 20,000,000 adolescents in United States. Both in interest of public health as well as of honest business, we join in protest made by United Restaurant Owners Association against such flagrant misuse of the air by stations licensed by Federal Radio Commission as operating in the public interest. The Journal of the American Medical Association, in an editorial published December 8, denounced such advertising as essentially vicious. The National Child Welfare Association, which is trying to stem the tide of cigarette smoking among boys and girls, deplores this scheming propaganda. Such national religious bodies as the boards of education of Methodist Episcopal, Presbyterian, Congregational, and Reformed Churches of United States are supporting in public statements as well as letters to the Federal Radio Commission protests lodged against such vicious broadcasting. The National Congress of Parents and Teachers, Boy Rangers of America, American Physical Association, and other organizations have similar protests. The national food-products protective committee, which represents industries employing over 5,000,000 individuals, with annual sales of nearly $5,000,000,000, is naturally concerned over attempts made to encourage cigarette smoking as substitute for wholesome foods. Nevertheless this appeal is addressed to you upon public grounds. Please note that a special meeting has been called for March by the International Advertising Association, formerly the Association of Advertising Clubs of the the World, to take action on current cigarette-advertising broadcasting; also that responsible cigarette manufacturers have definitely dissociated themselves from the broadcasting campaign now being conducted by the American Tobacco Co., and that leading advertising publications have denounced the campaign as a blow to honest advertising. George W. Hill, president of the American Tobacco Co., in letter widely published in the newspapers, makes this specific statement: "I would be shocked, as anybody else, if a tobacco company should undertake to appeal to adolescents." While he thus admits the great menace to public health involved in any cigarette appeal to the youth of the country, the American Tobacco Co. every Saturday night puts a great jazz dance orchestra on the air over 38 broadcasting stations from coast to coast. It broadcasts weekly alleged statements by motion-picture actresses, athletic coaches, and others to incite adolescents to smoke more cigarettes. It flaunts on the billboards posters picturing a 16-year-old girl with the caption, "She's a lucky girl," and it urges cigarettes for reducing, a diet fad which a recent editorial in the Journal of the American Medical Association says has increased tuberculosis rates among the young women of the country. The position taken by the Federal Radio Commission is that this matter is not within the province of commission but one for congressional consideration. In view of the fact that in England a similar advertising campaign undertaken for Kensitas cigarettes was withdrawn almost immediately, it is inconceivable that no action will be taken by the present Congress to protect the interests of 10,000,000 homes in the United States against this clear invasion of public health.

A. M. KELLY,
Chairman National Food Products Protective Committee,
468 Fourth Avenue, New York City.
JOSEPH BELL COTTON,
Of Counsel for the Committee.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I would be very reluctant to favor any sort of a law that would require a censorship of advertising, except, of course, as to indecent or obscene matter, but I do think some of the advertising put out by one of the cigarette companies is so unethical that it demands condemnation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. A few weeks ago Congress extended the thanks of this body to the commander of the U. S. S. America and the crew for their very brave and splendid life-saving exploits in saving the crew of the ship Florida. The ink had hardly dried on that resolution before Captain Fried, the commanding officer, and one or two of the other officers of the ship had loaned their names to a cigarette firm for advertising purposes, and these advertisements have appeared in many newspapers in the United States. I would like to have read in my time one of the advertisements, in order to show what capitalization is made of the publicity that some receive. I shall delete the name of the cigarette advertised, as perhaps it would not be proper to give it further advertising in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the advertisement.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPT. GEORGE FRIED, HEROIC RESCUER, SAYS: "REACH FOR A ——— INSTEAD OF A SWEET"

An S O S from the Florida! We change our course. We on the America strain to arrive in time to rescue the men on their sinking ship, 350 miles away. Through the icy, freezing storm and high seas we plunge on—all speed ahead! Then the nighttime rescue, the searchlights, the whirling waves, the maneuvering to get near the Florida. Finally the Florida's crew coming off, one at a time, pulling themselves through the water on the line our men had thrown them.

These 32 men, dazed, many half clothed, needed reviving after their long exposure. Hot coffee, food, and ———, these gave new life to many of them, and we on board the America, crew and passengers alike, found after the strain and struggle that there was nothing quite so comforting and relaxing as the inviting toasted flavor of ———.

Playing this game with "Davy" is ever fascinating, ever thrilling. And we who follow the sea must be ever ready for adventure. Ours is an active life, demanding nerve control and physical fitness. In my health program I have found that ——— are most important not only because they provide a respite for frazzled nerves and an exhausted body but because whenever I crave anything which is overfattening I say to myself, "Reach for a ——— instead of a sweet." In the toasted flavor of ——— I get complete satisfaction. And I find that toasting, by removing the irritants, protects my throat.

GEO. FRIED,
Commander of Steamship America.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield me one more minute, and then I will conclude?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Very well; I yield the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I just want to say this one more word to express my great regret that men like Capt. George Fried, after having received the thanks of the Congress of the United States for his heroic achievements, would lend his name to advertising of this sort. Of course, it is his privilege to do it, but I am sure that many of his admirers had rather he had refrained.

I do not advocate a censorship law by the Congress of the United States, but I want to express my pride and satisfaction that men like that splendid young man whom the United States has honored so greatly, Colonel Lindbergh, has declined to lend his name to any advertisements of this kind. I hope that others will follow his example. I also venture the hope that, without any censorship on the part of the Congress, the American people will speedily condemn this unethical advertising that we see so much of these days. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is really no necessity for my making any comment whatever upon this rule. It is the ordinary rule providing for two hours of general debate upon this bill or resolution from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The nature of the bill has already been explained fully by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], and this is really legislation in the nature of emergency legislation.

We have had a great deal of controversy since the beginning of radio utilities as to the control of wave lengths and licenses and other regulations, and I must say we may as well realize now, gentlemen, that the Congress of the United States is merely standing upon the outer threshhold of that legislation which will be required, as the years come and go, because of the constant advances and improvements and changes of condition that are being made with reference to radio communication.

I know that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries has given this matter, as they always do, very careful and conscientious and thorough consideration. Without engaging in any invidious comparison, I want to say I know of no committee of the House of Representatives that brings to the examination and consideration of bills before it more thorough and exhaustive and wise examination than the committee which is so ably led by the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. [Applause.]

There is no change in the organic law at all with reference to the Radio Commission. This is merely an extension of its authority and unless this resolution is passed before the adjournment of this Congress, as has been explained to you and will be explained to you by the gentlemen who discuss it, the present authority of the Radio Commission will become functus officio and all of the real powers now held by them will revert to the Commerce Department.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. May I ask the gentleman why the time has not arrived when the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce, which is contemplated by this law, should attach, and whether the question presented by this bill is not really whether the Radio Commission should be continued permanently or not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am very sorry I can not answer that question with the degree of authority I would like, but after the compliment I have paid to the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Maine and their associates, when the bill comes up for discussion under the 5-minute rule, I am sure they can supply to the gentleman from New York the information which he seeks.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. In other words, if the gentleman will yield for just a brief observation——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. As I understand, the law contemplates that the entire administration of the regulation of radio shall rest with the Department of Commerce and that the Radio Commission shall be an advisory or appellate body of some kind.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not under existing law.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And that temporarily they have been given practically the entire administration of the law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; that is true.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And the question which I think a great many of us who are somewhat familiar with the subject would like to have answered is why it is that the Department of Commerce should not be permitted to assume the jurisdiction and the responsibility which the law contemplates.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure that matter will be very fully discussed by the gentlemen on the committee when it comes up. I know we did have some informal discussion of it when the matter was before the Rules Committee.

This is all I desire to say, Mr. Speaker. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Rules and I understand there was practically a unanimous report from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MAKING IT A FELONY FOR ALIENS TO ENTER THE UNITED STATES IN VIOLATION OF LAW

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 5094) making it a felony with penalties for certain aliens to enter the United States of America under certain conditions in violation of law, insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 5094, insist on the House amendment and agree to the conference asked for. Is there objection?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Reserving the right to object, what is the purpose of the request?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. To send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. JOHNSON of Washington, Mr. VINCENT of Michigan, Mr. SCHNEIDER, Mr. SABATH, and Mr. BOX.

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 15430) continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission, under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes, and pending that I would like to inquire as to the control of the time. The rule gives one-half of the time to those in favor of the bill and one-half to those opposed to the bill. I would like to be advised as to who will have control of the time in opposition.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the committee and opposed to the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Reserving the right to object, may I ask whether or not there is any member of the committee on this side of the aisle who is opposed to the bill?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Not as far as I know.

Mr. CELLER. I am opposed to the bill, and if it is in order I would like to have some agreement as to the time that will be given this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California can yield the time to that side.

The Chair desires to state that he overlooked the fact that the House yesterday gave permission to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS] leave to address the House for 10 minutes after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table. The Chair would be glad if the gelentleman from Maine will withhold his motion until the gentleman from Florida has addressed the House.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I will do so.

FLOOD CONTROL IN FLORIDA

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, recently our State has been honored by the President elect spending a month, enjoying our sunshine and wonderful fishing. Last Friday and Saturday he went over the Everglades to study the flood-control situation. Repeatedly the charge has been made that the Representatives from Florida, both in the Senate and the House, have done nothing to secure flood-control relief from the Government.

I have publicly thanked the Speaker from one end of the fourth district to the other for the hearty cooperation and assistance he gave Congressman DRANE and myself in this matter.

I would not take up the time of the House except for an article which appeared in the Washington Post of February 16, in which I find the following:

Now, Mr. Skipper wants Mr. Hoover to take it all over for completion at a cost of $10,700,000. Representative DRANE, the Democrat who represents the district, thought he was showing considerable initiative when he introduced a bill asking the Federal Government to pay some of the estimated remaining cost. Mr. Skipper retorted, in effect, that this was absurd, that the Republicans do not do things that way. The Republicans say they want the project taken entirely from the hands of the State authorities, these State authorities all being Democrats now suggesting that their backs are against the wall. It has been a political football too long Republicans aver. Or as one grizzled old codger at Canal Point put it poignantly: "The State authorities up at Tallahassee have almost drowned me twice. So, damn it, I voted for Hoover and I want to see what he can do." There was more than prohibition and religion in the campaign in this section of Florida.

On December 6 I introduced a flood control bill. Congressman DRANE introduced a bill, and Senators FLETCHER and TRAMMELL introduced bills. Again, on January 10 to February 6, we had hearings which I have before me, and the House Committee on Flood Control has unanimously practically agreed upon a bill providing that the Government shall pay $6,000,000 and the State pay $4,700,000. Now, we have a Republican Congress and a Republican President. Speaking for myself and, I believe, for my colleagues, if you are willing to give us that sum we have no objection. We have tried to follow the legislative procedure. We have waited until we received a favorable report from all Government engineers, and we have waited until the committee has drafted a bill. In fairness to my Republican friends and Democratic friends, I want to say that politics have not entered into this question. I want to say, in fairness to my Republican friends of this House, that on these great questions I have never found politics entering into them; it is only a matter of whether we can show that we are fairly and justly entitled to the relief sought.

I have worked in season and out of season for relief, for flood control, and I trust the national Republican committeeman was misquoted or misstated when he said that Congressman DRANE did not know anything about the situation down there. I sincerely hope that at this session of Congress, although I realize and appreciate the legislative congested condition that exists, this bill practically agreed on by both Democrats and Republicans, in the Committee on Flood Control, will become a law in order that there may be no further loss of life in that section. We have prepared this bill along the lines of the Sacramento River problem. The Sacramento River problem differed from ours in that no lives were lost there. That was all that the committee would give us, and in fairness to them and to myself, I say it was the best solution that we could secure. I feel that the State of Florida will be perfectly satisfied if we can get that bill through and prevent further loss of life among the people from different sections of the country who are moving into our wonderful State. Nearly 4,000 lives have already been lost, and now if it is made a political question it would not only be fatal but could not be defended.

I again thank the Speaker. He is thoroughly familiar with everything I have said. He remembers the conference that my friend and colleague, Mr. DRANE and myself, had with him, and he recognized my colleague out of order to bring up the bill for a special survey.

I have always said that I care not who gets the credit so long as Florida gets what she is entitled to. I again repeat my Republican colleagues have not made political questions out of the loss of human life.

If this bill does not pass during the present session, it will indeed be unfortunate, as the Florida Legislature meets next April, and as the legislature only meets every two years there may be a possible delay. I am hoping the legislature can pass such laws as will meet the requirements of the bill as finally passed and thereby save as much delay as possible. If the bill is not enacted at this session, it will practically automatically become a law at the next session, for I am satisfied it will have in the House the unanimous support of the committee and my colleague, Congressman DRANE, with whom I have cooperated. As a last request I want to urge my colleagues to support the measure and assist in giving Florida this relief to which we are entitled. I thank you. [Applause.]

FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the time provided for under the rule be equally divided between himself and the gentleman from California [Mr. FREE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15430, continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15430, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes. This bill has involved in it four simple propositions. It contemplates, in the first instance, the extension of the original authority of the Federal Radio Commission for another year. The second provision of the bill authorizes the continuation of the annual salaries of the commissioners for a period of one year. The third section of the bill extends for another year the limitation upon the life of broadcasting and other licenses which the commission is authorized to issue. The fourth section of the bill deals with the legal staff of the commission and authorizes the employment of a special counsel at a salary of $10,000 a year, and the employment of three assistants to the general counsel at salaries of $7,500 a year. Those are the four propositions involved in this legislation.

Extensive hearings were held before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. At the time the vote was had in the committee, the action of the committee was unanimous. It has since appeared that one member who was not present at the time of the vote is in opposition to the bill and will control the time and speak in opposition to the bill. So far as the chairman is advised, except for that gentleman, the determination of the committee was a unanimous one.

By act of 1927 there was set up a Federal Radio Commission upon which was conferred original jurisdiction for the period of one year from the date of the first meeting of the commission. The commission met on the 15th day of March, so that the year's time dated and ran from the 15th day of March, 1927. At the expiration of that one year, the time in which original authority was vested in the commission, it was the contemplation of the original legislation that the original authority should be transferred to and lodged in the Secretary of Commerce. The legislation became a law, and was approved by the President on February 23, 1927. The nominations of the commissioners were sent to the Senate between February 23 and the adjournment of Congress on the 4th day of March. Only two of the commissioners were confirmed by the other body. No action, or no adverse action, I am not instantly apprised which, was had on three of the other members of the commission. So that commission started its life and functions with but two of the five members having received the confirmation of the Senate of the United States. During this first year of the life of original authority of the commission, two of the commissioners resigned and one commissioner died, so that during this entire first year of original authority, there was no time during which more than two members of the commission were sitting as confirmed members, and for most of that period of one year but a single member of the commission had been confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. MORTON D. HULL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Not now. It is also a fact, because of the legislation coming so close to the end of the Congress, that there was no opportunity to make adequate appropriations for the functioning of the commission. So that during this first year the commission was confronted not only with this unconfirmed personnel but it faced also all of the difficulties which arose from the complete failure of funds for purposes of organization and purposes of study. So that whatever may be the delinquencies chargeable to the commission during that first year of life, there is a very substantial measure of excuse or extenuation for what some of us have thought to be nonaction during that time. February 23 and March 16 rolled around last year, and because of the conditions to which I have alluded, very little had been done toward the solution of the problems of radio which were pressing upon the people of the United States and those in authority. In that situation it seemed to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House, and it subsequently seemed to both branches of the legislative body, that this original authority should be further continued, and ultimately Congress did pass an act extending the original authority of the commission for one more year; that is, from March 16, 1928, to March 16, 1929.

In the legislation of last year, however, two changes were made in the law. In the first place it seemed wise to place a limitation upon the tenure of office of the commissioners. And the legislation of last year provided that the commissioners should hold office only for a term of one year; that is, until the 23d day of this present calendar month. Then in this legislation also a very great burden was placed upon the commission. Dissatisfaction had arisen because of the failure of the commission to make distribution of radio services throughout the entire United States as called for by the 1927 law.

There were charges of gross discrimination against sections of the United States, against many States of the Union, and against communities within States; and in order to meet the contention and criticism Congress enacted what was known as the Davis allocation or equalization amendment which provides for the equal allocation of radio facilities, first equally to the zone, then within zones allocations to the various States in proportion to the population of the States. That amendment required a long and painstaking study on the part of the commission. The commission, the funds having been appropriated, organized as best it could. They set up a legal department, they set up an engineering department and began to study the scientific problems involved in the amendment and worked out methods and the principle of equalization among all the zones and among the States. That work carried along until the fall of this past year and it was not until November 11 that the result of the studies and labors of the commission were ready to be made effective. On that date the reallocation plan became effective, and is responsive, the commission believes, to the purposes and intent of the so-called Davis equalization amendment. That provision has been in effect hardly three months of time. It involves, speaking generally, a readjustment of 94 per cent of the entire broadcasting structure of the United States, change of licenses, of frequencies, power, time operation, and in working out that reallocation 90 per cent of the entire broadcasting structure of the United States underwent a change. I think that it necessarily follows that the set-up is tentative in character, and there will appear in the life under that allocation opportunities for improvement in the situation. The first consideration which moved the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to recommend further extension of the original authority of the commission is our belief that this commission which worked out this reallocation plan knows the purposes and reasons for it and therefore is better qualified to deal with problems of readjustment that are inevitably involved, are better qualified to deal with those problems and perfect the system, than any new authority could be. So your committee felt that the best interest for all those interested in the question of broadcasting transmission and all the people who are interested in reception will come from continuing the life of this present commission.

Now, in the minds of the public, the radio broadcasting looms large, but in addition to the development of radio broadcasting there is a development that has gone on during recent years that raises important questions outside of broadcasting bands. A year or more ago short waves were of little concern; they were in comparatively little use. During the last two years there has come an entirely new appreciation of the importance of the short waves. The band between 6,000 kilocycles and 1,500 kilocycles is known as the commercial continental point-to-point band. Within that band, which I call for purposes of definition the continental point-to-point band, ranging between 6,000 and 1,500 kilocycles, many serious problems have arisen. There are a very limited number of these bands available for commercial point-to-point service within the United States. There are an almost unlimited number of applicants for them. The duty is upon some one to determine two things: First, to whom these channels within this continental point-to-point band shall be allocated, and second, for what purposes the short waves within this band shall be utilized.

Now, in the determination of those questions there are involved matters of public policy, and when these matters of public policy have been first determined there is involved a necessity of deciding who of the hundreds of applicants for these channels are best qualified to respond to a public benefit and public advantage in the use of these short waves.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Not now.

Now, the commission has conducted an examination, and I might add, an intensive study, of this point-to-point band, and your committee believes that the continuation of that study and that action, in response to the determination of that study, had best be left, as it is now, in this body that has given study to it for more than a year's time.

Beyond this point-to-point continental band there have come new problems in connection with short waves in international communication. Only a few short years ago international communication was carried on by the long waves and the utilization of tremendous power in the projection of these waves across continents and across oceans.

In recent months there has come a knowledge that these short waves are valuable in the extreme for international communication. There have been before this commission frequent hearings with respect to the proper disposition of these short waves in international communications. Your committee feels that this body should be permitted to continue in the study of those problems and in the working out of the proper answers to them.

There is another phase of the matter, which is of consequence, involved in the proper disposition of these short waves. There are controversies, or, if not controversies, differences as between the countries of this hemisphere. We can not confine within the continental United States either the waves within the broadcasting bands or the waves within the point-to-point continental United States band. They reach Canada and Mexico and into Cuba; and for months negotiations have been going on between the United States and Canada and Mexico and Cuba in the hope that there might be worked out an equitable arrangement for use, by these respective countries and their nationals, of these wave bands. It is vital in the interest of all that there should be a friendly settlement of conflicting claims as to the use of these waves between these countries.

Your committee reached the conclusion that it was infinitely best that the members of the Federal Radio Commission, who have been conducting these negotiations, should conclude them. These reasons actuated the committee in advocating the extension of this original authority for a year's time.

What is the alternative if you do not do it? Unless the original authority of this commission is continued for another year, that original authority will revert to the Department of Commerce. Then you must build up in the Department of Commerce a comparable organization or face a hiatus in radio control. You must build up there an engineering department, a legal department, an administrative department, and a clerical department, adequate in character and personnel, to deal with these problems. If you do that, you will have a duplication of the personnel of the Federal Radio Commission in the Department of Commerce. If you do not do that, what do you find? Why, without such an organization in the Department of Commerce, it is inevitable that there will be referred to the Federal Radio Commission, by the Secretary of Commerce or by the appeal of interested parties, every question, every application that involves a major question of policy, or that involves a controversy as to policy or as to facts.

Without such an organization in the Department of Commerce it is inevitable that every problem of consequence or of difficulty will be automatically transferred to the Federal Radio Commission or taken there by appeal, and if in the last analysis the Federal Radio Commission is to be obligated to meet the major problems involved in this great subject, if they are to have the onus, the burden of ultimate decision, it seems wise to your committee that they should go on meeting that responsibility and have the dignity of original authority in connection therewith. Now, those considerations are those which influenced the committee in reaching its conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes. I will only take time to refer to the provision authorizing an increase in the salary of counsel for the commission. I know you are all familiar with the fact that there are now pending in the courts various cases involving not alone the determination of rights between litigants but cases going to the very basis of the legislation which we enacted in 1927, and challenging in fact the authority of the Congress of the United States to deal effectively with radio transmission and radio communication within the United States and throughout the world. Opposed to the United States, opposed to the commission, and opposed to the legislation and the assertion of authority by Congress we find marshaled some of the greatest lawyers in the whole United States. In one particular case recently heard in the District of Columbia there was Mr. Hogan, of the District bar, and Charles Evans Hughes, of the New York bar, and associated with them have been attorneys of the character and of the ability of John W. Davis. Now, under the original procedure the commission paid its attorney $7,500 a year, but the Comptroller General said that was illegal and that salary was cut to $6,500. Your committee are unanimous in the view that if the integrity of our legislation is to be successfully defended and if the authority of Congress is to be maintained, we should have available to the United States the best counsel that it is possible to obtain at a reasonable salary, and we have believed that a salary of $10,000 a year was more likely to continue in the service of the Government and more likely to obtain for the United States the character of counsel deemed necessary than a salary of $6,500 a year. So we have recommended this increase in the legal force and in the salaries to be paid the legal force of the commission.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Would the gentleman suppose that $10,000 or $11,000 will get a lawyer of the caliber of John W. Davis or Charles Evans Hughes to fight for the Government?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I have no such illusion as that. I do not think any salary will get John W. Davis or Charles Evans Hughes back into the governmental service, but I do submit that there is a sufficient gap between $10,000 a year and $6,500 a year to give hope, at least, that we will secure a high grade of counsel for the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the committee, the Radio Commission was created in the Sixty-ninth Congress by an act approved February 23, 1927. The commission was to have original jurisdiction of matters concerning radio for one year. Thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce was to have such original jurisdiction and the commission was to become an appellate body to determine appeals by dissatisfied applicants and also to consider such matters concerning radio as were referred to it by the Secretary of Commerce.

At the end of one year, very little had been done by the commission. This was partly due to the fact that the commission had been very much disorganized, through death and otherwise. So, the Seventieth Congress, under an act approved March 28, 1928, the original jurisdiction of the commission was continued until February 23, 1929, and, thereafter, commissioners were to be appointed for the terms of 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 years, respectively, as provided in the radio act of 1927, thereby becoming an appellate commission.

H. R. 15430, which is now before us, has for its purpose the continuation of the original jurisdiction of the commission for another year. After two years we find radio matters in almost as much chaos as when the commission was first created, and we can not expect any change in the policies, procedure, or attitude of the commission by reason of the fact that three of the commissioners have been reappointed, two of the other commissioners having resigned. This means that the same policy and the same inefficiency and the same chaos will continue for another year if this bill is made a law.

In order that you may understand some of the reasons for the chaos which exists, let me quote from the hearings before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the House of Representatives, held during the months of January and February, 1929. On page 7 thereof, Commissioner Robinson, who is the chairman of the commission, by the way, states:

Except for isolated exceptions, the commission has no rules and regulations.

May I also say that the commission has no orderly procedure in regard to these matters, and on this proposition may I quote from page 82 of said hearings, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. Has the commission ever given consideration to proceeding in a more dignified, and a more orderly, and a more judicial manner, to permit that sort of practice to take place and take up the time of the commission in that way and expecting a single commissioner or an engineer to determine their matters for them?

Mr. ROBINSON. The subject has been mentioned, but there has been no action. They come in, the broadcasters and others, every day. Some ask to see the commission as a whole, and many, many come to a single commissioner's office, and it depends on the zone from which they are coming; but it takes a lot of time, and I receive every applicant or anyone who has business there to do with us, and in matters of detail it is usual for me, if it is an engineering matter, and when I say "engineering" I speak broadly of some radio mechanical matter, to refer them to Mr. Sutton, my technical assistant.

Mr. DAVIS. That is as to purely an engineer matter, but it just occurs to me in that connection that any matter requiring a decision worthy of action by the commission should be presented to the commission as a commission just as it would be in a court or in any other quasi-judicial function. I do not ever hear of anybody going down to the Interstate Commerce Commission and calling on a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They require them to present their problems to the commission either in oral argument or in brief, and it is no more a quasi-judicial tribunal than is this commission, and it occurs to me that some such practice ought undoubtedly to be adopted by this commission.

To further show the way the commission handles these matters, may I quote from the testimony of Commissioner Lafount:

Mr. LAFOUNT. Congressman, as I have tried to explain to you, we do not have any way or means of testing all the equipment of all of the technicians representing all of the applicants. We never question the R. C. A. or the Mackay people; we do not know whether their equipment is such as will permit them to do that with which they apply for. And we see no reason——

Mr. FREE. Well, should not you do that? Pardon me for interrupting you, but is not that one of the purposes for which this commission is organized—to investigate those very things?

Mr. LAFOUNT. No, sir (p. 960 of the hearings).

It further appears that applications, after being made, are neither granted nor denied but simply held in suspension by the commission so that the applicant has no opportunity to pursue his application, either to an appellate body or to the courts, as no final action is taken and the commission goes along in its own easy way, simply leaving these applications pending for months and, sometimes, years.

In order to show you the utter lack of knowledge of the subject by the commission itself I would like to make some quotations from the testimony of Mr. Robinson, chairman of the commission. May I say, by way of digression, that Mr. Robinson is a delightful gentlemen with pleasing manners, but that does not mean that he has familiarized himself with the subject with which he is dealing sufficiently to remain on the commission. Again, I quote his testimony:

Mr. DAVIS. Will you, as chairman of the commission, file with the committee a complete list of the reallocations as of this date, embracing whatever corrections and changes that have been made?

Mr. ROBINSON. As a member of the commission I am not familiar with those details but I will have it prepared. (Page 11 of the hearings.)

It appears that he is not even informed as to the short-wave allocations—

Mr. BRIGGS. Now, turning for a moment to the low-wave length, have all of those been allocated?

Mr. ROBINSON. You mean the short waves?

Mr. BRIGGS. The high frequency.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; not all of them.

Mr. BRIGGS. How much has the commission reserved from allocation, if it has made any reservation at all?

Mr. ROBINSON. I have it on my desk, but there are so many ramifications, figures, and details in all of this radio subject that I do not recall what it is.

Mr. BRIGGS. My thought was not exactness; my thought was whether you could make an estimate of a third or a half, or whatever it might be. If you do not know, I shall not press it.

Mr. ROBINSON. It can readily be given to you by Commander Craven, or, perhaps, one of the other commissioners might have it in mind (p. 40 of the hearings).

Nor does he know the broadcasting stations which are on chain hook ups.

Mr. REID. Now will you tell the committee whether or not the stations in Chicago that have a clear channel are a part of any chain? Do you know?

Mr. ROBINSON. Some of them I have no doubt are, but I do not know the details.

Mr. REID. All right. Now, how many clear channels have we?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think there are four assigned——

Mr. REID. I mean in the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Forty.

Mr. REID. Now, of those is it not a fact there are 25 or 30 given over to the National Broadcasting Co.'s stations for chain broadcasting?

Mr. ROBINSON. I never have analyzed the allocation as to how many of those 40 are chain hook-ups (p. 42 of the hearings).

Nor does he know how many broadcasting stations are operating on 10,000 watts or over.

Mr. REID. How many stations are there operating on 10,000 watts or more?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am not able to say (p. 59 of the hearings).

Nor does he know how many new stations have been licensed, in regard to the reallocation of broadcasting on November 11, 1928.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Since the order was promulgated providing for a new setup or reallocation to be effective on November 11, how many new licenses have been granted?

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, we granted a new license to every station.
Mr. LEHLBACH. I mean, how many new stations were licensed?
Mr. ROBINSON. I am not prepared to say (p. 74 of the hearings).

It would certainly seem that a commissioner, whose job it is to pass on these questions, would have at his tongue's end this fundamental information.

Probably the most glaring illustration, however, of the lack of the protection of the people's interest by the Radio Commission is shown in the recent allocation to the Universal Wireless Communication Co. of what are termed short waves for point-to-point commercial communication in continental United States. There were various applicants for all or part of the available short waves. Newspapers of the United States asked for 20 of these channels and they were allocated to them. The Radio Corporation of America, now engaged in transoceanic service, asked to utilize some of the channels now used in that service also in point-to-point communication in the United States and asked for some additional channels to be used in such continental service. The Mackay Radio and Telegraph Co. made a similar request; also the Wireless Telegraph and Communication Co. of Illinois. I also understand the International Telephone and Telegraph Co. would like to have some of these channels.

On January 17 and 18, 1928, a general hearing was held by the commission, to which all of these applicants were permitted to appear and put forth their claims and I believe all of the above-named concerns did so appear.

On September 25, 1928, a sort of hearing was granted to the Universal Wireless Communication Co. to present further evidence. The reading of these hearings, however, will disclose that very little real information developed at this hearing.

Some Members of Congress then wrote letters to the commission urging action. One of these was written on November 3 by Senator LYNN J. FRAZIER, of North Dakota, and on November 17 Commissioner Lafount replied as follows to the Senator:

MY DEAR SENATOR FRAZIER: This is to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 3d instant, requesting that serious consideration be given to the application of the Universal Wireless Communication Co. May I assure you of my keen interest in this application and my desire to give it the consideration it deserves.

I appreciate the fact that commission action seems slow. However, may I call your attention to the fact that the use of high-frequency channels or short waves must be divided between the United States, Canada, Mexico, and Cuba, for the reason that their signals are heard all over this hemisphere.

A conference will be held in Ottawa, Canada, about December 1, when representatives of the countries referred to will undertake to make a satisfactory division of these frequencies between themselves and immediately thereafter the commission will be in a position to allocate the frequencies assigned for use in the United States. Be assured that it will be my pleasure to carefully consider the application referred to at that time.

Thanking you for calling this matter to my attention, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

———— ————.

(P. 989 of the hearings.)

On November 28, Commissioner Lafount made a similar reply to a letter which had been written to him by Representative BACHMANN, of West Virginia.

On December 14, at the invitation of the Universal Wireless Communication Co., a laboratory test was held for the purpose of demonstrating the facilities of this concern. They had claimed to the commission that they could send five signals over a channel with what is commonly known in radio as a one-hundredth of 1 per cent separation. Commander Craven, who had been loaned to the Radio Commission by the Navy to assist them in determining the technical questions referred to the commission, requested the Naval Research Laboratory and the Bureau of Standards to check up on these signals. I may say that Doctor Dellinger, of the Bureau of Standards, has been considered the chief engineer for the Radio Commission. The demonstration was held.

Commissioner Sykes, who, together with Chairman Robinson and Commissioner Lafount, voted to allocate these 40 channels to the Universal Wireless Communication Co., which channels, by the way, have been appraised at the value of $1,000,000 each, a total of $40,000,000 for the 40 channels, stated that he voted for this grant to the Universal Wireless Communication Co. on the recommendation of Commander Craven.

I was interested in what they contended they could do, the Universal Wireless Co. I asked Commander Craven to investigate very carefully that fact and to tell me as an engineer what he thought of it. I was invited a little later to a demonstration or an experiment. I went to it. I did not know any more about it after I went, so far as I am concerned, than I did before. I saw them doing these things and saw what they were doing, but that meant very little to me as a lawyer.

After that was over I had a detailed talk with Commander Craven. I said, "Do you know just exactly how these people are doing this and what they are doing it with?"

He said, "I do."

"Well," I said, "does it work all right? Are you satisfied that it works all right?"

He said, "I am."

I said, "If you are, I am going to back your judgment on the proposition," and in the meantime we got these checks from the Navy Department, who checked it (p. 814 of the hearings).

Commissioner Lafount in his testimony before the committee stated that he voted for the allocation because they had promised they would do at least five times as efficient work with the channel as is now possible, and also because this allocation was recommended by Commander Craven and by Dr. A. White Taylor, a civilian employee of the Naval Research Laboratory. Mr. Lafount's testimony on the subject is as follows:

Mr. LAFOUNT. That they were able to duplicate the channels five times; that they could do at least five times as efficient work with a channel that was not possible and, as a matter of fact, being done.

Mr. FREE. Was anyone permitted of the other applicants for these channels to examine their layout?

Mr. LAFOUNT. I could not tell you that, sir.

Mr. FREE. Will you now, as a commissioner, state that they have this process that is so much better than anybody else has?

Mr. LAFOUNT. I did, this morning, Congressman, state that, of my own knowledge I do not know that, because I am not a technician or sufficient of a technician, at least, to determine that. But I say that Commander Craven thoroughly investigated it. He is a prominent radio communication expert with the United States Navy. I say to you, also, that Doctor Taylor, also of the Navy, assured me that it was technically correct and that they could do what they represented to the commission they were going to do and could do. * * * But, Congressman, the demonstrations were only laboratory tests and did not mean necessarily that it could be done in actual practice; but the experts of the Navy, who are perhaps doing more radio communication work than anyone else in the world—I do not know that, but I say "perhaps"; they are doing a lot—assured me that they could do that, that that which they did in the laboratory they said could actually be done in practice.

Mr. FREE. Now, please tell me who Mr. Taylor is. Is he an officer of the Navy?

Mr. LAFOUNT. Yes. I do not know his exact position. May I ask Mr. Caldwell or some one who knows?

Mr. CALDWELL. Doctor Taylor is a civilian expert for the Navy.

Mr. FREE. Where will I find him?

Mr. CALDWELL. At the Bellevue Laboratory, the Naval Research Laboratory at Bellevue.

Mr. FREE. Is he here in Washington?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir; Dr. A. White Taylor, and he is the president of the Institute of Radio Engineers, just elected.

Mr. FREE. Now, did he give you this information privately or to the commission in a body?

Mr. LAFOUNT. He gave it to me privately on one occasion and to the chairman and myself on another occasion (pp. 865 and 866).

Mr. FREE. May I see it, please? [After a pause.] Doctor Taylor is connected with the Navy, is he not?

Mr. LAFOUNT. He is an expert connected with the Navy, a civilian doing work for the Navy, and also for this Universal Wireless Corporation.

Mr. FREE. Oh, he is employed by the——

Mr. LAFOUNT. I think he is their——

Mr. FREE. Consulting engineer?

Mr. LAFOUNT. Consulting engineer, or one of them (pp. 957 and 958).

I believe Mr. Lafount must be mistaken when he says that Doctor Taylor made this recommendation. I understand he is a gentleman of very high standing, and I can not conceive that he would recommend this when he was in the employ of the Naval Research Laboratory and at the same time consulting engineer for the Universal Wireless Communication Co.

Commissioner Caldwell, who voted against the allocation and has since retired from the commission, testified:

I did not feel that the commission was in possession of sufficient information on which to base such award.

It is very interesting to see what Commander Craven has to say in regard to this. On page 1020 of the hearings he says:

I did not make any specific recommendation relative to the Universal.

On page 959 of the hearings he said:

I also added a verbal report to the commission that the Universal Wireless Communication Co. development was in the manufacturing-design stage.

And on page 1030 he further states:

Commander CRAVEN. Yes, sir. At the experiments they utilized various patents, perhaps, of various people; they also demonstrated that they had their own and they could overcome those. Of course, I know nothing about patents, but I believe they can overcome, in my own personal opinion, all patents involved or owned by other companies.

Mr. LARSEN. Independent of the heterodyne patents?

Commander CRAVEN. Yes, sir; I believe they can do that.

Mr. LARSEN. What about grid patents?

Commander CRAVEN. I believe they can do that; but I am in a dangerous position, sir, because I know nothing about patents.

Mr. LARSEN. In the experiments that you saw, did they involve those things? That is what I want to know.

Commander CRAVEN. Some of the phases did; yes, sir.

And again on page 1032 he says:

I can not say for sure, because I do not know anything about patents—that he can overcome the various troubles which are involved in patent litigation and that he has in a large measure overcome them. I do not know for sure whether he has or not, because I think some of those things will have to be tested in the courts, and they may be fighting them for 5 or 10 years more. But I want to say I was satisfied that they could do what they said they could do, and it was practical to develop it.

I reported to the commission in the following words:

"I am convinced that the Universal Wireless Corporation's development has demonstrated a practical principle, which, if applied to point-to-point communication in the United States, will ease the situation relative to the sharing of the short waves with Canada and with other nations of the world.

"I reported to the commission that they must have money in order to make this a go; if they did this thing on a comprehensive scale, if they employed traffic engineers and experienced people, that perhaps they might be successful. I could not guarantee any success, but it has to be done with competent engineers on a large scale and with plenty of money to be spent; otherwise it will not be a go. I recommended that to the commission. At the same time I called their attention to the need of a proper feeder system for the transoceanic radio systems that we now have, and called attention to the fact that our transoceanic radio systems were an important factor in our economic life and should not be forgotten in any allocations which were made. I made no specific recommendation as to which company should get it, but said that they did have a development, and I believed they were technically qualified to do it. I added, too, that their equipment was what I called in the manufacturing design stage; that they would not be able to go out to-day and put it on the market to be sold to other people, but there would have to be a lot of work done in the development of it, but they would have it in time.

"It develops that the Bureau of Standards did not pick up these signals. 'The Bureau of Standards has not submitted a report, but it is understood that they were unable to measure the frequencies because of the short notice and because the emissions were not heard or were indistinguishable'" (p. 959 of the hearings).

And it also develops that the Naval Research Laboratory did not pick up the signals as promised by the Universal Wireless Communication Co. I herewith submit a letter:

NAVAL RESEARCH LABORATORY,
Bellevue, Anacostia, D. C., February 14, 1929.

Hon. A. M. FREE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. FREE: Conforming to your request to give you a memorandum outlining the points brought up in conference of yesterday, the following is submitted:

As I advised you in answer to your inquiry, I have no connection with the Universal Wireless Communication Co. and know nothing about this company other than what has appeared in current press. At the time the request to be mentioned later was made I did not know what reason actuated such request.

Late in the afternoon of December 13, 1928, this laboratory was informed by a representative of the Radio Commission that certain transmissions were to be made by the Universal Wireless Communication Co. on December 14 between 10 and 10.40 a. m., and that the commission would like to have the laboratory measure frequency emissions. The commission was advised that this was work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Engineering and that the measurements could be made, provided it was agreeable to that bureau. I might mention that the laboratory, in addition to its routine work for the Navy Department, as a Government activity is available to assist other Government departments as may be possible without unduly interfering with its assigned mission.

Commander T. A. M. Craven, United States Navy, who made the request, further obtained permission from the Bureau of Engineering for the laboratory to do this work and advised the laboratory that it was proposed to transmit on 5 channels separated about 750 cycles and at about 4,280 kilocycles, that transmission would be first made on the two outside channels to give the laboratory an opportunity to accurately determine the total width of the band of transmissions, after which transmissions would be made simultaneously on all five channels. He further advised that the Bureau of Standards had also been requested to make such measurements.

As the laboratory endeavors to maintain a high professional standard in this work, and as the Bureau of Standards had also been requested to make measurements, after discussing the matter with Dr. L. P. Wheeler, then in acting charge of the radio division, the laboratory decided that special precautions should be taken to insure the accuracy of its measurements. Further, on account of the large amount of interference which might be experienced in certain parts of the laboratory by reason of its various activities, it was felt that more than one observer should make these measurements. Accordingly, measurements were made by three different observers, one in the receiving section, one in the field house about one-fourth of a mile away from the remainder of the laboratory, and one in the precision measurement section.

It was realized that the measurements requested would be difficult to make, and owing to the short time between the time of the request and the time of the test it would be impossible to make special set-ups necessary for accurate determination of all frequencies of emissions. With routine apparatus available, however, it would be possible to determine the total spread of the transmissions, i. e., the total area of frequency band occupied between the lowest and the highest frequencies used; and, further, to individually identify the other frequencies lying between the upper and lower limits. The laboratory was advised that it was intended to transmit on five channels covering a band not in excess of one-tenth of 1 per cent. At a frequency of 4,280 kilocycles this would mean a spread of 4,280 cycles.

One observer had an abnormally high noise level in his laboratory and could not make precision measurements, but stated that he was able to identify four separate pure C. W. transmissions in the band close to 4,280 kilocycles, and thought he heard a fifth transmission between the upper and lower limits. This high noise level was due in part to a harmonic of a broadcast station, identified as such from the fact that it was transmission of a voice, but mainly due to local conditions in this part of the building.

The second observer, located in the field house about one-quarter of a mile from the main laboratory building, had good receiving conditions except for a very strong interference from this broadcast harmonic on the lower frequency, making a little uncertainty in the exact position of this frequency as measured. He used a crystal calibrator on which the temperature was kept constant, but on which the absolute value of the frequency was not determined, as he understood it was desired to determine only the range over which emissions were made. Nevertheless, the frequency spread observed by this man can be considered accurate to about 500 cycles. Four separate frequencies were identified with approximately the same signal strength. This signal strength was very strong, known in radio parlance as R 6 or 7, which indicates loud enough to be heard with the phones lying on the table. The center of the band, as measured by this observer, was 4,287 kilocycles. He observed the spread of the signal from the lowest to the highest frequency to be 3,000 cycles, being hampered in this observation considerably by the before-mentioned broadcast harmonic, which was stronger than the signals to be observed and wobbled around in frequency and was particularly objectionable in the lower frequencies.

The synopsis of this observer's measurements showed that the band of interference of the frequencies when all transmitted together was 3,000 cycles wider than would have been observed by single pure C. W. transmission.

The third observer in the precision-measurement section used a high-precision type of crystal oscillator with temperature control and heterodyne frequency meter calibrated immediately before the test against this standard precision oscillator. His value of frequency may therefore be assumed to be correct to within a high degree of accuracy. It was possible to measure with great accuracy the upper boundary frequency which this observer placed at 4,284 cycles. The accuracy of the lower boundary, due to before-mentioned broadcast harmonic, introduced an uncertainty which might amount to a maximum of 200 cyles. This frequency was measured as 4,280.5. The spread of frequencies, according to this observer, was 3,500 cycles, and the zone of interference would therefore be 3,500 cycles wider than that produced by single pure C. W. transmission. This observer identified positively four frequencies and states he occasionally heard a fifth frequency within the two outside limits.

As before stated, it is impossible to get precision measurements on several frequencies transmitted at once when these frequencies approach very closely one to the other unless elaborate arrangements are made with suitable filter circuits to permit separation of frequencies so that only one is heard at a time. Had time permitted, this could readily have been done, or it could easily have been done had each one of the various frequencies been transmitted singly.

From the above it will be seen that observer No. 3, who did the most accurate work on the absolute value of the frequencies, places the center of the band at 4,282.25 kilocycles, whereas observer No. 2 places it at 4,287. The discrepancy is due to the temperature correction in the standard crystal oscillator applied by the third observer. It is believed the value of 4,282.25 kilocycles for the band center can be taken as correct to within 200 or 300 cycles. The measurements at the laboratory clearly indicate that the total space occupied by the five frequencies was well under one-tenth of 1 per cent, which in this case means well under 4,282 cycles.

The laboratory did not have, nor has since had, information as to the type of transmitter used in the above-mentioned test. It is of the opinion that it is possible practice with suitable equipment to transmit and receive with a frequency difference in channels of one-tenth of 1 per cent in this frequency band. This implies, of course, very accurate control of emission which is believed feasible on shore-station equipment and will probably become universally accepted in the future in view of the present rapid rate of advancement of the art. The laboratory recognizes that this degree of precision in frequency control entails many precautions regarding rigidity of circuits, temperature controls, and other factors which are possible in a shore-station installation. It believes that it will be more difficult to obtain this degree of accuracy in a ship-board installation and probably very difficult, if not impossible, to obtain it in aircraft work where space and weight must be kept to a minimum.

In answer to your inquiry regarding whether this test should be considered a laboratory test, it is sufficient to state that the strength of signals received here indicates that had this transmission been during the night hours, under the most favorable circumstances, the emissions might have been heard over the greater part of the United States. You will realize that in high-frequency transmission the path of the wave is from earth to sky and down to earth and that the ability to transmit over long distances depends largely on the height of what is known as the Kennelly-Heaviside layer. With proper choice of frequency for different conditions existing between the transmitter and the receiver, in high-frequency work, very little power is required to transmit signals over long distances.

Please feel free to call on this laboratory for any further information in this matter in case the above does not cover to your satisfaction the points brought out at our conference.

Yours very truly,

E. G. OBERLIN,
Captain, United States Navy,
Assistant Director.

That the Universal Wireless Communication Co. did not and can not do anything that can not be done in any similar laboratory is evidenced by the testimony of Commander Craven:

Commander CRAVEN. I believe other companies, other people with other kinds of apparatus, or the same kind of apparatus, if they desire to take the trouble, could do the same thing if they had just one method, just one little thing, that the Universal Wireless has. I do not believe that the thing is so difficult; I believe it can be done practically.

Mr. CULKIN. But they are the only ones that have done it, to your knowledge?

Commander CRAVEN. Others have done it in the laboratories, I believe, sir; I am not sure of that.

Mr. CULKIN. Of course, that is what they were doing?

Commander CRAVEN. Yes, sir; but others do not believe you can maintain a frequency constant enough to do this; and if you take those things separately, perhaps you can not; but if you add in one other way I know of, it can be done. (P. 1029 of the hearings.)

And if any Member of this House will take the trouble to find out what is being done in the Naval Research Laboratory, you will find that that laboratory can send communications with much less separation than is even claimed by the Universal Wireless Communication Co. That the commission itself knew that the Universal Wireless Communication Co. had not made their demonstration beyond doubt is evidenced by the testimony of Commissioner Lafount on page 961 of the hearings, as follows:

Mr. FREE. Now, let me ask you candidly, Mr. Lafount, about yourself.

Mr. LAFOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREE. Do you feel—are you satisfied—that this company can operate over 40 of these channels on a separation of one-tenth of 1 per cent and put five messages on—or whatever it is?

Mr. LAFOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. FREE. You feel that that has been demonstrated beyond peradventure of a doubt out in the field?

Mr. LAFOUNT. No, sir; I know that it has not.

It would seem that in the granting of such a valuable right the commission would have definitely ascertained the financial responsibility of this company. I asked Commissioner Lafount in regard to this, and his testimony is as follows:

Mr. FREE. Did you call for a report from any commercial agency like Dun or Bradstreet, on the financial responsibility of any of those men?

Mr. LAFOUNT. No, sir (p. 953 of the hearings).

It would appear that the commission questioned some of those men representng the Universal Wireless Communication Co. and that Commissioner Lafount, on a trip back from the West, stopped over at Buffalo and talked with some people about the officers and directors of this company and satisfied himself with the statement that these men were financially responsible and represented considerable wealth; but nothing was done to ascertain how this company was to be financed. Dr. John Nathansohn, who has been here as a lobbyist for the company, testified in that respect that to date no stock has been sold. His testimony is as follows:

Mr. FREE. And, to date, you sold no stock?

Mr. NATHANSOHN. There is no stock issued to-day for anybody.

Mr. FREE. And to whom are you leaving it to settle how much stock you will get?

Mr. NATHANSOHN. To the group with whom I am interested in having done with them the research work and furnished the funds to pursue the research work.

He also testified that the original promoters, of which he is one, are to get a block of stock for their services, but that he did not know the amount of stock which they were to receive. His testimony in this respect is very interesting.

Mr. FREE. And you say now that you have no agreement with that company as to what you are to be paid or what these other men are to be paid?

Mr. NATHANSOHN. No; I did not say that, Congressman. I said there was a certain amount of common stock to be issued to the group.

Mr. FREE. How much?

Mr. NATHANSOHN. I could not really tell you what the full amount is.

* * * * * * *

Mr. FREE. Then some agreement has been made with the corporation that this group is to get a certain amount of the stock of the corporation or to be paid a certain amount of money; is that correct?

Mr. NATHANSOHN. They are going to get a certain amount of common stock for having developed the thing.

Mr FREE. How much is that?

Mr. NATHANSOHN. I could not tell you (p. 1035 of the hearings).

The commission apparently was satisfied with the statement that these men were financially responsible and did not take the trouble to investigate how the concern was to be financed, how much was to be given to the promoters and lobbyists, or any other factors which would enter into the financing of this company. That the company must have in mind the selling of stock is evidenced in the fact that they have issued a prospectus, part of which is as follows:

The Universal Wireless Communication Co. (Inc.) was incorporated under the laws of Delaware and has three classes of stock: A class of preferred stock known as class "A" preferred, which is of no par value, but is entitled to receive, as and when directed by the board of directors, dividends at the rate of $7 per share, which dividend shall be cumulative after the 1st day of July, 1929. This stock constitutes a lien on the assets of the company to the extent of $100 per share in case of liquidation and is called at $120 per share on 60 days' notice. This class of stock comprises 50,000 shares.

Class "B" preferred stock comprises 200,000 shares and is of no par value, noncumulative, preferred to the extent of $7 per share, callable at $115 on 60 days' notice, and a lien on the assets of the company to the extent of $100 a share after class "A" preferred stock shall be paid.

The common stock of the company consists of 750,000 shares of no par value, is entitled to receive as dividends such surplus profits of the company as shall remain available for distribution after the dividend requirements of class "A" and class "B" stock have been made.

It is designed by the use of this capital stock to raise the capital fund of $25,000,000 which is anticipated to be ample for all purposes; plant construction, including the acquiring of the necessary real property; working capital; and to provide ample reserves to meet emergencies and contingencies which are bound to arise in the development of a new business; to provide means of absorbing excessive amortization, which it is expected will be experienced due to the fact that the work to be carried on is in a rapidly developing and expanding art, and in order to maintain efficiency at a peak to provide better service at all times than that of competitors, it may be and probably will be necessary from time to time to radically change equipment and methods of operation.

It is expected in the first instance that plant equipment and sites will absorb approximately $10,000,000. It is contemplated that the company should have a working capital and surplus at all times of approximately $7,500,000 and the balance of the capital fund it is expected to devote to retiring organization and development expenses, and to provide a reservoir of liquid capital from which unexpected emergencies, contingencies, or unforeseen expansions can be taken care of.

Although in a recent newspaper article, which was given to me, one of the directors of the company announced that no stock sale was contemplated and that to date the promoters had advanced the money which had thus far been used in promoting the proposition.

I can not understand why the commission was in such a great rush to allocate this $40,000,000 worth of channels without further investigation, both as to the apparatus of the company and their financial responsibility.

On August 15, 1928, on recommendation of Dr. J. H. Dellinger of the Bureau of Standards, who has been serving as their head engineer, and Commander T. A. M. Craven, who has been acting as an engineer for the commission, two experimental stations were allocated to this company for the purpose of developing and demonstrating their apparatus and it would seem that this would serve every purpose to give the company an opportunity to further present their claims without allocating all the then available short waves to this concern. The demonstration the Universal Wireless Communication Co. gave, to say the least, did not fulfill the promises they had made as to what their apparatus would do and, besides, it develops that in that demonstration they used patents which they could not use in their actual work, except by consent of the holders of the patents.

The Canadian conference, to which Commissioner Lafount referred in his letter, had not been held and the United States did not know at that time just the number of short waves which the United States would be permitted to use and this, as you will see from the letter of Commissioner Lafount, was to be determined before any allocations should be made.

It furthermore appears that none of the other applicants were given an opportunity to demonstrate their own apparatus nor to point out defects in the apparatus of the Universal Wireless Communication Co. The feeling of at least one of the other applicants is shown in the following letter:

NORTHBROOK, ILL., February 1, 1929.

Hon. ARTHUR M. FREE,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been extremely interested in your activities regarding the grant of 40 high-frequency channels to the Universal Wireless Communication Co., as reported by the press. In fact, my interest in the commission's proceedings with the Universal Co., which occasionally rises to a condition of ire, prompts me to communicate with you. I trust, sir, that the information contained herein may be of mutual benefit.

From the mouth of one, Dwight V. Johnson, a former engineer of the Universal Co., I am informed that the company in question spent many thousands of dollars wining and dining the press and various unnamed governmental officials and employees at Washington, D. C.

I am further informed from indirect sources that the Universal Co. has no patents whatsoever, and that their specifications as submitted before the Federal Radio Commission were drawn up by Navy and Bureau of Standards engineers. This was entirely without regard to the possibility of patent infringement. Their claim of a new, revolutionary, and secret method of carrying on multiple communication on one channel is purely fictionary. This idea dates back at least 12 years.

From a recent report concerning their financial ability to install and operate their proposed domestic radiotelegraph system, I am informed that they were originally financed to the extent of $250,000 by a small group of Buffalo business men. This sum was practically all expended in lobbying, publicity, and a few minor tests. Subsequent to their grant from the Radio Commission, there were parties for the press and others, followed by a drive on Wall Street financiers for additional funds with which to carry on their work.

Their activities are not the cause of my ire, though I am not in accord with their ethics, necessary though they may have been in order to attain their desires. I strenuously object to the grant because of their lack of patents, because of misrepresentation concerning their system of multiplex operation, and because they are entirely a "paper organization," never having been in operation. I further object to the commission's apparent partiality over two other independent domestic radiotelegraph companies who have been in operation since before the formation of the Federal Radio Commission.

I refer to the organization of which I am the head, and also, to the Intercity Radio Telegraph Co.

The Wireless Telegraph & Communication Co. is two and one half years old and has had WHW of Northbrook (Chicago), Ill., since October of 1926. Its financing has been purely private with a balance sheet showing at present less than $100 outstanding in current bills due. We have a traffic and operating affiliation with the Intercity Radio Telegraph Co., which has radiotelegraph stations at Duluth, Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, and Columbus (Ohio). The Intercity Co. has been in operation since 1923.

For a period of more than 18 months we have endeavored to obtain permits from the Federal Radio Commission to construct and operate stations in about 30 more cities in the United States. Both of our companies have proven by notarized letters from present customers and through other evidence our benefit to commerce and to the industrial public. We are in constant operation, giving high-speed, economical service, and yet our applications for additional cities are returned to us with the notation the commission "is not satisfied that public interest, convenience, or necessity would be served by the granting thereof."

Correspondence to the commission is rarely answered and hearings are delayed. It seems impossible to obtain a hearing at Chicago, though I understand the radio act to provide for such.

We have never been troubled with patent litigation. We possess the exclusive controlling rights to patents enabling even more multiple use of radio-frequency channels than that claimed by the Universal Co. We are enabled thereby to have as many as 30 or more channels on one wave length. This information has been repeatedly given the commissioners, their technical aides, and advisors. We are ably financed and have additional capital available at any time for expansion. This has also been stated to the commission.

All to no avail; or so it seems at present. We are not at all adverse to competition, but believe, as any fair-minded citizen would, that we have been done gross injustice by the Federal Radio Commission.

We are not lobbyists and do not intend such to be. Nor are we radical in our sound requests for additional permits providing for the proper advancement, logical and legitimate, in our organizations which have been and are serving the great industrial and commercial public of the cities we serve.

I shall appreciate, sir, your comments and assure you of our willingness to cooperate in your timely move.

Very truly yours,

JIRAH D. COLE, Jr., President.

It further appears that the Navy Department is opposed to the control by the Radio Commission of radio as a body of original jurisdiction, except as to broadcasting. This appears from a letter, which was addressed to the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, copy of which is herewith presented.

JANUARY 30, 1929.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: My attention has been called to the H. R. 15430, "Continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes," now pending before the committee of which you are chairman. This bill has not been referred to the Navy Department for an expression of its views, yet the Navy's concern with the development of commercial radio in connection with national defense is such that it is considered desirable to inform the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the Navy Department's interest in the bill.

The purpose of this bill is to provide that the powers and authority vested in the Federal Radio Commission by the radio act approved February 23, 1927, shall continue to be vested in and exercised by the commission until March 16, 1930. It provides that the members of the commission shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum until March 16, 1930, restricts the licensing of stations for broadcasting, and authorizes the appointment of a general counsel at $10,000 per annum and three assistants at $7,500 per annum, and such other legal assistants as necessary.

The Federal Radio Commission has done much to improve the radio situation from a broadcast point of view, and its authority to continue its work in regulating this industry, if necessary, should be continued for another year. It is the opinion of the Navy Department that the administration of matters concerning point to point, marine, and aircraft radio communications was better handled by the Department of Commerce and that the best interest of the country would be served if the Federal Radio Commission were continued for one year, as contemplated in the bill, but that its jurisdiction should be restricted to radio broadcasting. Jurisdiction over other radio matters should revert on March 16, 1929, to the Department of Commerce.

The Navy Department is making a study of the various proposals for administering communications and will in due time be in a position to submit the results to Congress, if at that time such proposals come within the financial program of the President.

It is impossible to estimate accurately the cost which will result to the Government in case the bill H. R. 15430 is enacted. The present law provides that the five members of the commission shall receive compensation at the rate of $30 each per day while engaged upon work of the commission, while the present bill provides for each of the five members a salary of $10,000 per annum. The present law provides that the commission may appoint a special counsel, etc., salaries not specified, whereas the present bill provides that a general counsel, at $10,000 per annum, and three assistants, at $7,500 each per annum may be appointed.

On January 24, 1929, the bill H. R. 15430, together with the above information as to cost, etc., were referred to the Director of the Bureau of the Budget with a statement that the Navy Department desired to inform the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries of the Navy Department's interest in the bill, and requesting to be informed as to whether or not the enactment of this legislation would be within the financial program of the President. Under date of January 25, 1929, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget replied that under the circumstances, having in mind that there is no determination as to the relationship of this bill to the financial program of the President, it would appear to be unnecessary to include in my letter to the committee a reference to the financial aspect of the bill.

Sincerely yours,

CURTIS D. WILBUR, Secretary of the Navy.

Commissioner Caldwell, who has been a member of the commission for two years and is now retiring from the commission, testified that the commission is illy contrived to handle matters of this kind. His testimony is as follows:

Mr. BLAND. I understand that you are of the opinion that a commission is illy contrived to handle matters of this kind?

Commissioner CALDWELL. I am.

Mr. BLAND. When did you reach that conclusion?

Commissioner CALDWELL. I have held that opinion for a long time, sir.

Mr. BLAND. Did you express it the last time you came before this committee?

Commissioner CALDWELL. I do not recall whether I did or not. But my opinions on that have been expressed quite generally and are known to many persons over several years.

Mr. BLAND. When the question of extending the life of this commission was being considered previously, however, you did not pronounce an opinion at that time and decided against the commission performing that service?

Commissioner CALDWELL. I had previously up to that time expressed an opinion, and that matter is on record as far back as two or three years ago. My opinion has consistently been that a commission is a difficult way to handle an engineering question.

* * * * * * *

Commissioner CALDWELL. No, sir. My opinion has, however, been reinforced by my experience of two years on the commission as to the difficulties of doing constructive work for the benefit of radio, for the benefit of the public, in an engineering situation of this kind.

It may be said that no harm can be done in granting of these channels; that they are granted upon condition that stations be erected in 10 cities within a year and that certain number of stations be erected within certain period thereafter. It may be an easy thing for the company to erect a few stations and do the communication at first. Their difficulty will arrive when the later stations are erected and they are forced to send their communications with less separation as to the channels.

I can well conceive how now, or after a few stations are erected, the public might be impressed with the wonders of this art and the stock of this concern be sold at fabulously high prices and then the matter fail. It appears from the testimony that representatives of the company have been approached by concerns engaged in the selling of stock and that it has been proposed that the stock be sold, the selling company acting as brokers to receive at the rate of $1.50 per share. Companies which are legitimately in business might be forced to buy these channels from the Universal Wireless Communication Co. at fabulous prices.

I believe that it is the function and duty of the Radio Commission to investigate all applicants, investigate their financial responsibility, their apparatus, and their ability to serve the public.

I believe that if we continue the commission as a body of original jurisdiction for another year, you will have just another year of chaos, and it would seem infinitely better to let the original jurisdiction go to the Department of Commerce, have the Radio Commission as an appellate body to which applicants and the Secretary of Commerce could refer these matters for further consideration, and, thereby, establish a definite basis upon which applicants may pursue their rights to the Secretary of Commerce, through the Radio Commission, and then, if necessary, to the courts.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I hesitate very much about taking even one minute. The chairman of the committee, who knows more about radio than anyone else in Congress, took but 23 minutes of the allotted time for himself. I simply want to make a few remarks stating my interest and the interest of the committee in this subject; also our inability to fully understand, and I believe the inability of the House to grasp its great possibilities. It is said to be God's greatest gift to the twentieth century. We wish you would read the hearings and learn its present status and development. In the absence of any recommendation for legislation from the commission we as a committee are not proposing any policy at this time You heard the remarks of the gentleman from Texas about the Lucky Strike cigarettes. It is an important suggestion that he has brought out.

It shows the sort of sponsors of these wonderful broadcasting programs. I wish I might take the time to read the conversation in the committee room in reference to the Lucky Strike cigarette program. It was stated that Lucky Strike was a reputable organization and one that could afford to pay the cost of the very expensive programs which are so much appreciated by the listening public.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have only five minutes. It seems that agreements have been made among great corporations that one can sell, others manufacture, and others broadcast without competition among themselves, with the result that a certain stock has increased from $5 a share to $365 a share and has such future possibilities that it is expected to go much higher. We ask what is the ultimate aim of the radio? Is it to be wonderful programs furnished by cigarette advertisers, or is it to be a great art of communication? The time has arrived when we should not have to go to the telephone on the wall; but whether traveling in auto, out in the wilderness, or at a pond fishing, we should be served by this medium of communication. Is it because certain arrangements have been arrived at that the wire companies are not to be meddled with, and that by certain agreements that we are to be deprived of the real benefits of the great invention?

We, as members of this committee, have made practically a futile effort in trying to get the desired information. Mr. Aylesworth of the National Broadcasting Co. came before the committee and told us of the wonderful things he was doing for the listeners, making radio reception popular so that the Radio Corporation might sell their goods. What will happen when such sponsors as Lucky Strike find that it does not pay to advertise in this way? These corporations assure us that everything is all right. However, we know that everything is not all right. I ask you to listen to the statement of Judge DAVIS, of Tennessee, and if you have not time to listen, I wish you would read his statement. He has learned much that we ought to know.

I took the floor for these few minutes to express my opinion, that we are not given proper facilities of radio communication. We are responsible, through the commission, to the people of the United States that this great invention is not being brought forward as a real utility rather than as an entertainment proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 27 minutes.

Mr. FREE. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the committee, to-day the tables are rather curiously turned. A year ago those who to-day seek to extend the life of the Radio Commission were prone to lay the heaviest strictures on the members of that commission, claiming that they did not perform their duties as radio commissioners and had failed to carry out the will of Congress. Now, these same gentlemen come into the Chamber and ask us to confer additional powers on the commission and to extend its life. I, for one, take a position in opposition.

When we adopted the original radio bill we placed the power over radio in the Department of Commerce, and when we set up the Radio Commission two years ago we did it on the express condition that as soon as the particular task for which the Radio Commission was set up, was finished, that Radio Commission was to pass out of existence, as far as original jurisdiction was concerned, and were to have only an appellate jurisdiction.

Now, on November 11 last the Radio Commission announced its reallocation plan. In pursuance of the so-called Davis amendment the Radio Commission, after a great deal of toil and effort, brought forth these various reallocations, wave lengths, stations, power, and broadcasting facilities. At that time they completed their work. There was no need for them any longer to function. There was no need to continue that body in existence as a commission. Why do you continue it with this legislation?

The very distinguished chairman of the committee, my esteemed friend the gentleman from Maine [Mr. WHITE] asks what is the alternative? The answer is very simple. These functions should go where they belong, where they were originally lodged, in the Department of Commerce; and if you will permit me, let me give just briefly some of the testimony of Commissioner Caldwell as he presented that testimony before the committee.

He said:

> The radio division of the Department of Commerce, which, as the law now stands, will automatically take back radio administration on March 15, is manned with competent radio experts and engineers. It has an organization spread over the country where it is needed and equipped with splendid monitoring and measuring apparatus. It has the skill and men and the instruments to put radio into proper operating condition.
> I think that every radio listener and every Member of Congress will recall that three years ago when the Department of Commerce had radio, radio was handled the best it has been handled and the complaints were then the fewest.
> The recent changes in broadcasting were designed along the principles orighally adopted by the Department of Commerce. The commission's work here and in the short-wave field is now 80 to 85 per cent done. The Department of Commerce is the best-qualified agency to complete the restoration of radio service. To set up a commission organization for a year, duplicating the present expert staff of the Department of Commerce, will be wasteful and indefensible.

The extract I have read to you is the opinion of the man distinguished above all other men in his knowledge of the subject of radio to-day, Commissioner Caldwell.

One would gather the impression that the department is barren of experts, barren of the facilities that would enable it to properly control and operate the radio facilities. But that is not the case.

I repeat, that to continue the life of this commission for another year would, indeed, be wasteful and indefensible.

Now, the Radio Commission, represented as it is by five different men from five different parts of the country, has functioned how? Only with the idea of intense sectionalism. You know you can not ride two horses going in a different direction at the same time. Well, even more so you can not ride five horses going at the same time in five different directions. The members of this commission have been hopelessly in disaccord. Only in few and rare instances have they agreed on any radio proposition.

Radio, my friends, is an engineering proposition, not a political proposition—and yet politics enters into this proposition to the nth degree if you keep a sectional commission in control of radio where it must give heed to political expediency. That has been the situation with the Radio Commission, and that is why I am opposed to its continuation. I said radio was an engineering proposition. You have seen fit—contrary to my wishes, at least—to look upon radio as a sort of pie to be divided into five equal parts. You may as well try to divide the rainbow into five equal parts as to try to divide the radio spectrum into five different parts. It just can not be done. This House and the Senate made a mistake in that division. But we can not help that now—that is water gone over the dam—but I say, do not encourage such sectionalism; do not encourage to a greater degree that division by keeping in power these five men, representing five different regions of the land, because all you can get out of a condition of that sort is backing and filling—compromise. The radio engineers of this country, the best radio talent called in by the commission, for example, recommended that there be 50 cleared channels. But, no; the members of the commission would not agree to that, but after a great deal of useless argument they compromised and put in 40 cleared channels. You could not have that situation in the Department of Commerce, because there you would have one man in control; and in a situation of this sort I would rather have one man in control than five.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In the absence of this bill, the Department of Commerce could operate on 5-year permits, could they not; while this bill, at least for the next year, limits the permits to one year.

Mr. CELLER. As to that, I think I would be in accord with the gentleman. I am addressing myself to the proposition of the continuation of the functions of the Radio Commission, and I am not taking up, as time will not permit, the other features of the bill with which I am in accord.

Now, the point was raised—ill-advisedly, I believe—that the Radio Commission's work is yet to be done on the question of short waves and on the question of continental point-to-point bands; but one of the experts of the commission, one of the commissioners—Mr. Caldwell—said that the work of the commission is from 80 to 85 per cent completed, and that the Department of Commerce would be best equipped to continue that work to a logical conclusion.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman, although he would not yield to me.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Was not that statement directed only to the work within the broadcasting field? I think it was.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Caldwell spoke of the short waves; indeed, I read those words to you.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think it is perfectly apparent from his whole testimony that that statement referred only to the work within the broadcasting bands.

Mr. CELLER. I certainly can read English.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think that is so.

Mr. CELLER. I do not want to take exception to the gentleman's interpretation of what Mr. Caldwell said, but the words are so plain on their face that he who runs may read.

Now, the distinguished chairman of the committee said it would be well to continue the commission for the purpose of negotiation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. May I have three additional minutes? In the absence of the gentleman from California [Mr. FREE], I yield myself three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. CELLER. We were told that negotiations were afoot with various countries—Canada, Mexico, and possibly Cuba—to the end that there may be some accord with these countries concerning the various allocations of bands within the radio spectrum. Well, as far as I am concerned, I would rather lodge the power of negotiation with the Executive, where it belongs, a member of the President's Cabinet, acting in concert with the Department of State, rather than with five members of the Radio Commission. The Department of Commerce certainly can function better in that regard than can the Radio Commission.

Now, I desire to speak about a New York situation. Brooklyn, from whence I come, prior to the advent of the Radio Commission, had fairly decent radio representation, but in the reallocation plan of the commission its four stations—WBBC, WMBG, WSGH, and WSGN—were all relegated to a ridiculously low wave length, all sharing time on that wave length. Brooklyn no longer has a voice articulate on the air. It has little or no radio representation. It should have a large broadcasting station with proper radio facilities commensurate with its industrial, commercial, and social importance. Just think of the city of churches, Brooklyn, the place from whence came Talmage, Hilles, Henry Ward Beecher, and other great ministers.

Despite the protests of various chambers of commerce in Brooklyn and Brooklyn's eight Congressmen, a good many of our ministers, and men in public life, Brooklyn got the worst and rawest kind of a deal from the Radio Commission. I protested and other Members of the House protested but all to no avail, and any commission that would treat the fair city of Brooklyn in that fashion deserves to go out of commission.

Then there is the situation with reference to stations WMAC and WNYC, the latter being the municipal station of the city of New York. It was compelled to share time with just an ordinary commercial station, WMAC, despite the fact that the commission was warned that it had no right and had no power to interfere with the State's instrumentalities; in other words, here is a State station particularly functioning for the State of New York when it broadcasts educational courses for the College of the City of New York and the New York Board of Education. The municipal station is an instrument of the State of New York. The Radio Commission had no right to take away its time and force it to share time with a commercial station. For these and many other reasons this commission should have its power pruned and function only as an appellate commission to hear appeals from those aggrieved by and seeking redress from the action of the Department of Commerce.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has 32 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. FREE] has quoted a member of the Cabinet from California, the Secretary of the Navy, as being opposed to the extension of the Federal Radio Commission. May I quote another gentleman from California, formerly a member of the Cabinet and now the President elect of the United States, Mr. Hoover, who, in his testimony, said that it was too much power to give one man to have the regulation of radio, and particularly the granting of licenses. He testified emphatically before the committee that no one individual should be vested with such enormous power.

Just a moment's examination of the power which the Secretary of Commerce would have, and did have, when Mr. Hoover was administering radio, will disclose the reasons for this judgment. There are less than a hundred broadcasting wave lengths in this country and there are only a few thousand short wave lengths for international use.

Not only the great broadcasting chains are fighting for channels and fighting for licenses, but labor unions and some of the most powerful newspapers in the United States are in the field, and various other agencies of great political power are contesting for licenses. Also, in allocating the short waves, you have such corporations as the United Fruit Co., the Standard Oil Co., the United Steel Corporation, and corporations of similar size competing for licenses.

Manifestly, to throw radio back to the Commerce Department is unfair to the President of the United States who appoints the Secretary of Commerce. You may take it for granted that applicants will appeal to the President to use what influence he has with the Secretary of Commerce. It is unfair to the Secretary of Commerce, who is already burdened with great duties, to have this tremendous power vested in him.

A commission of five members rotating throughout the years with their terms expiring at different times will be better able to resist political influence and to withstand the tremendous pressure that will be and is exerted by the applicants of the size which I have indicated. Moreover it is provided in the law that at least two of the members of the Federal Radio Commission shall belong to the minor political party. This in itself is a check against political pressure which is not found in the Secretary of Commerce's office.

The Federal Radio Commission when appointed had the hardest job ever thrown on the lap of a Federal commission. They had only a limited number of wave lengths and power to dispense and they found it was absolutely impossible to meet the demands of all applicants. It was a physical impossibility.

They were dealing with an elusive and a new art and science, and, moreover, one that was constantly changing. By bitter experience they have gotten much priceless knowledge and their organization of experts and clerks is constantly improving.

Moreover, they have been conducting negotiations of the most tremendous and far-reaching importance with foreign countries, notably Canada, to safeguard the wave lengths which Americans are now using. It would be very bad policy to let the commission down suddenly in the midst of these negotiations.

By all means the life of the Radio Commission should be extended another year.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLANCY. I would if I could. I have only three minutes granted me and my time is about up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, one of the most important subjects with which Congress will have to deal for some time is the question of radio. Radio at the present time is in its infancy. It is a subject which legislation should guard safely and zealously. The power to broadcast over the air is a powerful one and one that is dangerous if placed in the hands of unscrupulous persons; especially is this danger eminent in the matter of government and politicians. Too great safeguards can not be placed around it concerning these two questions.

With that in mind I arise to suggest that so soon as possible legislation should be enacted by the Congress prohibiting the owning or operating of broadcasting stations by public officials or the officers and members of committees of political parties. True the present statute prohibits preference being extended by broadcasting stations to political parties or political candidates, but this provision can be and has been easily violated by unscrupulous political owners, by whom it is always easy to produce an alibi. I realize also, as you will, that these unscrupulous owners will not be and are not confined to any one political party, but as an evidence of what has happened and what can happen under the present conditions, I desire to relate to you a personal experience.

In the city of Tulsa, in which I live, is located a broadcasting station known as KVOO. It is located in a wonderful city and should be builded great and placed under unbiased and competent ownership and allowed to function for all the people. This station is owned by Mr. W. G. Skelly, Republican national committeeman for Oklahoma. Let me repeat here again that I realize that unscrupulous national committeemen can probably be found in the Democratic Party as well as the Republican.

Some weeks previous to the recent election, as the Democratic nominee for Congress in the first Oklahoma district, I signed a contract presented to me by a representative of KVOO for a 20-minute period on the Monday evening previous to the election, and indicated my desire that that 20 minutes was to be allotted to me between the hours of 7 and 8 p. m., for which I was to pay the sum of $60. After having signed this contract some three weeks elapsed when on Sunday the manager of KVOO at the time the contract was made, a Mr. Mount, who is well known in the radio world, having come to Tulsa from Cincinnati, called at my home. He seemed to be out of humor and was desirous of bringing suit against the owner of KVOO for damages done to him. This I persuaded him not to do. In return for this persuasion he said to me, "You are very much more liberal with Mr. Skelly than he is with you." Inquiry as to this remark developed from Mr. Mount the statement that he had been instructed as manager of this station to give to my opponent preference in time and conveniences at station KVOO.

Thinking that this gentleman was probably mad and excited, and not believing that the owner of KVOO was as unscrupulous as he afterwards proved to me, I dismissed the matter from my mind. On Wednesday before the election, when I was preparing my final itinerary for the campaign, I called KVOO to inform myself as to just what time had been allotted me in accordance with the contract signed. To my surprise the then manager stated that he knew nothing of my contract. As to this, permit me to say that later I found it to be a fact on authority of the young man who took my contract that when the change in managers was made this young man called attention of the new manager to it.

On the following day my son, Mr. Paxton Howard, called at KVOO station and after a considerable discussion of the matter left with the information that they would see what they could do. We heard nothing further of it until on Sunday afternoon previous to the election, when, at about 3 o'clock, the manager called my son and informed him that if I desired it I could have 15 minutes—not the 20 minutes for which I had made contract—and would be allocated this 15 minutes at 6 o'clock in the evening—not between the hours of 7 and 8 as had been indicated when contract was made. With this notification I found myself in this position: For several days it had been advertised throughout the district that my opponent was to broadcast at 6.15, which, of course, would have been immediately following me had I accepted the time offered. It left me with no opportunity to advertise to my friends and constituents that I was to broadcast. It was in no way a fulfillment of the contract I had signed and was conclusive evidence to me that the statement of Mr. Mount that Mr. Skelly, the owner, had instructed him to give my opponent preference was entirely true. I did not accept the 15 minutes, and I do not believe that any other Member of Congress would have done so under the circumstances. It is significant to relate, however, that when I did not take the time that Mr. Skelly, the owner, a Republican national committeeman for Oklahoma, occupied a part of that time making a speech over the radio for my opponent.

I have refrained ever since from discussing this matter or making complaint. I do so now not from any personal good that can come to me but for the purpose of warning the Nation of what can happen in the matter of broadcasting if broadcasting stations are to be left in the hands of unscrupulous politicians of either party, and the relating of this experience and this suggestion is only made with the hope that the Congress will pass legislation such as I have suggested which will make it absolutely clear that radio can not get into the hands of alibi-building politicians in the matter of politics or in the hands of the enemies of the masses of the people in the matter of government. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I have, I believe, 29 minutes at my disposition. May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] whether he would care to use the entire 29 minutes or would he prefer to yield some of the time?

Mr. DAVIS. I have no requests for any time. I will be pleased to use such time as the chairman shall deem proper to yield to me. It is a subject on which one can talk long or short.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, there will be only one other speaker in the affirmative, and I would ask the gentleman from California [Mr. FREE] to utilize the remainder of his time.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation of the courtesy of my colleague on the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries who graciously yielded me the time left at his disposal, although knowing full well I intend to take the side of the argument opposite that which he has been leading.

There has been a good deal said in criticism of the personnel of the Radio Commission, and the gentleman from New York has said that such a commission should be abolished. Now, by refusing to pass this bill pending before us now you do not abolish the Radio Commission at all and you do not, in all probability, by one jot or tittle, restrict its functions.

The Radio Commission for the last two years has been gradually building up an organization equipped to handle the question not only of the allocation of broadcasting channels but is beginning in the allocation of the short wave lengths for point-to-point communication and for commercial communication use. In these years such organization as may have been in the Department of Commerce for the handling of these questions which were within it before the 1927 act, has been weakened or dissipated.

On the 4th of March we will, in all probability, have a new Secretary of Commerce. He has the power to refer every one of the functions which revert to him, but which are now performed by the Radio Commission, to the Radio Commission initially, to carry out those functions, and it is almost certain that that will be the result.

The only thing that the failure to pass this bill will result in is confusion as to where jurisdiction lies. This may necessitate the duplicate filing of applications and may necessitate an initial investigation by the Department of Commerce, which will be thrown aside and a new investigation from the ground up taken up by the Radio Commission; in other words, by refusing to act on this bill you are simply providing for waste motion and duplication of effort.

As far as withdrawing from the Radio Commission the essential functions which it now exercises, the failure to pass this bill will not have that result. The Radio Commission will continue to function either as an appellate body or to a large extent by reference from the Department of Commerce of these questions initially, which is provided for in the act of 1927. So when you talk about chaos, by refusing to continue the original function of the Radio Commission you are only increasing and multiplying such chaos.

Now, as to this letter that was read here that comes to us over the signature of the Secretary of the Navy. During war time all forms of radio were under the Department of the Navy as a war measure. Desperate efforts were made after the armistice to continue within the power of the Navy Department control over radio in all its forms. It became necessary eventually to place riders on the naval appropriation bill to prevent any money appropriated in that act from being used for the development of radio stations by the Navy. The work was put in the hands of the Department of Commerce, but there are some underlings in the Navy Department that have not lost hope of regaining as a military measure the control of the civilian radio. Somebody down there caused a letter to be drafted and the Secretary of the Navy was induced to sign it.

On the other hand, since peace time radio has been developed and built up in the Department of Commerce. When the bill of 1927 was passed I opposed the creation of a commission because I did not believe in it, but the man who functioned as Secretary of Commerce, who was the Secretary of Commerce at that time, Mr. Hoover, perfectly familiar with the subject, persuaded me to stand for a commission, because he knew it was the best way out of that situation.

Therefore I say that you will accomplish nothing by refusing to pass this bill, except to make chaos worse confounded. If you pass this bill you will be following the advice of an engineer who knows radio, has had it under his supervision, and at whose behest the Radio Commission was created. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 29 minutes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 29 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the distinguished chairman of our committee and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] have very cogently and correctly stated the reasons why this bill should be enacted, and I heartily confirm what they have said. To my mind there are many reasons why we should pass this bill, and none from the public standpoint why we should not pass it.

The bill has the support of 20 out of 21 members of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee; the resolution providing for its consideration was unanimously reported by the Committee on Rules; it has the approval of President Coolidge; it was approved in the hearings by the National Association of Broadcasters, embracing 124 radio broadcasting stations, ranging in power from 10 to 50,000 watts and located in 35 States; by the Radio Protective Association, embracing 40 independent manufacturers of radio apparatus; and it has the approval of numerous others. In fact, the only witnesses appearing at the hearings against the bill were the general counsel of the Radio Corporation of America and Commissioner Caldwell. Commissioners Robinson, Sykes, and Lafount testified at the hearings, approved the bill, and gave very strong reasons why same should be passed; Commissioner Pickard did not testify before the committee, having resigned from the commission before he was reached, but he favored the extension of the authority of the commission a year ago, and it is understood that he favored the present bill. Fortunately, we will not be afflicted with Commissioner Caldwell any more. Because of his contempt for the law and favoritism to the Radio Trust, he was just confirmed by a majority of one vote a year ago, and it was a matter of common knowledge that he would not be confirmed by the Senate again, even if he should receive reappointment. Whereupon he filed his resignation (?) with the President, effective the day his term expired, and was not reappointed. I shall have more to say about him later, as well as about the Radio Corporation of America.

Even Commissioner Caldwell made the following admission upon cross-examination at the hearings:

Mr. DAVIS. Do you consider that there is involved in this problem nothing except a technical, theoretical, inanimate determination, that there is no human equation in it, that the rights of the different peoples in the different sections are not involved? Do you want us to understand that that is your position?

Mr. CALDWELL. No one could have gone through the Radio Commission for two years and not realize that there is very much of a human problem connected with it.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. And, consequently, is not the determination in any instance of who shall have these valuable and much sought after privileges a judicial function, such as Secretary Hoover refers to, and should be determined by some independent tribunal?

Mr. CALDWELL. Certainly the review of such controversies and the adjustment of such controversies can be settled more fairly and more wisely by a commission of five men than by any one man.

The extension of the authority of the commission which it has exercised since the passage of the 1927 radio act will have no other effect, as explained by the gentleman from New Jersey, than to procure a more orderly and more dignified and less complicated procedure.

As already explained, under the original law and after the expiration of the time during which the original authority of the Radio Commission was extended, even though you fail to enact this bill the Radio Commission will have authority in all matters referred to it by the Secretary of Commerce, in all matters appealed to it by any party aggrieved by any act of the Secretary of Commerce, and in all cases either before or after the expiration of the year, the commission has full and exclusive authority to revoke licenses.

It has reached the stage when every application for a license or for a better position in the spectrum or from more power involves a contest. There was a time when there were more broadcasting facilities and more commercial radio facilities than were demanded by the public; but now that situation is changed, and many, many more requests for broadcasting and commercial facilities are demanded than can be granted. In other words, there is a natural limitation under the present state of the art. So until this matter is more thoroughly stabilized any action of any consequence will in the final analysis have to go before the commission anyway.

However, the defeat of this bill would bring endless confusion and duplication of authority, and of action, and consequent loss of time and expense, which is wholly unnecessary and would not result if we pass this simple bill. This is the same as a portion of the bill we passed last year.

This bill limits the terms of the licenses during the next year to three months for broadcasting licenses and one year for commercial licenses; our purpose in that being that the situation should not be frozen until it is more stabilized, until there is a more perfect allocation, and until we think it safe for three or five year licenses to be issued. In that respect I want to state that we are acting in accordance with the advice of the former Secretary of Commerce and the President elect, Herbert Hoover, who before our committee at one of our hearings called attention to the fact that although there was no restriction upon him as Secretary of Commerce as to the term of a license, yet he had never issued one for a longer period than 90 days, and he never did; and neither has the commission. Secretary Hoover warned us against issuing licenses for too long a period or enacting a bill providing for such.

What are the arguments urged against this bill? Every member of this committee on both sides of the House, after having held hearings for approximately a month upon this bill, favor it, save the gentleman from California, Mr. FREE. The gentleman from California [Mr. FREE] criticises the distinguished chairman of the Federal Radio Commission, Judge Robinson, a former member of the Supreme Court of the State of West Virginia, who was appointed chairman of this commission by President Coolidge, and while perhaps it is not incumbent upon a member of the minority to defend the action of a President of the opposite party and one of his appointees, I am glad to state this: I never heard of Judge Robinson prior to his appointment to this position. However, by reason of being a member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I have come in personal contact with him, and I have heard him testify, and I have observed his work, and I think he is a high-class, intelligent, conscientious, patriotic public official. [Applause.] I wish that all the men on that commission were of the caliber of Judge Robinson. The gentleman from California [Mr. FREE] saw fit to read a few answers of his in which he was asked technical questions, and about what particular specific facilities had been granted here and there, when there are 612 broadcasting stations and literally thousands and thousands of licenses all told, and he criticized him because he, a member of the commission, did not carry all of those details in his head, but said that this information could be better furnished by the engineers or by the clerk of the committee. I invite the members of the committee to read the statement made by Chairman Robinson appearing on pages 7 to 10 of volume 1 of the hearings, in which he states in a dignified and logical and convincing manner the various reasons why the authority of this commission should be continued, stating specifically what they have done and what remains to be done, and if you will read that and not be convinced that there is much more to be done in the future than has been done in the past, I have nothing further to say. I have not the time to read it, but it in itself presents absolutely unanswerable arguments from a public standpoint in favor of the passage of this bill. While I am always ready to praise officials whom I think are entitled to praise, on the other hand, I have frequently taken occasion to criticize officials, and let me say that I do not indorse everything that has been done by this commission by any means.

I do not suppose any other member of our committee does. They have done many things directly different from what I would have done. I have criticized them at the committee and otherwise for certain policies which they pursued. I think they have made some serious mistakes in policy which I shall undertake to state in the RECORD, but probably will not have time to state during my time this afternoon. On the other hand, I think that they have done some splendid work. They have certainly been faithful, and instead of there being no further work for them, I say that there is every reason to believe that they will be busier during the next year, if possible, than they have been during the past. During the past year not one of them even took a vacation. They were on the job all of the time, busily engaged in their official duties, and I am sure that they will be in the future, because this is the most rapidly developing art and industry the world has ever seen. Some of the engineers before the committee said, and properly said, that this art is developing so rapidly that even engineers change their opinions every year or so, and they do. They said things a year ago that they now retract in the light of later developments. The first broadcasting station was established in 1921, less than eight years ago. To-day there are estimated to be 12,000,000 radio-receiving sets in American homes through which it is estimated there are listening approximately 40,000,000 American citizens. They have billions of dollars invested in radio apparatus. Last year the sales of radio apparatus in this country were estimated at $650,000,000 to $750,000,000, and it is increasing all of the time.

It may be surprising to some of you when I say that the commercial field of radio is more important than are the broadcasting features. That is a matter that is of even greater development and potential use than the broadcasting feature. Up until quite recently there was very little demand for those wave lengths for commercial use. There were more facilities than requests, so the Secretary of Commerce at first, and even the Federal Radio Commission at first, granted those privileges to whomsoever applied for them; but now they have proven so valuable and desirable that there is a general demand and a scramble and a fight for them, and they are talking about those frequencies being worth $1,000,000 apiece.

It now devolves on this commission to determine policies with respect to what classes shall receive those facilities and what classes shall not, and then after they determine the general policies to determine as a quasi judicial body which applicants in the respective classes shall be licensed to use them and which shall not. In other words, as Secretary Hoover well said, the important functions are quasi judicial in character. As stated by the gentleman from Michigan, Secretary Hoover served several years as the sole authority, so far as there was authority upon radio, and had more experience in that particular than any other man. He studied the problem as few public officials or others have, and had a broader conception of the problem than most anybody, because he looked at it not only as an engineer but as an executive and a statesman. What did he say about whether we should have a commission?

Secretary Hoover made a statement in January, 1926, before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries at hearings being held on the bill which culminated in the radio act of 1927. He stated in part as follows:

> I have always taken the position that unlimited authority to control the granting of radio privileges was too great a power to be placed in the hands of any one administrative officer, and I am glad to see the checks and reviews which are imposed upon that power under this bill.
>
> As some of the members of the committee know, I have felt that provision for a board of reference should be somewhat tightened up over the present construction of the bill; in other words, that any question of dispute as to who shall enjoy the radio privilege may be referred to that body, not through the volition of the Secretary of Commerce but by either applicant or disputant in the question. * * * The privilege of broadcasting will be of enhancing importance, and so long as the art fails to develop sufficient channels so that all comers may broadcast that privilege will accrue more and more of public importance. And it is for that reason that I emphasize the necessity of some independent body being able to settle public disputes as to the radio privilege. * * *
> In the main, the bill accords with what I believe to be the present public necessity, and the one suggestion I have made is one that I believe could well be incorporated. Other than that, I believe your subcommittee has worked out, under the leadership of Mr. WHITE, now extending as their labors have over a period of years, a bill which fits the intrinsic situation.

Then Secretary Hoover was asked the following question, and made the following answer:

> Mr. MCKEOWN. Mr. Secretary, I would like to ask a question. There is a great deal of feeling among the people in the West against the creating of any more Government commissions, if possible, and I just wanted to know if, in your judgment, it would be possible properly to administer this law without the creation of a new commission?
> Secretary HOOVER. Well, as I have said, I think that you are confronted with placing too great an authority in the hands of an individual. The very large problem that is going to rise is the problem of contests between cities and between States as to the erection of broadcasting stations, and between individuals, contests between different public journals, and between educational institutions and private concerns, as to who shall enjoy this privilege. Now, the wisest person in the world is not wise enough to determine that problem, in my view. * * *

He said this to our committee, before there was a commission. He said it, although it involved depriving him of power and authority which he had. He gave his indorsement to the pending bill in every particular, except that he suggested that the authority of the commission be broadened and expended over what was then provided in the bill.

On the same occasion Secretary Hoover also approved the idea of regional representation upon the commission, as shown by the following question and answer:

Mr. McKEOWN. Would it be the purpose to allocate the membership of the commission to the various districts?

Secretary HOOVER. That was the idea, to have a representative from each district.

Secretary Hoover made that statement some years ago, and, as shown, he gave his approval to the idea of regional representation upon that commission—contrary to the argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], who is so much opposed to sectionalism when that sectionalism, if permitted to continue, would permit his city to have the cream of the broadcasting facilities in this country. [Laughter.]

Now, the gentleman from California devoted most of his time to a discussion of one action of this commission. It had acted in thousands of cases, but he devoted most of his time to this one particular instance, and in fact the gentleman from California was so persistent with respect to this particular matter that upon his request our committee devoted several days to investigating this particular agreement to license, upon certain conditions, the Universal Wireless Co.; and after there was a full investigation, my opinion is that every member of that committee was convinced that the commission had not only not committed any crime, had not only not done any wrong, but that they had done the right thing, with the exception of the gentleman from California [Mr. FREE]. If you are interested in this particular question, I invite your attention to the voluminous hearings upon the subject. I am not going to enter into any detailed discussion of it. Why has propaganda been so assiduously disseminated, attacking the Federal Radio Commission for its action? Who is directly interested? Why, the Radio Corporation of America, which asked for the same grant—in fact, a much larger grant—to be made to them instead of to the Universal Wireless. And no doubt the wire companies—the telephone and telegraph companies—perhaps would rather not have wireless competition in this country.

The Universal Wireless Co., more than a year ago, made application for licenses to use 40 short waves or commercial frequencies. For what? Their proposal was that, if they be given that grant, they will expend not less than $25,000,000 in establishing inland point to point radiotelegraph service between 110 principal cities in the United States embraced within every State of the Union. All they asked was that they be given an opportunity, and if they do not make good, if they do not do what they say they will do and what they say they can do, why they have nothing; the agreement to grant them the licenses will become null and void. The Federal Radio Commission first gave them an experimental license, which is generally granted to anybody for experimentation because the commission naturally are interested and should be interested in the development of the art.

They demonstrated to the satisfaction of disinterested engineers and Government engineers that they could do more than any other company had ever done or claimed it could do; that they could send radio messages through their transmitters and through the air with a one-tenth of 1 per cent kilocycle separation, whereas nobody else has sent messages on less than 2 per cent kilocycle separation and nobody else is claiming to be able to send messages on less than 1 per cent separation. They propose to send 20 messages where heretofore only 1 has been sent. Commander Craven of the Navy and others witnessed their demonstration. They examined the instruments closely and repeatedly, and gave the opinion that it was feasible and practicable, and that it could be done, and that they were doing it in their demonstrations.

The commission made investigations as to the moral and financial responsibility of the officers and directors of this company. They even sent a member of the commission to Buffalo, N. Y., where most of the officials reside, to make an investigation. They investigated them in Bradstreet's and in Dun's. They investigated them in various different ways, and they reached their conclusion, which was likewise verified before our committee by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEMPSEY] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], our own colleagues, that the officials and directors of the Universal Wireless Co. are morally and financially responsible and are able to raise the $25,000,000 among themselves without selling any stock. However, suppose that this company should offer a part of its stock to the general public. Would there be anything wrong or unusual in that procedure? If such a course would be censurable, practically all corporations of any consequence are subject to censure.

As before indicated, after a year's investigation and consideration, having been satisfied as to the moral and financial responsibility of the applicants, and of the tremendous advance over anything now in use of the apparatus of the Universal Co., and of its feasibility, and of its very great importance and usefulness from a public standpoint, the Federal Radio Commission agreed to grant licenses to the Universal Co. for the use of 40 frequencies to establish a radiotelegraphic service as a public utility between 110 cities, located in all States of the Union; such grant to be upon condition that the company establish and put into operation stations in a specified number of cities per annum, stations in all of the 110 cities to be established and in successful operation within three years; if the said company does not successfully comply with its proposal and the requirements stated, the agreement to grant such licenses shall become null and void.

In this connection I wish to state that I am not interested to the slightest degree in the Universal Wireless Co. I have never even met any of its officials; even their Washington representative has never called upon me, and I have never seen him except at the committee hearings.

However, I am very much interested in the policies to be pursued with respect to the assignment of what are termed "commercial wave lengths or frequencies."

The Federal Radio Commission has been confronted with the determination of three important policies, as follows:

First. As to whether licenses for the frequencies in the commercial band should be granted to public utilities to render a service to the general public or to private concerns to be used in their own interest.

Second. As to whether licenses should be granted to public utilities to render an inland radiotelegraphic service in competition with wire utilities.

Third. As to whether a monopoly in radio communication should be still further fostered and strengthened.

The grant to the Universal Wireless Co. constitutes, at least in part, a correct decision with respect to all of these policies. For that reason I approve the action of the Radio Commission in that particular.

I sincerely trust that the Radio Commission will speedily, effectually, and finally determine all of these policies in the public interest as indicated.

Although then contending and still contending that the art has not developed to the extent—which is doubtless true with respect to the Radio Corporation of America—that a point-to-point radiotelegraphic service in the United States can be successully established and maintained, nevertheless, many months after the Universal Co. had made its application, the Radio Corporation of America made application for the use of a much larger number of frequencies for a much more restricted service.

To quote their own language, the application of the Radio Corporation was as follows:

Radio Corporation of America's applications pending before the Federal Radio Commission for domestic radio services contemplate communication among 28 American cities. The cities in question have been selected, having regard primarily to the volume of international telegraph traffic originating in or destined to them. Primarily the circuits sought to be established were selected as those best adapted as feeders to the Radio Corporation of America's international system, and these circuits, I believe, will furnish the minimum number of domestic connections which would enable Radio Corporation of America effectively to compete in international services with the cables operated in connection with the domestic land lines of the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Postal Telegraph Co.

Summing up our applications, we seek from the commission 67 additional frequencies in the bands between 3,000 and 6,000 kilocycles and 25 additional frequencies in the bands between 6,000 and 23,000 kilocycles, and authorization to make shared use of 43 of the transoceanic frequencies heretofore awarded us and a shared use of 23 of the frequencies now requested, with which we will expect to operate 148 channels.

Besides asking for a much larger grant for a much less public service, it will be noted that the primary purpose of the Radio Corporation of America application was to establish feeders for their international radio communication services in which they have an admitted monopoly in radio communication between the United States and 30 foreign countries.

The Radio Corporation of America insisted that, if the application of the Universal Wireless Co. should be granted, there would be nothing left for the Radio Corporation of America in the domestic field. It really resolved itself down to a contest between these two companies, and the Radio Corporation of America boldly insisted, in effect, that because they had a monopoly in international radio communication they should likewise be granted a monopoly in the domestic field.

Disregarding altogether the monopoly feature, the Radio Commission could not in the public interest have consistently reached any other decision than that which they did reach.

The Radio Corporation of America and its affiliated companies have either an absolute or a substantial monopoly in all branches of the radio industry.

They have a large part of the choicest broadcasting facilities. In addition to the broadcasting stations directly owned and operated by them, the Radio Corporation of America, the General Electric, and the Westinghouse organized and own the stock in the National Broadcasting Co., which renders a chain service. Of the 40 cleared channels, which are the only channels upon which stations are authorized to operate with more than 1,000 watts, stations receiving the National Broadcasting Co.'s service are operating on 27 cleared channels.

The Radio Corporation of America has 88 call licenses to use 130 frequencies with an aggregate power of 7,355,750 watts in international communication services; it is authorized to use 200,000 watts power on each of 11 frequencies, and is authorized to use 80,000 watts power on each of 62 frequencies. Its subsidiary, the Illinois Radio Corporation of America, is authorized to use 10 frequencies with 1,000 watts power each for commercial service on the Great Lakes. Its subsidiary, the Radio Marine Corporation of America, is authorized to use 24 frequencies with an aggregate power of 31,200 watts in ship to shore and shore to ship commercial business.

The total power authorized to be used by all other commercial stations combined amounts to only 1,268,560 watts; these licenses with a very few exceptions only authorize the licensees to send their own private messages and not to engage in the public-utility service.

I have not had time recently to summarize same, but will state that the Radio Corporation of America and its affiliated companies are granted an overwhelming percentage of the radio experimental facilities.

Wherefore the only complaint which the Radio Corporation of America can have is that it has not been granted an absolute monopoly in all the fields of radio communication. I do not believe that the Members of Congress or the public generally will agree that such is a just complaint.

In this connection it is well to quote the words of President-elect Herbert Hoover who, when Secretary of Commerce nearly five years ago, with a marvelous grasp of the subject and a prophetic vision, stated at a hearing of the merchant marine and fisheries, in part, as follows:

> The question of monopoly in radio communication must be squarely met. It is not conceivable that the American people will allow this new-born system of communication to fall exclusively into the power of any individual, group, or combination. Great as the development of radio distribution has been, we are probably only at the threshold of development of one of the most important human discoveries bearing on education, amusement, culture, and business communication. It can not be thought that any single person or group shall ever have the right to determine what communication may be made to the American people.
> We can not allow any single person or group to place themselves in a position where they can censor the material which shall be broadcast to the public.
> Radio communication is not to be considered as merely a business carried on for private gain, for private advertisement, or for entertainment of the curious. It is a public concern impressed with the public trust and to be considered primarily from the standpoint of public interest to the same extent and upon the basis of the same general principles as our other public utilities.

DAVIS EQUALIZATION AMENDMENT AND REALLOCATION OF NOVEMBER 11, 1928

I have had numerous colleagues and others to ask me about the reallocation of broadcasting facilities made by the Federal Radio Commission effective November 11, 1928, and as to whether such reallocation was in accordance with what is generally referred to as the "Davis equalization amendment." I only have time to discuss these matters briefly and generally.

The first broadcasting stations just grew up. Beginning with the licensing of the first broadcasting station in 1921 and continuing for a few years thereafter, the broadcasting facilities exceeded the requests therefor. As new applications for broadcasting licenses were received they were assigned a place on some channel, frequently upon the channel they requested, and generally authorized to use any power which they sought. Broadcasting grew with great rapidity, with the result that there developed an unscientific allocation, there being an excess of broadcasting stations in certain localities and a scarcity or entire absence of same in many other sections of the country. Such a situation was greatly augmented by what is generally referred to as the "breakdown" following the Zenith Corporation decision in 1926, in which the court held that under the existing radio law the Secretary of Commerce could not refuse a license to any applicant. Thereafter numerous existing stations immediately proceeded to use what they considered more desirable wave lengths and to increase their power as they saw proper. Many of the stations went on the air for the first time. Consequently, when the 1927 radio act became a law and the Federal Radio Commission was established and appointed they found a very chaotic, unscientific, and inequitable condition in the broadcast field. For reasons which I shall not take time to enumerate, the Radio Commission made but little progress during the first year. There was still widespread confusion and complaint.

As concrete evidence of the situation then obtaining, the third zone, embracing 10 Southern States, had the largest population of any of the zones and the largest area except the fifth zone; in other words, the third zone had 23.14 per cent of the population and 21.33 per cent of the geographical area of the Nation, and yet only had 7.8 per cent of the national broadcasting station power; it had less than 50,000 watts power in the aggregate, whereas there were several stations with 50,000 watts power each and the national power exceeded 600,000 watts. Although at that time the commission had cleared 25 wave lengths, yet not one of these cleared wave lengths had been allocated to the third zone. Southern broadcasters were pleading in vain for better broadcasting facilities. Gross discriminations and inequalities existed throughout the country, not only as between different radio zones, but as between different States and sections within the radio zones.

This was the situation when I drafted and proposed the amendment directing an equalization of broadcasting facilities, which was favorably reported by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and which passed the House by a majority of more than 100 votes. It passed the Senate practically unanimously, with certain amendments in the form of supplementary language of an interpretative or explanatory character. The bill went to conference and was reported to and adopted by the House and Senate with amendments of the character indicated and was approved by the President March 28, 1928. Omitting some of the supplementary language of an interpretative nature, this amendment provides:

> It is hereby declared that the people of all the zones established by section 2 of this act are entitled to equality of radio broadcasting service, both of transmission and of reception, and in order to provide said equality the licensing authority shall as nearly as possible make and maintain an equal allocation of broadcasting licenses, of bands of frequency or wave lengths, of periods of time for operation, and of station power, to each of said zones when and in so far as there are applications therefor; and shall make a fair and equitable allocation of licenses, wave lengths, time for operation, and station power to each of the States, the District of Columbia, the Territories and possessions of the United States within each zone, according to population.

This amendment was strenuously fought by certain radio interests, particularly the radio monopoly, and by the representatives of certain cities which had far beyond their fair share of broadcasting facilities. This fight was led by Commissioner O. H. Caldwell, of New York, who grossly misrepresented this amendment and the result it would effect.

For instance, when the bill embracing the equalization amendment was reported and was pending in the House, Commissioner Caldwell gave out a statement viciously criticizing the amendment; he and others opposed to a fair equalization of broadcasting facilities gave his statement wide publicity in the press and otherwise, among other things, mailing copies to the broadcasting stations throughout the country. In this statement Caldwell, among other things, stated that the enactment "of this abominable redistribution clause would wreck our present wonderful broadcasting structure."

After the Federal Radio Commission had made the reallocation effective November 11, 1928, Commissioner Caldwell gave out a statement, after counseling with a majority of the members of the commission, as he admitted at the recent hearings; he admitted that he was correctly quoted in the statement, in which he stated in part as follows:

> November 11: The Federal Radio Commission carried out the latest radio mandate of Congress that the radio broadcasting wave lengths, powers, and other facilities be redistributed equally among all citizens of the Republic—that is, be subdivided among the States and sections of the Nation according to population.

This redistribution of the country's radio ordered by the national lawmaking body, of course, means the withdrawal of wave lengths from some States and communities which have heretofore been enjoying an excess of broadcasting stations and the reassignment of such waves to States in sections heretofore prevented from having broadcasting stations because the national spectrum was full.

I quote further from the hearings:

Mr. DAVIS. Now, proceeding with this statement:

"With such redistribution of wave lengths and upsetting of the familiar broadcasting structure made inevitable by the equalizing amendment of the 1928 act of Congress, it has been the concern of the commission, while faithfully carrying out the equalizing or 'proportionality' feature of the act, to see that a high standard of radio service be restored to the American public, which has suffered two years of interference and heterodynes growing out of the law's breakdown in 1926."

Then, in the last paragraph, you are reported as saying as follows:

"The patience of the public is therefore invited, with the knowledge that through the new plan there will eventually be restored to the American public radio broadcasting service without parallel in the history of the art."

Mr. CALDWELL. I think that is true. I think that is the consensus of all engineering opinion on the subject, sir.

* * * * * * *

Mr. DAVIS. Speaking further along the line of that situation, you wrote an article, did you not, which appeared in the Star of January 1, 1929? I presume that is authentic. Your name is at the head of it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes; I think I wrote that.

Mr. DAVIS. This article starts off as follows:

"The outlook for radio and for radio broadcasting never was brighter than it now appears, standing at the threshold of 1929."

That is about a month and 20 days after the November allocation went into effect; and then you state further:

"While the reduction of local radio service in certain parts of the Atlantic seaboard will occasion some inconvenience as compared with the former excess of broadcasting enjoyed by eastern listeners, it is believed that citizens thus deprived will cheerfully accept this equalization and redistribution, knowing that the facilities thus lost by them are being made available to other American citizens in other parts of the country which formerly had little or no radio service."

Do you think that there is anything wrong in that?

Mr. CALDWELL. I believe that is a proper statement.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there anything wrong in that picture and in that principle?

Mr. CALDWELL. No, indeed.

Commissioner Caldwell also declared in the statement which he gave out in opposition to the equalization amendment that this amendment would bring the broadcasting facilities and station power of the other zones down to the power and facilities in the lowest zone, calling attention to the fact that the third zone had less than 50,000 watts power, and so forth, as he admitted at the hearings. He admitted that he was likewise wrong in that statement, as shown by the following quotation from the hearings:

Mr. DAVIS. Was there anything in that equalization amendment that directed an increase or decrease of the aggregate national power?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; very wisely not.

Mr. DAVIS. As a matter of fact, it did not compel power in other zones to be brought down to that of the lowest zone, did it?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. DAVIS. And in that connection did you not call attention to the fact that one zone, the third zone, had only about 50,000 watts power, and the result would be that the other zones would be brought down to that zone?

Mr. CALDWELL. That was the legal interpretation upon the first study, that it would be necessary to equalize the power. I think the commission has properly and in the public interest solved the issue by using this other method.

Mr. DAVIS. Do you now think, on the present interpretation of that equalization amendment, that it directed any such result as that?

Mr. CALDWELL. No.

Mr. DAVIS. You are satisfied that you were wrong when you first interpreted it?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

In this same connection I wish to call attention to the fact that Commissioner Caldwell stated at the hearings a year ago that if we undertook to build up the States to the power levels of New Jersey, New York, and Illinois "radio is absolutely ruined"; and largely upon his insistence, and the insistence of hired, interested engineers, the commission did the very thing which Caldwell said would absolutely ruin radio. They have increased the station power in every zone and in practically every State, including New York and Illinois, as shown in the hearings, from which I quote, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. I have here an official statement prepared and furnished to the committee by the Radio Commission, I presume through its secretary, dated January 17, 1929, a broadcast summary, in which it gives the number of stations prior and subsequent to the November 11 allocation and the same with respect to the power in the different States and the different zones, and it shows that in the first zone, before the allocation, there were 103 stations, and now there are 116. There was an increase instead of a reduction there, was there not?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. And then it shows that prior to the reallocation the total station power in the first zone was 207,175 watts, and that under the reallocation of November 11, 1928, there were 212,070 watts, and, in addition to that, an authorization of another 50,000-watt station, which has not gone into use yet, which would make a total for the first zone of 261,820, as compared with 207,175 watts before the reallocation under the equalization amendment.

Now, it did not bring that first zone down to the lowest zone in power, did it?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; the result of the amendment itself there was to actually increase the power of that zone.

* * * * * * *

Mr. DAVIS. But, excepting that station, these records show that there was an increase in power in the first zone.

Then we will take the second zone. There were 105 stations, and there are now 107. There was 109,867 watts power, and there are now 179,350, and when certain grants go into effect which are not now in effect there will be a total of 192,350 watts power.

Then you take the third zone, as to which it was claimed they were not enterprising, that they were not wanting stations and not able to build stations, and so forth, and, therefore, everybody else would have to be brought down to them. This report shows that there were 113 stations in the third zone and that there are now 115, and that there was immediately prior to the reallocation 66,060 watts power, and in that connection I want to say that there was some increase in the South, as you will recall, immediately after the passage of the 1928 bill, which ran it up from what was about 50,000 before to 66,000, and there is now in use in this third zone, this "backward" zone, 194,820 watts, and you have granted construction permits which, if used, would run the total power in that zone up to 303,820.

Now you come to the fourth zone. They had 169 stations. They now have 156. They had, however, in excess of anybody else, and there has been some reduction there.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do those figures show the great reduction in time on the air, because, after all, that is the factor. There has been a reduction in the fourth zone of time on the air, I believe.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes; I assume that you have undertaken to equalize the discrepancy in stations. I was simply showing the situation before and subsequently.

Then, before the reallocation, the fourth zone had 165,600 watts power, and they now have in use 295,188 watts power.

Then, in the fifth zone, they had 128 stations, and now have 133. They had previously 63,900 watts power, and they now have 112,080 watts power, and if they use the authority that has been given under construction permits it will be increased to 161,080.

This makes a total of national power of 1,219,250 watts as compared with 612,662 before the reallocation. In other words, it has been doubled.

Mr. CALDWELL. All of that increase in power, of course, has occurred on the cleared channels—in other words, where it is desirable that it should occur.

Mr. DAVIS. When you were before this committee a year ago, you made this statement during the time that Mr. Briggs was cross-examining you:

"Commissioner CALDWELL. It has been the disposition of the commission exactly to carry out that thought, but I want to call your attention to the fact that this provision is the most serious clause in the law and the one clause which may nullify the usefulness of the rest of the law, for this reason"——

I want to say, parenthetically, that the provision which was under discussion was the provision in the 1927 law directing an equitable distribution. [Reading:]

"At the present time, I think, approximately five of the States have the large amount of power. There are 37 States that are below the average. Now, if we take the States of New Jersey, New York, and Illinois, those States have from three to four times the power of the rest of the country. If we undertake to bring up the other 37 States to the power levels of those States, radio is absolutely ruined."

* * * * * * *

Mr. DAVIS. Now, you keep talking about cleared channels. The total national power under the reallocation has been increased about 600,000 watts over what it was before. What portion of this 600,000 watts has been assigned to stations of the cleared channels?

Mr. CALDWELL. Undoubtedly practically all of it.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Did I understand you to say that the entire increase in power as shown on this tabulation here is due to the increases given to the cleared channels?

Mr. CALDWELL. I think that substantially all of it is of that character.

In this connection, I shall insert in the RECORD as Appendix A the official statement referred to, furnished by the Radio Commission, giving a broadcast summary in which the situation is shown prior and subsequent to the November 11, 1928, allocation, given by zones and States.

The clearing of these 40 channels necessarily resulted in still further crowding the stations on the remaining 50 channels. All of the stations authorized to use more than 1,000 watts power are on the cleared channels. There are 85 stations on the 40 cleared channels and they are authorized to use a total of 936,400 watts power. On the other hand, there are 542 broadcasting stations on the remaining 50 channels and they are authorized to use an aggregate power of 282,850 watts. Besides, 12 of the said 50 channels are shared with Canada. There are 259 local stations on 6 of the 50 channels, an average of 43 stations per channel.

There are chain stations on 38 of the 40 cleared channels, of which 27 are receiving programs from the National Broadcasting Co. and 11 from the Columbia Broadcasting Co. I shall insert in the RECORD as Appendix B a list of the stations on the 40 cleared channels, showing those affiliated with the National Broadcasting Co. network and those affiliated with the Columbia Broadcasting Co. network.

In making the reallocation effective November 11, 1928, the commission substantially followed a plan submitted by a committee of radio engineers composed of R. H. Marriott, C. W. Horn, L. E. Whittemore, and Dr. J. H. Dellinger. Mr. Horn was then and is now in the employ of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., one of the leading members of the radio monopoly, and which corporation had several broadcasting stations and was otherwise deeply interested in radio. For instance, the Westinghouse Co. manufactures broadcasting apparatus, and they receive over $300,000 for apparatus capable of broadcasting with 50,000 watts power, so that they were naturally very much interested in as many cleared channels and as many high-powered stations as possible. Mr. Whittemore was then and is now in the employ of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., another important member of the radio monopoly, which is likewise vitally interested in different phases of the radio industry. Among other things, the chain programs are carried from station to station over the wires of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and its subsidiaries, and the president of the National Broadcasting Co. stated at the hearings that they paid this company $2,000,000 for such service last year; consequently Mr. Whittemore's employer was vitally interested in as many chain stations as possible and such stations having as desirable assignments as possible. Mr. Whittemore is reputed to have drafted the plan under discussion.

A plan of such biased authorship could not be expected to be ideal from the standpoint of the general public or the independent broadcasting stations.

While the commission under their reallocation made a fairly equal distribution of broadcasting facilities between the different zones, speaking generally, and in some respects made a more scientific allocation, yet, on the other hand, they marred their good work in this respect by following the advice and insistence of Commissioner Caldwell and radio engineers either in the employ or under the influence of interested concerns.

First. In clearing 40 channels and crowding 86 per cent of the broadcasting stations together on the remaining 50 channels, a portion of which also had Canadian stations on them;

Second. By granting superpower to stations on the cleared channels; and Third. By assigning 38 of the 40 cleared channels to chain stations, including all of the superpower stations. These chain stations on cleared wave lengths are authorized to use considerably more than half of the total national power authorized to be used by the 627 broadcasting stations.

The plan in question purported to provide for three classes of stations—national, regional, and local.

The so-called national stations are those on cleared channels with high power. However, there is no such thing as a national broadcasting station, as is now admitted by all persons familiar with the subject who have any regard for the truth. Even Commissioner Caldwell admitted that at the recent hearings. Mr. M. H. Aylesworth, president of the National Broadcasting Co., testified on this subject at the recent hearings, as follows:

Mr. DAVIS. As you yourself correctly said, and contrary to the opinion that formerly obtained, there is no such thing as a national station.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. And no station can possibly give anything like satisfactory service even to a comparatively small part of the country, much less to the whole country; that is true, is it not?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. You are right. Anybody who thinks otherwise is kidding himself, Judge.

And yet Commissioner Caldwell and certain others representing the big interests are insisting on clearing 10 additional channels, and forcing all except a few on those channels onto the already overcrowded remaining uncleared channels.

Mr. John V. L. Hogan, a consulting radio engineer of New York, made a statement and various suggestions to the Federal Radio Commission when they were holding hearings and receiving suggestions with respect to the reallocation of broadcasting facilities. He admitted that he had represented different members of the Radio Trust professionally and that he had consulted with their engineers in regard to the question of reallocation. Commissioner Caldwell thought so well of Mr. Hogan's testimony that he distributed his statement, but without the cross-examination; he sent a copy to me. Mr. Hogan is undoubtedly regarded as one of the leading radio engineers. His statement before the Radio Commission was inserted in the recent hearings.

Mr. Hogan stated that—

Five-hundred-watt stations may be duplicated if they are kept about 1,800 miles apart. That is to say, it is possible to get two or three 500-watt stations on each channel if they are geographically kept about 1,800 miles apart.

Dr. J. H. Dellinger, of the Bureau of Standards, gave practically the same advice to the Radio Commission. He also said last April:

The interrelation between frequency and power is the hard problem. It is only by proper adjustment of these two factors with due regard to geographical separations that there can be any hope of reducing interference and making any material improvement in the present chaotic situation.

And yet under the reallocation, by reason of so many cleared channels, the commission placed from four to ten 500-watt, 750-watt, and 1,000-wat stations on the same channel. For instance, on the frequency of 550 kilocycles, they placed five 500-watt stations, one 750-watt station, one 1,000-watt station, and one 250-watt station. On the frequency of 560 kilocycles, they placed four 500-watt stations, three 1,000-watt stations, one 2,500-watt station for daytime operation, and one 3,500-watt station for daytime operation. These are typical examples. It is true that some stations on these channels share time, but in practically every instance there are considerably more than three of such stations operating simultaneously.

Mr. Hogan also stated that—

One-hundred-watt stations may be distributed about seven to the channel if they are kept about 900 miles apart.

That, as I say, is for a set-up which will give substantially the full service range that is practicable, before the noise level is reached, to each of the stations.

And yet on the six channels assigned to local stations there are a total of 259 stations, of which 95 are 100-watt stations authorized to operate full time, seventy-one 100-watt stations which divide time, eight 250-watt stations authorized to operate in the daytime, besides 56 stations of less than 100-watt power authorized to operate full time, and 29 stations authorized to operate part time with less than 100-watt power. In other words, there are allocated to these channels an average of sixteen 100-watt stations authorized to operate full time, twelve 100-watt stations authorized to divide time, eight stations of less power authorized to divide time, and one and two-thirds stations authorized to operate in the daytime on 250 watts. Furthermore, two of these channels are shared with Canada.

I shall insert in the RECORD as Appendix C the table showing the stations operating on these six channels.

Wherefore, in the light of the advice of the radio engineers, it was inevitable that such an allocation would not prove satisfactory to the independent stations or the listening public.

Assuming for the sake of argument that we should have some cleared channels, I respectfully insist that 25 of such channels would be ample, avoid such crowding of the stations, and attain much better results.

Upon that question I wish to quote from Lewis B. F. Raycroft, vice president of the National Electrical Manufacturers Association, who made a statement at the hearing before the Radio Commission at the general allocation hearings last April, in which he said:

An examination of the existing allocations indicates quite clearly that 28 of the 39 stations now authorized to use 5 kilowatts or more are of a character to justify their being considered for exclusive channels. These 28 stations are on channels which could be cleared without great difficulty. There appears to be no present basis for clearing more than this number of channels.

On the subject of high power I am convinced that no broadcasting station should be authorized to use more than 5,000 watts power, or 10,000 watts as the very limit. No higher power is needed by a broadcasting station for any legitimate purpose, and any higher power will work havoc with other stations by its blanketing and heterodyning effects.

There are many 500 and 1,000 watt stations which can be satisfactorily heard over large areas—after midnight when the superpower stations have gone off of the air. There were recently a number of notices in the press of station KLCN, at Blytheville, Ark., operating with 7½-watts power, being distinctly heard at various points in the East. It is needless to state that this reception was after midnight. Similar instances of many other low-power stations can be cited. All of which goes to show that high power is not necessary to attain a reasonable distance and also that the superpower stations drown out the other stations, so that they can not be heard except when the high-powered stations are not operating.

For all practical and useful purposes a 5,000-watt station with proper apparatus and properly operated will serve as wide an area and serve it as well as a 50,000-watt station. As evidence of that I shall insert in the RECORD as Appendix D a letter from Mr. Burridge D. Butler, publisher of the Prairie Farmer and owner of station WLS, together with a summary, by States, of 12,961 voluntary letters and telegrams received from listeners in 46 States during one week, advising that they had heard and enjoyed the programs from this station. Station WLS uses the best crystal control and modification panel.

I venture the assertion that no 50,000-watt station in the country can excel that record.

As reflecting on this subject I shall insert in the RECORD as Appendix E a letter from Mr. W. J. Buttfield, of Plainfield, N. J., and as Appendix F one from Mr. C. W. Hamilton, of Brookfield, Mass. These are typical of numerous letters received from all over the country.

Commissioner Caldwell is perhaps the most inveterate and intemperate advocate of high power in the country, and yet upon cross-examination at the hearings a year ago, when seeking an excuse for not having authorized any stations outside of the East to use superpower, he stated:

Judge, our experience with these 50-kilowatt stations has been that they cause such interference with both sides of them that they render those channels practically useless and I think we should go slowly in granting this increased power.

Mr. H. A. Bellows, manager of station WCCO, Minneapolis, Minn., formerly a member of the Federal Radio Commission and generally regarded as a radio expert, at the recent hearings agreed with the statement of Caldwell just quoted.

If those superpower stations "cause such interference with both sides of them that they render those channels practically useless," it goes without saying that they cause interference on still other channels to an indefinite extent, dependent upon the kilocycle and geographical separation.

It is admitted by all the radio experts that the interference radius of a broadcasting station is from ten to one hundred times as great as the program radius.

Although practically all of the high-powered stations are chain stations, yet there is less reason for high power being employed by stations in the chain system than anywhere else. The chain stations are distributed throughout the country, the National Broadcasting Co. network embracing about 60 stations, and the Columbia network embracing 43 stations, and both networks still increasing. Chain programs are carried from station to station over telephone wires. It was proven at the hearings, and undisputed, that only six-tenths of 1 watt is required to transmit a chain program over the wire. Consequently, a chain station should only be permitted to operate with sufficient power to reach the listeners within its own area.

I could multiply indefinitely evidence against the advisability of high power. I expect to go into that subject more fully at a future time.

With respect to chain stations, I wish to state that I am not opposed to them. They are very useful and should have their proper place in the broadcast field, but they should not be permitted to practically monopolize the field. I have received more complaints about chain stations monopolizing the dial than any one other feature of radio. The listeners complain that when the chain stations are on the air, which is practically all of the time up until midnight, they drown out all other stations; wherever the listener turns the dial he hears the same program.

Mr. Bellows, before mentioned, in referring to the chain-program situation at the hearings, stated:

I believe that the duplication to which Mr. ABERNETHY has referred exists and is a somewhat serious menace to the rights of listeners to hear what programs they want.

In view of the fact that Mr. Bellows is manager of a chain station, it can not be claimed that he is prejudiced against them.

Commissioner Caldwell, in discussing the chain-program situation at the hearings a year ago, stated:

In other words, I think the analogy is like this: If you were giving a musicale at your house and you had selected six of the best musicians of the country to appear at this musicale, you would feel great confidence that you were going to have a wonderful musical evening; but, if one after another, they all go up and sing Annie Laurie—that is what we have discovered the chain stations are doing; they have all taken the same programs—you would feel that arrangement was entirely unsatisfactory, and certainly that identical arrangement is absolutely unsatisfactory in the public interest, and I feel your criticism is sustained. And I feel the next step of the commission, with the help of the other independent stations, is to substitute independent programs for a large number of chain programs on preferred channels, because those chain programs should be on local channels, wholly regional channels. There is no excuse for more than five of those chain programs being on national channels.

And yet he led the fight in having the Radio Commission assign 38 out of the 40 national channels to chain stations, and to grant practically all of the high power to these chain stations. If Commissioner Caldwell and his colleagues on the commission had pursued the course which he suggested, as above quoted, we would have an infinitely more satisfactory situation from the listeners' standpoint, not to speak of the independent stations, who have largely been crowded off of the radio map.

The baneful effects of the present chain situation can be largely eliminated in the manner suggested by Commissioner Caldwell in the above quotation, or by synchronization; that is, by requiring stations broadcasting the same program to use the same wave length. I am aware that the chain stations themselves do not want to synchronize and their engineers tell the Radio Commission that the art has not developed to such an extent that synchronization is practicable. Nevertheless, it is practicable and feasible and synchronization is being successfully done both in this country and in England.

The ideal broadcasting situation would be for the listener to be able to satisfactorily hear the programs from the stations within his reasonable range which he desires to hear and to be able to tune out those which he does not desire to hear. Such a situation can be reasonably attained under the equalization amendment by a proper allocation and the employment of correct policies and methods. However, such a situation can never even be approached with so many cleared channels, so much high power, the present chain situation, and so forth.

I sincerely trust that the Radio Commission will discard the disproven theories of technicians who admit that they change their views on radio every year or two and apply common sense to the solution of these problems. In this connection I quote from a recent address by President Coolidge as follows:

We need men of technical training. We could not maintain our modern life for any length of time without them. It is necessary for our progress to have individuals who make a life study of one subject to the exclusion of everything else. The danger to them and from them lies in their becoming lost in particulars. While they are wonderfully skilled in their own subject they often do not comprehend its relation to other subjects.

There would be a place in the world for the soldier and sailor who could see nothing but national defense, * * * and a place in every large enterprise for the experts in accounting, in production, in transportation, and in merchandising, though they might understand nothing of the broad principles of political economy. But these talents will reach their greatest usefulness only when directed and coordinated by the wisdom of a comprehending executive who may not always know, but who rarely fails to understand.

The accountants do not manage the banks, the mechanics do not manage the factories, the engineers do not manage the railroads, the navigators do not manage the steamship lines. And so the radio engineers should not be permitted to run the Radio Commission. This applies with peculiar force to the so-called radio experts who have "axes to grind."

APPENDIX A–1

The reduction of the number of frequencies allocated to each zone is due to the fact that the commission cleared 40 of the 90 channels, placing one or two stations on each of said cleared channels, thereby restricting their use, whereas previously there were a large number of stations assigned to these same channels, thus crediting their use to the different zones and States, according to the location of the stations formerly on said channels. However, this clearing of channels and the consequent restriction of their use was not directed by the Davis equalization amendment.

APPENDIX D

THE PRAIRIE FARMER

1230 WEST WASHINGTON BOULEVARD,
Chicago, Ill., January 30, 1929.

Hon. E. L. DAVIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE DAVIS: I have been greatly interested in your observations on high-powered radio stations, and in your efforts to improve conditions for the radio-listening public. Here are some things which I am sure will interest you:

WLS, the Prairie Farmer station, is a 5,000-watt station with a high percentage modulating system and crystal-control unit. It has been built the best that the brains of the radio engineers could devise.

During the past three weeks WLS received letters from its listeners as follows:

January 12: 10,479, for 46 States.
January 19: 12,261, for 45 States.
January 26: 12,961, for 46 States.

These were voluntary expressions from our listeners, mostly letters of appreciation for our programs which are designed primarily for rural listeners—that is, official detailed markets for Chicago and other centers, weather reports, farm news, and so forth. WLS is the only station devoted primarily to the agricultural interests. It is conducted by the Prairie Farmer to render a distinct service for the farm industry of the Nation.

These records were made in face of a number of 50,000-watt and other high-powered stations east of the Mississippi. It is my deliberate judgment that the character and quality of the programs are infinitely more important than the power of the station.

Sincerely yours,

BURRIDGE D. BUTLER, Publisher.

APPENDIX E

PLAINFIELD, N. J., December 18, 1928.

Hon. C. C. DILL,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Re your recent reported comments as to effect superpower broadcasting stations, it might be of interest to you to know that in Plainfield, N. J., WJZ at Bound Brook is audible in five distinct places on the dial, using the so-termed "one-spot" Radiola No. 60 superheterodyne.

The field strength of the first harmonic (say, at about 200 meters) of WJZ is about as great as at its assigned frequency, using any modern set. Not only do these high-powered stations play havoc with all others within a range of 40 kilocycles, but all low wave lengths (say, below 250 and down to 100 meters) must inevitably be heterodyned to such an extent as to become useless by the harmonics of superpowered stations.

Of course, if the purpose be to "crowd off the air" all but a favored few and generally "blanket the radio field," I can well understand Commissioner Caldwell's insistence upon superpower; also his reference to the transformation from a "lemon" handed out by Congress to a sweetened "lemonade" concocted by the commission; i. e., making the "advertising value of high-powered stations greater."

I trust the bill recently introduced by you will be enacted; a limit of 5,000 watts would be preferable.

* * * * * * *

Respectfully yours,

W. J. BUTTFIELD.

APPENDIX F

BROOKFIELD, MASS., April 12, 1928.

Hon. E. L. DAVIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: More power to you in your scotching of the radio hogs.

WGY at Schenectady is a pest with this great power which blasts out other stations; and to make it worse, this station fades miserably and also fluctuates to either side of its wave length.

Chain programs are acceptable when something of national importance is broadcasted, such as a President's address, etc., otherwise they are an abomination and a trespass on the rights of all who want to listen to some special program on a near-by wave length.

Associated stations broadcasting chain programs should be compelled to shift to the wave length of the master station during such chain programs; that is, all rebroadcasts should be on one wave length for one program. This would confine the multiplied volume to one channel. Of course, this would be added expense and trouble to the chain stations, but would remove annoyance to thousands of people who can not afford the most expensive radio receivers.

This would also obviate the necessity of anything greater than 10,000 watts power, as you wisely suggest.

The big-hog stations, such as WGY, WEAF, WJZ, and Chicago Tribune, are all faders, with blasting volume one minute, the next minute they fade to unsatisfactory volume or fluctuate off their wave length, so I always time in to a weaker rebroadcast station to get the program satisfactorily.

I am glad to know some one has courage enough to put the octopuses where they belong. Stand by your guns, and don't let the "engineers" (paid employees of the G. E. and R. C. A.) put over anything on the great multitude of ordinary folks, who can't afford to buy or operate "coast-to-coast screen-grid 14-tube superselectodynes."

Yours very truly,

C. W. HAMILTON,
Box 176, Brookfield, Mass.

P. S.: Fading and fluctuating stations should not be allowed to operate until they correct the defects. WBZ is powerful, but does not fade or fluctuate.

I have no connection with any radio station or business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. Prior to January 1, 1931, the licensing authority shall grant no license or renewal of license under the radio act of 1927 for a broadcasting station for a period to exceed three months and no license or renewal of license for any other class of station for a period to exceed one year.

Mr. FREE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FREE: Page 2, after line 9, add a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. The term of office of each member of the commission shall expire on February 23, 1930, and thereafter commissioners shall be appointed for service of 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 years, respectively, as provided in the radio act of 1927."

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the gentleman from California enumerated that in section 5 of the pending bill. He offers it as a new section?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I think it merely requires numbering as section 4 instead of section 5.

Mr. FREE. We inserted in this bill the language used in the last bill extending the life of the commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The commission is authorized to appoint a general counsel and pay him a salary of $10,000 per annum and not to exceed three assistants to such general counsel, at salaries of $7,500 each per annum. It may appoint such other legal assistants as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as from time to time may be appropriated for by Congress.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the numeral "4" on line 10 of page 2 and insert in lieu thereof the numeral "5." It becomes section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of Maine: Page 2, line 10, strike out "4" and insert "5."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, on the completion of the bill the committee automatically rises.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. TILSON, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. CRAMTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15430) continuing the powers and authority of the Federal Radio Commission under the radio act of 1927, and for other purposes, reported that that committee had directed him to report the same back to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the resolution under which this bill was considered the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WHITE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LOAD LINES FOR AMERICAN VESSELS

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I call up House Resolution 322.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana calls up House Resolution 322, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 322

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1781, an act to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the act and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by those favoring and opposing the act, the act shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the act for amendment the committee shall rise and report the act to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the act and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, if it is adopted, will make in order the consideration of Senate bill 1781, to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes. It comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Owing to the lateness of the hour, I do not desire to make any statement, and unless some gentleman on the other side wishes some time I shall move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think any member of the Committee on Rules desires any time but I would like to have 10 minutes yielded to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN] a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. PURNELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the necessity for load-line legislation is because of an attempt on the part of the United States to comply with the regulations that are imposed in foreign ports—that is to say, foreign countries require these load lines. They are provided for the safety of life at sea, and that is the main purpose underlying load-line legislation. The English nation and other great seafaring nations have these load-line regulations. The load lines are marked on the ships so that they can be seen when the ships are being loaded and these markings are on the ships in order to prevent loading beyond the safety point. They are known as Plimsoll markings and they are marked along the sides of the ships. There has been great difficulty in the United States in trying to get this legislation. For years and years we have tried to get it. The difficulty has arisen over the fact that some of us think that load lines should be applied to coastal and lake ships just as well as to foreign ships, but in order that this legislation may go through those who have adhered to that point of view have for the time being waived their objections. It causes a great deal of inconvenience and it causes a great deal of unnecessary expense to our ships going into foreign harbors where load lines are in effect. We think that in order to have safety at sea we should adopt a load line law in the United States.

Speaking for myself, I have always adhered to the idea that coastwise shipping ought to be included, the same as foreign-going vessels, but I am not making any contention for that in this bill, because it is important to have this legislation enacted at this time. Neither am I contending that it apply to the Great Lakes shipping, although, as I have thought, it should apply to the Great Lakes shipping.

We have as many disasters on our coastwise ships, and we have as many disaster on the Great Lakes, as we have on our foreign-going vessels. They say it is not necessary to apply this law to the Great Lakes, because the depth of the water through which the boats must ply in passing through the canals is so shallow that the boats can not be overloaded, and that therefore there is no loss of life on account of overloading, because if there was overloading the boats could not pass through these canals.

Mr. SHREVE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. SHREVE. I understand from what the gentleman has said that this law will not apply to the Great Lakes.

Mr. McKEOWN. It does not apply to shipping on the Great Lakes nor to barges in the coastwise trade.

Mr. SHREVE. The gentleman has correctly stated that the ships on the Great Lakes can not overload, because of the depth of the water.

Mr. BRIGGS. In the bill there is a provision which excepts barges and lumber schooners operating to and from contiguous territory in the coastwise trade.

Mr. McKEOWN. That is correct.

Mr. BRIGGS. And the bill does not apply to ships operating on the Great Lakes?

Mr. McKEOWN. The Great Lakes are entirely excluded.

Mr. DAVIS. If the gentleman will permit, I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he will find the exceptions cited in section 9 on page 9 of the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. If this is a necessity, why wait 18 months before the law goes into effect?

Mr. McKEOWN. That is in order to give the department time to set up an organization to carry out the provisions of the law. The law can not be put into effect immediately because it would be impossible. If that were done, requiring the boats to be immediately properly marked, they would come under the penalties provided in the bill. It is necessary to allow a certain time in which these boats may be properly marked. Therefore we do not put the law into effect immediately, because otherwise it would be detrimental and cost a lot of money.

Mr. PEERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. If the underlying principle in this bill is to provide greater safety for the seamen why should barges and lumber schooners be excepted?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will frankly say to the gentleman that this is the situation: It is primarily for the safety of crews and safety of passengers, and I think myself it will eventually be necessary to apply such a law to barges, but it is necessary at this time, from the information we have, that we pass this bill as soon as possible so that they can put this load line law into effect.

Mr. PEERY. The Senate bill provided for a load line wholly in foreign trade, did it not?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. You have now put in coastwise vessels, and you have engrafted upon that three exceptions.

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. If the underlying principle is to protect the lives of seamen, does not that apply with equal force to barges and lumber schooners?

Mr. McKEOWN. I am told that the barges are used principally on the inside, on the intercoastal canals. Furthermore, as to lumber schooners, I understand there is not much danger of their being overloaded because the cargo they carry is buoyant and raises the vessel, so that it does not have the effect of overloading.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. If that is true of a lumber schooner, it would also be true of a lumber steam vessel, would it not, and lumber steam vessels are included?

Mr. McKEOWN. The lumber schooner loads on the outside or on the decks, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I notice that in section 9 lumber schooners operating to and from territory contiguous to the United States are excepted from the provisions of this bill. Why is it that you exempt lumber schooners operating to and from territory contiguous to the United States and do not exempt lumber schooners that are engaged in trade between our different States?

Mr. McKEOWN. I will say to the gentleman that it is the consensus of opinion among a great many of the members of the committee that lumber schooners are exempt. I do not agree with that construction. As to contiguous territory that is because lumber schooners going from Seattle, we will say, up into the Canadian ports, have no load line and we would put a hardship on our vessels if we undertook to put a load line on them when they have to compete with the schooners of Canada.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Will the gentleman answer this further question? Why should there be a load line then as between Oregon and Washington, by way of illustration, or between Georgia and New Jersey?

Mr. McKEOWN. It is the contention of some of the members of the committee that they are not included. I can not agree with that.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McKEOWN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Speaking about schooners, has any load line been established for the rum runners?

Mr. McKEOWN. We are trying to put the Coast Guard out there to stop them and they are doing it rather effectively.

Mr. PURNELL. This is not a prohibition measure.

Mr. McKEOWN. I did not understand it had anything to do with prohibition.

Mr. PURNELL. It is not that kind of load line. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Does the gentleman have the approval of the admiral of the Oklahoma navy in his position?

Mr. McKEOWN. It has been submitted and found to be a very good bill and one that is very necessary. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I am assuming that the other Members who desire to ask questions are willing to ask them of the chairman of the committee when we go into Committee of the Whole, and if there is no further time desired by gentlemen on the other side, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1781) to establish load lines for American vessels, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman wish to provide for control of the time? Under the rule it is to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I presume I shall control the time in favor of the bill. I am not advised as to anyone in opposition to the bill.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that there are several of us who are opposed to the bill. Will the Chair grant one-half of the time to some one representing the opposition?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that one-half of the time may be controlled by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the time may be controlled one-half by himself and one-half by the gentleman from New Jersey. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1781, with Mr. CRAMTON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the necessity for this legislation is dictated by two major considerations. The load line is a mark placed upon the hull of the vessel below which it is unlawful or shall be unlawful to submerge that vessel.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Above.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is, you can submerge the vessel to that load line, but you can not submerge it so the water is above the load line. It is dictated by two major considerations—first of all, so it seems to me, a proper regard for the safety of the ship, for the safety of the crew, and for the safety of the cargo.

The United States has enacted no load line law, but every other principal maritime nation in the world has one. So far as I know there is no outstanding maritime nation in the world that does not have a law on its statute books of this general character with this general purpose in view.

And so let me repeat that the prime reason for the legislation is safety. Then there is another consideration. I suppose that practically every maritime nation in the world has a load line of its own. Under the practice for many years past when a vessel of the United States without a load line goes into a port of a foreign country they have been obliged to place on the hull a load line worked out in conformity with the foreign law, at the dictation of the foreign government, or the foreign governments have been considerate enough to waive the provisions of their law and their penalties and permit our vessels to sail from their port.

It has been usual for many years with respect to American vessels leaving foreign ports to give assurance, and to constantly renew the assurance, that soon the United States would work out a load line bill of its own, and place American vessels on the same footing as the foreign ship.

Now I think it is time—I do not conceive that anyone can controvert the proposition that if American vessels are to have upon them a load line when clearing from a foreign port or going from our port to a foreign port—that that load line should be determined under the rules and authority of American law, and not be put on there by foreign authorities under the necessities of foreign law. And so, for these two major considerations, your Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries have unanimously reported this legislation to the House.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield? I had heard some suggestion that this legislation did not affect coastwise traffic.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. If the gentleman will permit, I will discuss that very briefly. The bill as passed by the Senate related only to vessels of 250 tons or over, engaged in foreign trade. In that form it met one of the necessities of the case; it took care of the situation so far as foreign legislation and foreign government was concerned, but it entirely neglected that other consideration to which I have alluded, the regard of the safety of the ship, the safety of the crew, and the safety of the cargo.

There is no nation in the world that has a coastline like that of the United States. No vessel of any other nation in the world engaged in its coastwise trade goes on a voyage comparable with a vessel on a coastwise voyage of the United States. Take as an illustration a vessel in the coastwise trade going from Boston to Pensacola or down around Florida up into the Gulf; she is on a voyage comparable with an oversea voyage or a trip to a foreign port. Every consideration of safety that demands a load line on a vessel in the foreign trade applies equally to a vessel of the United States engaged in that character of coastwise trade.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. About this amendment in section 9. I want to ask why a lumber schooner operating to and from territory contiguous to the United States should be exempted, when a lumber schooner loaded, we will say, on Grays Harbor for an American port should not be?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. There is not any sensible reason under the sun if we regard only safety.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And why this amendment?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. We got into a very serious conflict in our committee over this bill. For the first time since I have been a Member of this House and on the Merchant Marine Committee, the American Steamship Owners Association, representing the largest group of steamship operators in the United States, came before our committee and urged that this load line should apply not only to vessels in the foreign trade but should apply to our coastwise trade. Then immediately came the question as to whether there were not certain exceptions to that general rule which should be made. First of all, it was urged that we should except from that general provision trade on the Great Lakes, and there is a substantial, well-founded reason for excluding the Great Lakes. Not at any time are vessels long distances away from land. The harbor is always near at hand, and there is not too much water at the mouths of rivers and in ports. Then there is the further reason that Canada does not require a load line on her vessels on the Great Lakes so that the imposition of a load line on our vessels in the Great Lakes would involve a discrimination against our vessels as compared with Canadian vessels, and so we exempted the Great Lakes, and I think for sound reasons. Then the question came up about barges.

There were interests which appeared before the committee and insisted that barges should be exempted from the operation of the law, pointing out that barges did not have motive power of their own, but were always towed by some vessel having motive power; that that vessel was always near at hand, ready to lend aid in case of distress; and that those vessels were of a type which calls for loading until the vessel sat deep into the water. Then came this question of the lumber schooner. It was urged by interests on the Pacific coast that the lumber schooner was very similar to the barge; that it carried a small crew; that it was loaded with lumber, which was in itself buoyant; and that there was no great need for the imposition of these requirements upon the lumber schooners. After a very warm discussion in our committee, and a very decided difference of opinion, the committee voted these two exceptions.

Speaking now for myself, I think the exception of the Great Lakes is logical; but I think there is no logic in excepting either lumber schooners or barges and applying the requirements of the load line law to the balance of our coastwise or domestic trade, and that logically we ought to include within this bill both the barges and the lumber schooners or we should exclude altogether the coastwise trade from the operation of the law. I express the opinion that the load line should apply to every type of vessel falling within the general description of the bill, other than vessels upon the Great Lakes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Do I understand that the gentleman will support any modification of the bill as it was reported from the committee?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. I have answered the question as to what my individual view is. I will not support an amendment that modifies the terms of the bill, because I conceive that as chairman of the committee it is my obligation to defend as best I may the action of the committee, and I am going to stand for this bill in the form in which my committee voted it out. I do that as chairman of the committee and as a servant of the committee, submerging my own individual views.

Mr. LEHLBACH. And as the gentleman has stated, and is the fact, this bill was reported out unanimously as a compromise, in which almost every member of the committee yielded his opinion on certain particulars.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is true.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman who is in charge of the bill and will nominally support the bill in its entirety is inviting amendments to it, I wonder how far the rest of us are bound to support the bill as it is?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I grant the force of the gentleman's criticism, and of course that is what it is, but I do not retract what I said. I am going to support this committee bill. I realize that to speak individually while I am at the same time speaking as chairman of the committee is perhaps an unwise thing to do.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it not a fact that Congress has had before it for about 10 years the question of passing load-line legislation for the safety of the ships and lives of the passengers and the crews on those vessels at sea, that the United States vessels have been practically the only ones of any seafaring nation in the world that have not had the load line, and that our vessels have been subjected in the ports of foreign countries to compliance with load-line provisions of other countries and then only by sufferance, and subject otherwise to penalties, and so forth, which have militated against our shipping, and is it not a fact that in order to get some legislation at this session of Congress every member of the committee submerged some of his views in order to get the bill reported out?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is true.

Mr. BRIGGS. And I am standing by the committee.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. May I say one more word in response to the remarks made by the gentleman from New Jersey? His criticism may be sound, yet I was not inviting amendments. I knew they were coming.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. If the gentleman will yield, if it is wise to make exception of vessels that come from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland into ports of the United States on the Atlantic coast, why not make some exception on lumber schooners coming from ports in the gentleman's own State and other ports in the United States?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. The bill as it is now written does except from the operation of the load line law vessels moving from my State to Canadian points.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It does not indicate outside of Canadian points and not vessels from the ports in the gentleman's own State to ports in other States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman from New Jersey use some of his time?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, on page 9, line 9, you will find section 9, an amendment by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to the Senate bill. It reads as follows:

SEC. 9. This act shall not apply to vessels operating exclusively on the Great Lakes or to barges otherwise coming within the provisions of this act or to lumber schooners operating to and from territory contiguous to the United States.

That is a strange thing. Can you imagine a lumber schooner being required to have a load line, load at Grays Harbor to San Francisco or San Pedro, when that same schooner could have no load line if loaded for any ports in Mexico? The whole of it goes to contiguous territory.

Mr. MICHENER. Is not the real purpose of that exemption to permit your lumber vessels to compete with the Canadian lumber vessels?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I presume the great bulk of the lumber schooner's cargo goes to California points.

Mr. MICHENER. Is not that the real point to it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think only in part. But these lumber schooners are lumber schooners. One week they load for San Francisco and the next week they load for a port in Mexico or load for Panama, and it strikes me there is somewhat of an incongruity here.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. NEWTON. If Canada requires a load line on commerce on the ocean, then this would give the American ships an advantage in that kind of trade to and from Canada.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will try and inform myself. I am not informed at present. Now, in reference to these lumber schooners, they have what is known as the Grays Harbor type of schooner, quite a large number of a scooped-out type. When they load this lumber they are not dangerous and the crews are not in danger. The captain and the crew's quarters are at one end. That is the kind of boat they use.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Is Grays Harbor in the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. It is in the southwestern part of the State of Washington, on the ocean.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understood the gentleman to say that if you had a vessel going out of Grays Harbor to a California point you would have to have a load line?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does not this exempt such a vessel?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This does not apply to the lumber schooners that operate to and from territory contiguous to the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It applies to coastwise schooners and not to vessels going to contiguous countries.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If it goes to a port in the United States it must have a load line, but if it goes to the Mexican coast it requires no load line?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. This is confined to lumber schooners?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, we have only one other speaker.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, this bill was reported to the House by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries without having behind it the complete satisfaction of any member of the committee that I know of. It is essentially a bill of compromise in order to secure a report.

Now, the situation leading to this legislation at this time and making it emergency legislation is this: That all maritime countries, with the exception of the United States, have a load line, and they have load-line legislation, just as is contained in this bill. Such legislation provides that any ship that enters or clears the ports of a nation having a load line must have that nation's load line and comply with the regulation applicable thereto, or else it can be detained, fined, subjected to penalty, and refused clearance until after a survey, and thereupon the affixing of that nation's load line; unless the country under whose registry the visiting ship sails has load-line legislation approved by maritime circles and the ship has complied with its provisions. In that case the load line of the ship's country is accepted.

That is true of Great Britain, and of Germany, and of France, and of the Netherlands, and of Belgium, and of all the Scandinavian countries. It is true of every civilized maritime country except the United States.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. How is it applied in Canada?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I do not know, except that the Canadians do not apply load-line regulations to ships on the Great Lakes. I do not know for certain whether they apply it on the coast or not. But I understand that all the dominions follow the load-line legislation of Great Britain throughout the British Empire.

We have in the past year or so become more and more engaged in trade wars and in keen competition for commerce with various nations, chiefly Great Britain. We have attempted to undersell and overbid in accommodations their line, recently established, sailing between New York and Habana, Cuba. We have gone out of the North Atlantic conference and started to a certain extent a rate war with our Government-operated vessels against Great Britain and the Netherlands. We are increasing this kind of competition and engendering the bitterness that inevitably flows from it.

Now heretofore these maritime nations with load-line legislation have as a matter of courtesy made exceptions of the ships of the United States on the plea that Congress would shortly enact load-line legislation for the ships flying the American flag. Now rumblings and grumblings and pointed inquiries from foreign nations with whom we are entering into this acrimonious competition are heard, "When are you going to get a load line?" and "How long must we be expected to act on promises?"

We are in a position where at any time any or all of these nations can outlaw our ships and cause disaster unimaginable to the American merchant marine. The State Department, through its foreign representatives and as a result of its study of the situation in this country, has urged both the House and Senate immediately to pass load-line legislation applicable to ships in foreign commerce, or, as it is expressed in the Senate bill, ships which are engaged in foreign voyages by sea. The Senate took up this matter and passed a load line bill applying exclusively to ships in foreign trade in order to meet the emergency which exists at the present time, and to avert the possible danger that might result if such legislation were not speedily passed. The request of the State Department has been seconded by the United States Shipping Board, which has become fearful of the penalties and harassment that might result from the absence of load-line legislation in foreign commerce. The Senate passed a bill providing for load-line legislation and applied it exclusively to vessels in foreign commerce, because that is where the emergency lies. When that bill was passed in the Senate without providing for coastwise or intercoastal load commerce, which is exclusively engaged in by ships of American registry, those engaged in various kinds of coastwise trade were lulled to sleep as well as various interests which indirectly are entitled to a say with respect to load-line legislation as applied to the coastwise trade. There were no hearings advertised on the subject of coastwise load-line legislation, but hearings were called on a Senate bill that exclusively applied to foreign-going vessels.

The American Steamship Owners Association, of which some are in the foreign trade, where the load line would necessarily be applicable, and a greater number engaged in the coastwise trade, were perfectly willing to accept coastwise load line legislation in order to eliminate the competition they were laboring under as furnished by barges and lumber schooners, which carry cargoes of either lumber or coal.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman kindly tell us to what extent our failure to provide load lines on our vessels has interfered with or hampered our commerce?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I just said that our commerce in the foreign ports of the world is at the sufferance and through the courtesy of the nations whose ports we visit, and they can stop it any day they feel like doing so. They have not stopped us as yet, but they are hinting that they will stop us unless we stop competing with them.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BLAND. As early as 1909 Great Britain was calling on this country to adopt a load line law, was it not?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; and if we do not adopt it at this session I will not answer for our merchant marine in the foreign trade. So it seems to me it is necessary to pass this measure at once.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. How does that apply to a coastwise vessel?

Mr. LEHLBACH. It does not apply at all. A law that will protect our commerce against the application of foreign load-line legislation does not have anything to do with the coastwise trade at all, because no vessel can ply in that trade unless it is under American registry. The Senate passed a bill to meet this emergency. It did not go into the ramifications of coastwise load-line legislation at all. The House committee insisted on doing it, although the committee knew it was endangering the passage of the legislation at this session when they did so. Not having heard from the coastwise people and not having had an opportunity to give them an informative hearing, the committee included the coastwise trade and then began butchering the provision, taking out the Great Lakes, the barges, and then the lumber schooners that ply from Seattle to Canada but not from Seattle to San Francisco, a most illogical proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I think those of us who are doubtful about the bill concede everything the gentleman has said except with respect to the question of the coastwise trade.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why on earth are we legislating about the coastwise trade when there is no present emergency with respect to that at all? [Applause.]

Mr. BACON. Why should we not pass the bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why, that is the sensible thing to do. Restore the word "foreign" in line 8, on page 1, and you have the Senate bill. The other amendments do not amount to much anyhow.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, will the gentleman offer a motion to amend the bill in that way?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am in the same position, exactly, as the chairman of my committee. We are supposed to be committed to the bill as reported, but if he knocks portions of the bill that I want in, I am going to knock portions of the bill that he wants in. [Laughter.]

I think the sensible thing to do is to take the Senate bill and vote down every committee amendment and pass it. Then it will go to the President and our merchant marine will be safe. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRIGGS].

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the opportunity you have for passing some load-line legislation this year is better than it has ever been since my service in the Congress.

The Senate bill deals with the foreign trade only. Up until this year the coastwise trade has been very resistant against inclusion in any such legislation; but the president of the American Steamship Owners Association came before our committee this year voluntarily and asked that the coastwise and intracoastal services be included in the load-line legislation. He took occasion to state that the steamship association represented 52 steamship companies, including ships aggregating 3,780,000 tons and 655 vessels. He then went on and gave us the following long list of steamship companies, tonnages and ships embraced in the American Steamship Owners Association:

Mr. WALKER. H. B. Walker, president American Steamship Owners Association, representing 52 steamship companies, a list of which I will file with the secretary, 3,780,564 gross tons, and 655 vessels.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Are any of those in the coastwise trade?

Mr. WALKER. Some coastwise, some intercoastal, and others in the interforeign trade.

The list above referred to is as follows:

LIST OF MEMBER COMPANIES OF THE AMERICAN STEAMSHIP OWNERS ASSOCIATION
